It is shocking to read that the message from Colonel Lindbergh to President Roosevelt asking for justice in the air-mail affair is to be dishonored and belittled by public officials in the service of the Nation. Colonel Lindbergh is this generation's symbol of honor, valor, achievement, and dignity. He has consistently acted in accord with this ideal. It is a serious act to belittle or rob our youth of its hero, whom every boy in the land longs to emulate in character as well as achievement.

Surely our gallant President Franklin Roosevelt, who numbers among his ancestors Ann Hutchinson, heroine of pioneer days, will give publicity to the truth of the matter, and no way to do this would be better than Colonel Lindbergh's personal statement, which will be believed by the Nation. The President will do well to accept the truth correctly presented to him and to the Nation by Colonel Lindbergh.

NO CAT'S-PAW

Col. Charles Lindbergh persists in his refusal to accept Secretary Dern's invitation to serve on a committee of noted aviators to investigate the Army's flying of the air mail. He gives as his reason his belief that the sudden transfer of the mail was unfair to both the commercial companies and the Army pilots.

Supporters of the administration in this affair said that Lindbergh was used as a cat's-paw by the commercial companies. Perhaps he feels that the Dern invitation was an attempt to use him as a cat's-paw for the President and the Postmaster General.

The handling of the air-mail contracts was a blunder. It was inconsistent to cancel them without canceling the ocean-mail contracts. It was unfair to make no distinction between the companies. It was foolish for the secretary of a President, who prides himself on ignoring formalities, to argue that Lindbergh should have submitted his protest to the White House before making it public. It was disastrous to turn the mail over to the Army pilots in the wintertime and when they had neither the training nor the equipment for flying the mail.

This gesture was the first unpopular thing that the President has done. It was unpopular when he first made it and became more so after the death of 10 Army pilots. The administration is obviously trying hard to get out of the mess with as little blame as possible. The appointment of a committee to investigate the Army Air Corps would make it seem that the fault lies with the Army instead of with the order assigning its pilots to a type of flying for which neither they nor the military aviators of any other nation are prepared.

Of course, a committee composed of Lindbergh, Chamberlain, and some other famous fliers might eventually bring in a report that the blame lay with the administration rather than the Army. But while they were making their survey the mail could be returned to the private companies and the public would have time to become less critical of the blunder.

However, Lindbergh has refused the invitation. Meanwhile, he has agreed to testify before the Senate Post Office Committee in its hearings on permanent air-mail legislation. In this capacity he can be useful without condoning the mistake which was made in the abrupt and inclusive cancelation of the air-mail contracts which, though they should have been reopened, could have been rewritten or reawarded without loss of life and disruption of postal service.

WRECKING THE AIR MAIL

Beginning next Monday, instead of privately owned mail planes serving 27,079 miles of air routes, Army planes will attempt to carry mail over 11,106 miles, reducing the Air Mail Service by 60 percent, throwing scores of men out of employment, probably bankrupting several firms whose stock is held by several thousand individuals, and demoralizing a commercial aviation which no less an authority than Col. Charles A. Lindbergh declared is the best in the world.

The reason given for the drastic order which, with only a week's notice, canceled all the air-mail contracts, is that evidence was discovered of collusion and fraud in the letting of those contracts.

The country does not know what that evidence was. It was not brought out by any court procedure, but seems to have been wholly the result of investigations carried on at Washington by a Senate committee, and possibly by the Post Office Department. Apparently, also, the companies against whom action was taken were not given a hearing. At any rate the president of the Transcontinental & Western Airways declares his company was given no opportunity to appear, and he offers to continue to carry the mails for a month with the understanding that unless he can completely prove his company's innocence, he will make no charge for that service—clearly implying that he has had no opportunity up to this time to make a defense. Colonel Lindbergh enters his most emphatic protest, also insisting that the Government's drastic action was unfair and unjust. The people of this country have a lot of confidence in Charles A. Lindbergh, and they think what he says about anything relating to aviation is entitled to careful consideration, even of the President. And then there is Will Rogers, unswerving partisan of the administration as he is, making his protest over the air and through the newspapers.

Of course nobody wants the Government to be fleeced through mail contracts, particularly if they were obtained by collusion and fraud. But remembering the orgy of spending that is now upon us as a part of the deliberate program of this administration one cannot help wondering if the waste of public money through extravagant mail contracts is really what is motivating the present order, or whether the possibility of bringing discredit upon the administration under which the contracts were let may not have something to do with this sudden zeal for economy. Or may it not be possible that a desire to socialize the mail-carrying business by turning it over to Government planes may be in the back of somebody's mind?

In any event it certainly would seem that to correct any evil that may exist a better way might have been found than the demoralization of a great mail service to which the people have become accustomed and which they are using more and more, and the wrecking of a great and growing industry. The method the administration has taken is too much like burning the barn to get rid of the rats.

[From the News Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind., Mar. 17, 1934]

IT IS UP TO CONGRESS

We would not deny to Secretary of War Dern full credit for his efforts to make the best of a difficult situation. There is very evident sincerity in his undertaking to guard against future airplane accidents by organizing a committee of aeronautic experts to advise the Army with regard to transportation of the air mail.

The administration is properly concerned for the safety of Air Corps pilots, thereby manifesting a welcome change of attitude to coincide with the attitude long taken by the rank and file of the American people generally.

Still, it is the conviction of many well-versed authorities on the subject that the prospective investigation under the War Department's auspices will not produce any satisfactory results so far as the reestablishment of a sound, permanent, and equitable air-mail system is concerned.

There is, at present, very substantial agreement that the controversy cannot be well settled until private operators are once more carrying the mail. Indeed, this view was taken by the administration itself when it submitted to Congress a bill providing that contracts should once more be awarded on the basis of competitive bidding.

But even if that measure shall become law, it may be many months—it may be a year—before there can be a return to real efficiency in the operation of the air-mail system.

This bill, drafted before President Roosevelt temporarily grounded all mail planes and postal officials worked out a plan for curtailed operations to avoid unnecessary hazards, does not meet the readily obvious emergency now challenging the country.

Postmaster General Farley has not kept pace with Secretary of War Dern in moving to deal with the problem which developed when Mr. Farley voluntarily consigned the air-mail system to a bewildering bog.

Over the last decade the Government has developed at great cost a vast network of airlines. That network is rapidly falling apart, with the result that the public can no longer have reliance upon expeditious transportation of mails by plane. Passage of the administration's bill now under consideration would initiate another era of pioneering to develop an efficient air-transport system. We should be simply starting all over.

This is seen to be especially true in view of the provisions designed to prevent future bidding by any company which makes claims, however well founded, against the Government as a result of Mr. Farley's sweeping ukase of cancelation.

Yet, in spite of this discouraging outlook, Mr. Farley has not, as these lines are written, advanced any constructive plan to save the air-mail system from collapse. And so, we should say it is up to Congress to resolve to get along without the Postmaster General's assistance.

[From the Washington Post, Washington, D.C., Mar. 18, 1934]

A FUNDAMENTAL ISSUE

Testimony before the Senate Post Office Committee, which is studying the administration's new air mail bill, strongly confirms the general public opinion that cancelation of the air-mail contracts was arbitrary and unreasonable. Senators have tried in vain to confine the testimony to provisions of the bill. But the more fundamental question is thrust forward by every witness: Why did the administration strike a vicious blow at the aviation industry without revealing conclusive evidence of illegal conduct on the part of the air-mail carriers?

Administration leaders on Capitol Hill take the attitude that the past is a closed book; that the question now before Congress is the enactment of a new law that will reestablish an air-mail system. But Congress cannot pass legislation that will rectify this blunder so long as the unproved charges of fraud and collusion against the former carriers merely float about in the confused atmosphere where Postmaster General Farley left them. Colonel Lindbergh is unquestionably right when he says:

"This bill leaves untouched the most fundamental question involved, and that is whether the lines whose contracts were canceled were entitled to a fair trial before they are convicted."

Until the status of these companies is determined it will be impossible to legislate intelligently upon the subject.

It is significant that most of the witnesses have advocated transfer of jurisdiction over the air mail away from the Post Office Department. Some favor a separate regulatory body and others are willing to have the Interstate Commerce Commission pass upon questions of public convenience and necessity. There appears to be a general and certainly not unnatural distrust of the Post Office Department, where politics are in the saddle.

LINDY MERITS PRAISE

Well done, Lindy!

This is the country's verdict on Colonel Lindbergh's voluntary appearance before the Senate Post Office Committee and on his lucid, straightforward, and manly replies to the questions addressed to him.

It was a Lindbergh day.

The largest room in the Senate Office Building was chosen for the hearing, as it was safely assumed that the appearance of America's super ace, the foremost flier in the world, would stir great public interest.

His inquisitors were Senate politicians who are trying to pull the administration out of a bad hole. Like politicians, these Senators feel that the best way out of a blunder is never to admit it. Realizing that the civil aviation companies have been condemned without a hearing, the administration Senators are trying to make it appear that the companies were not entitled to a hearing.

They are trying to build the uncorrected injustice of such treatment into disabling conditions affecting the established companies as bidders under the new contracts, proposed in substitution for the old, which were canceled without inquiry, examination, or trial.

An American of the Lindbergh type naturally will not be a party to such a scheme.

"I feel that these charges", said he, "should have been definitely established before these contracts were canceled. I feel it was the right of my companies, the public, and my own right to have them definitely established.

"I say this only in the interest of what I most deeply believe to be right."

These words express the opinion of every right-thinking American. What else could be the opinion of a right-thinking man?

Referring to the provision of the proposed new legislation prohibiting operators whose contracts were thus unfairly annulled from bidding on new contracts unless they waived any claims against the Government, Colonel Lindbergh called it the most "unjust act ever placed into American legislation."

It is refreshing and invigorating when a man of such captivating type as Colonel Lindbergh, of so distinguished a record of valor and achievement, thus gives voice in ringing and forthright speech to the feelings of his countrymen.

STATEMENT OF PILOT HARLAN HULL, OF KANSAS CITY, MO., PRESIDENT OF THE T.W.A. PILOTS' ASSOCIATION, MADE ON BEHALF OF THE PILOTS AND EMPLOYEES OF TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC., BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS ON SENATE BILL S. 3012 TO REVISE AIR-MAIL LAWS, MARCH 19, 1934

Gentlemen, I appreciate this opportunity of appearing before your committee on behalf of the pilots and employees of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.

As a representative of the employees, I want first to give you a few facts concerning the general distribution of jobs in an air line.

In December of last year, T. & W. A.'s total pay roll amounted to $125,803, and was distributed among 718 individuals. Only two of the officers of the company received higher salaries than those of us who are pilots.

Sixty-seven employees were in the administrative or financial departments of the company.

The traffic department employed 58 men and women.

Supervisory, clerical, and like ground tasks occupied 86 members of the operations department. Ninety-four of us were pilots or copilots.

The communications department employed 76 individuals while 19 were engaged in meteorological tasks. Finally, 307 people were employed as supervisors and mechanics in the maintenance department.

I have mentioned only the distribution of jobs of T. & W. A.'s personnel and should like to add that there were more than 5,000 other employees in the air transportation business at the time when our companies' contracts were canceled.

I might also say that the 6,000 individuals employed by the air-mail contractors represent the only thoroughly trained group of air-transport employees in this country.

Having given you the general set-up as to T.W.A.'s personnel—and the other companies are roughly the same—I want, at this point, to explain to you what any legislation which would destroy our present companies would mean to us.

It means, obviously, a total disruption of our lives at this point. That disruption comes at a time when the country is still suffering from plenty of unrest and apprehension without the need of adding more to what already exists.

It comes at a time when we were all feeling confidence and hope for the future—feeling that way because of the phenomenal mechanical advances that have recently been accomplished in our business and because of the greatly increased public patronage which we were enjoying until operations were curtailed by the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

It means that all of us will be faced with the necessity of finding new jobs. The morale and esprit de corps that now exist in all our organizations—and are responsible in no small degree for our operating efficiency—will be completely scrapped.

Some of the present air transport employees will, of course, find new jobs with new companies, but they will be faced with the necessity of starting all over again, proving themselves to new employers and carving new niches for themselves in the new organizations.

At best we shall probably be retarded in our business development by at least 2 years. That comes at a time in our lives—our average age is about 30—when we have a right to expect steadiness.

Some, maybe many, of our members will be faced with the necessity of turning to new lines of business.

Finally, specifically for pilots, I want to point out that one of the most important possessions of a pilot is his seniority or record with his employer.

This is determined by his length of service, his record for completed schedules, and his hours in the air without mishap or damage, by his loyalty, general demeanor, intelligence, and consummate background. It is comparable to the prestige obtained by a doctor or lawyer through long years of practice in his profession.

Under the terms of this bill, it would be possible for all of the 614 scheduled air transport pilots in the country to lose their seniority, the thing they have spent the greater part of their adult life in building up, and be compelled to start all over again from scratch.

I take it that this is not the intent of the legislation, but it is nevertheless very likely to be the result.

I feel that any legislation which would tend to destroy those organizations which, until February 19, made up the greatest air transport system in the world, would cause untold hardship on 6,000 of us who have given and are giving the best years of our lives to the air transportation business.

If there are any individuals against whom illegal acts can be proven by fair trial, we want to see justice done. However, we cannot believe that the committee could wish to see 6,000 of us suffer for the acts of a very few individuals.

I have spoken of the probable general results on the personnel of any legislation which might destroy our present organizations. I should like to tell you a little of how we shall be affected in the actual performance of our jobs.

Competitive bidding—especially for short lines—will really mean cutthroat bidding. Air lines can be and have been operated at per-mile costs lower than Transcontinental & Western Air's costs. However, I have seen those low-cost operations, and that is just why I am opposed to any legislation which will encourage them.

Pilots' pay under low-cost operations is usually about half the salaries paid by our organizations. However, our salaries have been approved by many authorities as commensurate with our jobs.

We would be forced into flying with passengers at night, over bad terrain, with single-motored equipment.

We would not have terminal facilities of our own where we could be comfortable ourselves and be certain of the maintenance of our ships. Instead we would be using public facilities. The maintenance of our ships would undoubtedly be done by outside organizations rather than by an organization of which we were a part.

We would probably be forced to forego the many advantages of two-way radio.

We would be forced to fly with the least possible number of instruments and safety devices.

The organizations that would be set up would not be financially able to foster experimental work. Thus we would have no chance to put our experience to use in developing new equipment, as we have in the case of T.W.A.'s new Douglas.

We would not have the security in flying in bad weather that we now have through the knowledge that our own meteorological staff is constantly checking and studying the weather for us.

In short, unrestricted competitive bidding will mean low-cost operations, and low-cost operations will mean that we shall have to work under the conditions I have just outlined. Such conditions would not make for sure and efficient operations.

We think that the main-line transcontinental routes should be let as one route and to one contractor. Our reasons for this are:

Due to weather conditions, it would be impossible to fly efficiently and safely a very high percentage of completed schedules, because the type of equipment that would be furnished would have a cruising range comparable with the length of the route.

This would force pilots to land at stations where weather conditions of low ceilings and poor visibility existed.

Most fatal airplane crashes occur when pilots are attempting to get in or out of stations where bad weather exists. Only a very few accidents occur on an air line when the pilot is not forced to come in close contact to the ground in bad weather.

On the other hand, if a pilot had an airplane of a high cruising range, he would be able to pass up the station where bad weather existed and fly farther along the line to a station where clear weather or ample ceiling existed. In this way the bulk of the mail would be kept moving in a way that would be far more efficient and safe.

On this same subject, I might say that it is very seldom that a storm track cannot be crossed in a thousand miles and in most cases far less. The best aid a pilot can have in flying bad weather is an airplane that has a high altitude performance and a long cruising range that will enable him to fly over, around, or through storm areas at high altitudes. Every development in the last few years has been toward this ultimate goal. If the routes are chopped up into short jumps, all of this effort will be wasted and further development along this line will be retarded.

This is further borne out by the fact that the performance of the short feeder lines into the main lines has not been nearly so good during the last 2 years as along the main lines where equipment is in use that enables us to pass up stations with low ceilings.

We now have airplanes developed that will enable us to fly 1,500 miles without landing and still carry enough cargo to make them efficient from an operating standpoint. The speed and range of these airplanes will enable us to fly an overnight mail and passenger service from coast to coast.

As to breaking up the air-mail system into short lines, a clearer understanding may be had by comparing the time taken on T. & W. A.'s transcontinental run with the Douglas airplane with the train time from Washington, D.C., to Columbus, Ohio. The absurdity of having several railroads covering only a portion of that distance is obvious.

At least 1 hour is lost when a mail load is landed and transferred from one company's plane to another.

At least half an hour is lost when a mail plane lands, as that much time is taken up in circling the airport, taxiing to the station, as well as through the reduced speed an airplane has in climbing back to a favorable flying level.

In passing, I should like to state that a pilot's major interest is in the airplane that he flies.

In reference to section 11 of Senate bill S. 3012, it is our recommendation that the rates of pay for pilots and maximum flying hours be subject to arbitration by whatever Federal regulatory board is empowered to govern the air-mail contractors.

In reference to section 13, we do not think it is advisable from a practical standpoint to place pilots of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the air lines as copilots.

The only way of developing airline pilots is in training them ourselves.

It takes about 2 years flying as a copilot for the average pilot employed to make a first-line pilot.

It also takes several months to develop a good copilot. A copilot's duties are many and varied—all the way from a bookkeeper to a diplomat in handling the traveling public. The traveling public comes in contact with the flying personnel more than with anyone else.

We think it would be more advisable for the military services to place some observers on the air lines to become familiar with our methods and conduct the specialized training within their own branches.

With reference to section 15, we suggest all air-line pilots be given commissions in either the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps Reserves and approve the provision in this bill that gives them the opportunity for 2 weeks' military training each year.

In conclusion, it is, therefore, our recommendation that as a termporary measure the assignment of carrying the air mail be restored to the original operators as of February 19, 1934, for the balance of the current fiscal year. It is suggested that this be done, applying a rate of 40 cents per mile or if greater economy demands it, at the postage return rate, calculated by the House and Senate Post Office Committees, to be 2 mills per pound-mile. This would restore immediately order in the industry and return many hundreds to work, who have been furloughed, as a result of the cancelations. Then sufficient time would be available to consider and enact permanent legislation.

"YES, MR. PRESIDENT"

By David Lawrence

INADEQUATE DEBATE ON MAJOR POLICIES INSIDE ADMINISTRATION SHOWN IN AIR-MAIL DECISION

One day last month, the President of the United States, surrounded by a group of his Cabinet officers and advisers, decided to approve the cancelation of all air-mail contracts. The President asked if the Army could carry the mails. Somebody answered "Yes, Mr. President."

Today we mourn the loss of 10 Army flyers killed in line of duty.

Today the Air Mail Service, which took 16 years to build, has been disrupted.

The few millions of dollars alleged to have fraudulently enriched the pockets of air-mail speculators would, if they could be recovered, never offset the loss of life. For human rights supersede property rights.

Who then killed the 10 Army flyers. Bureaucracy and sycophancy at its worst.

Even a smattering knowledge of commercial aviation and the air-mail problem was bound to have included information on the hazards of night flying and the fact that the Army was not trained to the task.

But more important is this question: What emergency required such an abrupt cancelation and the issuance of orders to the Army to take up the air-mail task in midwinter, without preparation?

Why could not the Army have been ordered to take over the job in 60 or 90 days? At least milder weather would then have been encountered and there would have been opportunity to enlist the services of trained pilots.

Several of the commercial companies offered to lend their pilots to the Army. Why were not such offers accepted?

The Post Office appropriation law provided that before any cancelation of a contract, the interested parties could be given a hearing. Why was not such a hearing granted?

COSTLY LESSON FOUND IN AIR-MAIL EPISODE

The air-mail episode marks the worst administrative blunder we have seen in a decade. The public is today deprived of efficient service. The courts and grand juries have not yet been given evidence of "collusion and fraud." Why the delay?

Government officials called upon to advise the President should hereafter take time to investigate the facts before they recommend a course of action. The protection of the President against mistakes, the future of his whole administration whose success is so universally desired from one end of the country to the other, depends on whether when summoned to the White House the advisers of the Chief Executive speak their minds or suppress their convictions with a mistaken concept of harmony.

It should be "Yes, Mr. President" only when dissent has been expressed and overruled, and when the entire Cabinet has been given an opportunity to formulate administration policy.

[Editorial from the Indianapolis Star, Mar. 22, 1934]

FARLEY'S AIR-MAIL DEFENSE

Chairman Farley, of the Democratic National Committee, sounded a discordant note for the coming congressional campaign when he elected to discuss the air-mail issue at a Delaware political rally. He was speaking at a Jackson Day dinner at Wilmington. The abrupt cancelation of air-mail contracts and the imposition of a task on the Army flying corps, for which it was untrained and poorly equipped, have been recognized as a blunder. Farley himself must bear the responsibility for that error. He may have been ill-advised, but, as Postmaster General, he gave the word that resulted in the unfortunate Presidential decree.

The Democratic chairman asserted that the air-mail contracts "were given and obtained through collusion and fraud." He added that a few favored companies had obtained many millions of dollars to build up monopolies through a Government subsidy. Farley may continue to bluster about collusion and fraud, but those charges have not been proved, although administration politicians made every effort to discredit the former regime through protestations of irregular practices. The chairman should give the public some basis for the charges which he continues to hurl at concerns that were doing a most efficient job of carrying the mail.

No one denies that the cost was high, perhaps greater than conditions now justify. Government subsidies are usually expensive. The mail contracts were awarded to responsible companies, leaders in aviation developments. Much of the criticism has come from firms denied contracts because they seemed to lack the required stability. The wisdom of creating an adequate reserve flying corps for national defense was not ignored in the Government's subsidy to aviation corporations. The country welcomes any reduction in operating costs if that can be achieved without loss of efficiency, but it has little patience with Mr. Farley's preferring unproved charges in an effort to excuse a serious blunder.

[Editorial from the News-Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind., Mar. 23, 1934]

Mr. Farley's failure to substantiate charges that all the domestic air-mail contracts were rendered illegal by fraud and collusion would seem to disqualify him from further administration of the air-mail system. We trust the President is not losing sight of the fact that he is committed to a policy of candid recognition of mistakes and prompt action to remedy them. If the Government has been defrauded, then most assuredly every guilty individual or corporation should be punished in accordance with the law. But all such charges should by all means first be proved in accordance with American tradition.

[Article from New York Herald Tribune, Mar. 23, 1934]

"FORGOTTEN MAN" IN AIR CASE

To the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

Will Rogers, with his keen insight and sound philosophy, remarked early in the discussion of the mail contracts that "if some of the railroad officers were in the wrong all the railroads would not be stopped."

The "forgotten man" in this case seems to be the stockholders of the aircraft companies and the public. The promised revelation of crookedness in the air-mail contracts has not been revealed; but suppose it had, would that excuse the injury to the stockholders and the depriving of the public of the service? I own no aircraft stock, but I believe that none of the companies even with the mail contracts have yet made any profit on their service and were looking to the future to make returns on their large investment. Is Mr. Farley to be allowed to play politics with a great industry and wreck it in the process?

We have a fearless President and we have faith to believe that he will yet do what may be done to right a serious wrong before worse chaos results.

WALTER L. CLARK.

[Editorial from the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Mar. 24, 1934]

NOT WAITING FOR CONGRESS

Administration circles are apparently fully aware of the fact that the present air-mail set-up is utterly inadequate, representing not more than 25 percent of the service available prior to February 9.

When President Roosevelt was moved to take corrective action following a succession of deaths in the Army Air Corps, he emphasized two things: First, that the military pilots should not be exposed to needless risks, and, second, that Congress should act quickly to restore the service to commercial lines.

The Army has obeyed the order of its Commander in Chief. All planes were grounded for 10 days, a number of routes, including those passing through Pittsburgh, were abandoned, and when service was resumed strict instructions were given that flyers should not be permitted to start on a trip unless weather conditions were favorable with a reported ceiling of 3,000 feet.

But Congress has not moved so quickly. Committees in both House and Senate opened hearings, which have brought forth considerable information of value. The bill drawn and sponsored by the Post Office Department has been under severe attack and will unquestionably be changed materially. It is possible that it may be definitely sidetracked in favor of an entirely new basis of recompense for the commercial lines, as proposed in a bill offered by Senator O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, a Democrat, and until recently an Assistant Postmaster General.

Congress will undoubtedly reach a decision at this session, but there may be further delays of a week, or a month, or even longer. In the meantime the air mail is but a shadow of its former self. It is very much like any other transportation service in that its schedules must be fast, frequent, and dependable to build up volume. Many individuals and business concerns who used it regularly and paid the extra premium gladly have stopped doing so now because its time advantage over regular mail has been rendered so uncertain.

Following a White House conference Thursday, Attorney General Cummings indicated that a plan might be developed for restoring the service to private carriers on a temporary basis without waiting for Congress to act. This might not leave Postmaster General Farley in a particularly happy position, but it should be done. The country needs the service, and it would put back to work thousands of employees of the commercial lines. A permanent policy could follow, and if the Post Office Department believes it has any real evidence of collusion or fraud, it can prosecute those involved in the courts.

STATEMENT OF RICHARD W. ROBBINS, PRESIDENT OF TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC.

The latest McKellar-Black bill designed to revise the air-mail laws completely disregards the mass of evidence presented in the last 10 days by a score of experts, including Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, against the former bill introduced by the same Senators, and clearly indicates by the revengeful spirit in which it is drawn that these sponsors will go to any length to complete the wrecking of an industry which they have so well started on its way to complete disintegration and collapse.

Not since the days of the Civil War when, after 4 years of bitter strife hatreds still flamed to white heat on slight provocation, has the Nation seen such a display of partisan envy and jealousy on the part of those in power in their desire to pass vindictive legislation such as is embodied in the McKellar-Black air mail bill.

The sponsors of this latest bill are either woefully ignorant of the most elementary principles of justice and rights guaranteed our citizens, as expressed in the Constitution of the United States, or else are determined to ignore the Constitution completely in their efforts to throw a smoke screen over the air-mail cancelation bungle. Instead of rewriting their proposed legislation to meet the severe criticisms of every witness other than Government officials this redraft is even more vindictive and punitive than the original measure. The only provision which has been eliminated in the revised bill is the clause preventing an air-mail contractor from bidding on a new contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General. This provision was so obviously unconstitutional to every Member of Congress that its passage was impossible.

It is purely an extension of the effort so clearly apparent in the original bill to disrupt an essential transportation service that had attained a notable success and was performing a necessary and important function for the American people in expediting the rapid transportation of passengers, air mail, and merchandise. Instead of fostering and encouraging commercial aviation the present policy seems to be to treat those who have put our commercial transport industry in the position of world leadership as though they were traitors to their country.

Before this country was settled the English Parliament frequently voted what were known as "bills of attainder" or of pains and penalties against people who were charged by the Crown with being traitors or who had lost favor with their monarchy. The sentiment against these practices had become so strong in the Colonies that the Constitution of the United States prohibited both the Congress and the State legislatures from passing bills of attainder. Following the close of the Civil War the Missouri State Legislature adopted an act prohibiting persons from voting who had ever been in armed hostility to the United States or to the lawful authorities thereof or to the government of the State of Missouri. This same statute provided that any person suffering from the disabilities indicated should never act as professor or teacher in any educational institution. In September 1865 the Reverend Mr. Cummings was indicted and convicted in the circuit court of Pike County, Mo., "of the crime of teaching and preaching in that month, as a priest and minister of that religious denomination, without having first taken the oath prescribed by the constitution of the State."

On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, Justice Field, delivering the opinion, reversed the finding of the supreme court of the State, holding that the law in question was in the nature of a bill of attainder. Justice Field defined a bill of attainder, as follows:

"A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial."

Without judicial trial, the framers of this air-mail legislation now write into this bill that no company shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if at the time of the bidding it has an officer who was a representative at or in any meeting held for the purpose of discussing the development of air-mail and air transportation situation in the United States following the passage of the McNary-Watres law in April 1930. That provision in the bill is intended to exclude from the air-transport industry the managerial experience which has been developed in this country over a period of years.

The fact is that a group of air-line operating officials accepted an invitation extended by the former Postmaster General to attend a meeting in Washington to discuss the provisions of the Watres Act. The Postmaster General invited a study of the problems created by the new law and the making of a report to give the Postmaster General the benefit of the operators' ideas as to how the Air Mail Service could best be furnished to a larger section of the population than had been served by air mail prior to 1930. The operators were not able to agree on any important phase of the report and the only agreement reached was that an opinion should be sought from Comptroller General McCarl as to the extent of the Postmaster General's powers, under the recently enacted legislation; that this was the only agreement reached is evidenced by the memoranda kept by the Post Office officials, which memoranda were attached to Mr. Farley's letter to Senator BLACK of February 14, 1934, and also to former Postmaster General Brown's statement in reply, dated the following day.

The air-line officials met in the Postmaster General's office by his invitation. The meeting was no different from meetings of like character which have been held from time to time with Post Office officials to discuss improvements in the Air Mail Service, and the development of air transportation in this country.

As recently as August 1933 representatives of the air-mail carriers were summoned to Washington by Assistant Postmaster General Howes and met with him and other Post Office officials of the present administration to discuss certain plans of the present administration with reference to the Air Mail Service.

Can any better method be found for the Post Office Department to advise the air-mail carriers as to policy and plans than by conference with the principal officials of the air lines affected? Is it a crime to confer with a Cabinet officer by his invitation?

An exclusion of these air-line officials from their profession for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment without trial for such conduct. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder.

There is only one solution to the present air-mail problem and that is to return the mail to the private carriers under temporary contracts, which are specifically provided for in existing Postal Statutes, and to give the parties charged with collusion a prompt hearing before a disinterested tribunal composed of men who have the complete confidence of the public. If the decision of such a tribunal is in favor of the contractors, the annulment order of February 9, 1934, should be rescinded.

STILL SEEKING A WAY OUT

Reports that the administration is still seeking a means whereby transportation of the air mail may be turned back to private companies within a few weeks indicate dissatisfaction with the revised McKellar bill. Some of the President's advisers, if not the President himself, are looking for a more expeditious way out of the air-mail controversy than this measure would provide. Their attitude stands out in contrast to that of congressional leaders who seem to regard the air transport business as a political football.

The most important change in the McKellar bill is that permitting the former carriers to prosecute their claims against the Government without waiving their right to bid again for air-mail contracts. After a prolonged controversy the former contractors have won the privilege of asserting constitutional rights, which never should have been questioned.

On the other hand, a definite attempt is made to penalize all representatives of air-transport companies who participated in the 1930 conferences with Postmaster General Brown. No company having an officer attending any of those meetings would be eligible to bid for a new contract. This gross discrimination, without any specific move to determine whether these company officials acted in any manner fraudulently, is akin to the previous effort to preclude petitions for redress. No bill which presumes that all of the former carriers are guilty of collusion, and fails to provide for proper adjudication of charges against them, can be considered satisfactory.

Moreover, this measure would not permit early restoration of the air-transport system as a private enterprise. A week ago it appeared that the President was so exercised over the loss of life in the Army Air Corps that some emergency steps might be taken to return this service to private companies. But the new bill would leave the status of the former carriers in a tangle, and would give new bidders 6 months to prepare for actual flying. Under this arrangement the curtailed service provided by the Army might continue for the next 8 or 9 months, or, if there should be another epidemic of fatalities, it might be stopped altogether. In either event continued disintegration of the air-transport business for a considerable period would be the probable result.

A DANGEROUS TREND

In Today and Tomorrow, Walter Lippmann writes of the Air Mail Fiasco. * * * The News would like for all its readers to digest carefully what Mr. Lippmann says in conclusion. It is for the purpose of doing justice to a man to whom the American people owe a great deal. Colonel Lindbergh has been severely criticized for speaking his mind on a subject about which he knows as much as any other man in the country and more than the great majority of us. He has been criticized for expressing his convictions because those convictions were contrary to those of the servant of all the people. He has been criticized for standing up for his own property rights, as if that were not the inalienable right of every man, as if none should ask equity save for another and should never ask it for himself. * * *

As Mr. Lippmann says, the public should be shocked at this performance and should have been shocked even had the man attacked been some other than Lindbergh, one with no special claim upon the gratitude of the Nation. And further:

"The notion that you must not answer a critic, but must discredit him, is bad medicine anywhere at any time in any cause, however noble and however righteous."

Yet it is a notion that is widely held and widely acted upon, especially by partisans. Ever since the President denounced as Tories those whose independence of judgment was such that they could not follow his college professors' monetary and currency vagaries, there has been a growing tendency to denounce critics rather than to answer them. Sprague, who criticized the gold-purchase plan, was called a foreigner, and it was intimated that his interests were with Great Britain rather than the United States. Others were accused of throwing dead cats. Every Member of Congress who dared vote his own convictions was denounced as a politician and sometimes as a traitor. All bankers were crooks. The stock exchange was a den of thieves. Newspapers fighting for the freedom of the press wanted to work children and do business in firetraps. Lindbergh was discourteous and looking out for his pocket. There has never been any real pretense of attempting to answer him to discredit what he said. The effort has been to discredit him.

The whole thing is bad medicine—the worst. It is shocking—and worse. It is dangerous—a menace to free government, to free speech, to the right to an opinion even. It is time for a reaction for reestablishment of the right of every man to have his own views and profess them, to criticize his Government as freely as he desires, subject only to the limitation that he give reason for his criticism and is to be removed from the scene by a full answer to his criticism, complete controversion of his arguments.

"BIG FOUR'S" LATEST BLUNDER IN AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

By James T. Williams, Jr.

It must be a welcome relief to President Roosevelt to get even a fortnight's respite from the company of those costly advisers who misled his administration into the tragic blunder that dates from the Postmaster General Farley edict of the 9th of last February. This was the edict in which the Postmaster General proclaimed his cancelation of all domestic air-mail contracts.

He canceled them without due process of law. He gave the holders of those contracts no chance to be heard in their defense. He condemned and convicted them and their companies and he punished not only these companies and their officials, but nearly a half million stockholders, without giving to the stockholders, the companies, or their officials that day in court which is the due of every citizen under the flag.

This edict of Mr. Farley appears to have been issued at the instigation of Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, and Senator BLACK, of Alabama. These two Senators are old-time enemies of American air transport.

They have been fighting for a long time to deprive it of that Federal aid without which it could not have become the eighth wonder of the world. For that is what it was until the edict of Mr. Farley shook the foundations of this magnificent American achievement.

THE "BIG FOUR"

But this edict of Mr. Farley, instigated as it appears to have been by Senators MCKELLAR and BLACK, was not issued until it had been approved by Attorney General Cummings.

This is why Senator McKellar, Senator Black, Postmaster General Farley and Attorney General Cummings are known today as the "big four" in the wrecking of the Federal air mail, the crippling of American air transport, and the paralyzing of the Army Air Corps.

Since that first edict was issued the administration has stumbled from one blunder into another in the twofold effort to save the political reputation of the "big four", among the President's advisers in this ill-starred adventure, and to revive the Federal air mail.

After canceling all domestic air-mail contracts without due process of law the "big four's" next step was to hatch the scheme of having the Army Air Corps fly the mail. This decision was arrived at without any consultation with the Secretary of War or any opportunity by the General Staff to study the problem.

After 11 officers of the Army Air Corps had been sent to an unnecessary death because they were ordered to fly the mail before they could familiarize themselves with the route or without being supplied with suitable planes and equipment.

TO BAR COMPANIES

The third step taken was to suspend the Federal air mail altogether in an effort to stop the slaughter in the skies and to improvise suitable equipment for the Army fliers to perform the nonmilitary mission of carrying the mail.

Senator MCKELLAR and Senator BLACK then led off with the fourth step by sponsoring legislation to restore the Federal air mail to private operation upon condition that the companies and officials blacklisted by the "big four" should be barred from bidding if they attempted to prove their innocence in any court of the allegations of fraud and collusion brought against them.

When an outraged public sentiment forced Senatorial protests against this tyrannical proposal there was another series of secret consultations in which the "big four" participated.

Now comes another edict from Postmaster General Farley, in which he undertakes to do by Executive order that which Senator MCKELLAR and Senator BLACK have shown their inability to do by legislation.

The latest Farley edict calls for new bids for temporary contracts to carry the mails but bars from bidding for these contracts the companies and officials whom Postmaster General Farley in his edict of last February condemned, convicted, and punished without a hearing.

Until President Roosevelt returns from his vacation the "big four" among his air-mail advisers will apparently be supreme in the skies unless Congress clips their wings. How long the Congress and the country will permit the power of the "big four's" misrule to go uncurbed only time will tell.

ANOTHER AIR-MAIL PLAN

Further administration attempts at face-saving in the air-mail blunder now take the form of an invitation by Postmaster General Farley to companies to bid for 3-month contracts under temporary legislation, and in face of a blacklist of individuals who have not even been accused of crime, except in vague, indirect fashion, much less convicted of it.

Since the unofficial list of names on the blacklist contains those of most of the prominent and experienced airplane company executives in the country, successful bidders for the contracts will have to divest themselves of their best men in what amounts to an extorted confession of guilt. Such a thing would be unheard of. If these men are guilty, why are they not prosecuted?

And why are the men alone held responsible, when in every case they were acting merely as representatives of their companies and what they did was the action of companies and not of individuals? And which men participated in the conference of their own free will and which were summoned by Postmaster General Brown, and what basis is there for a distinction?

The whole set-up is illogical, inconsistent, and merits the caustic comment of President Robbins, of Transcontinental & Western Air, that it constitutes the "eighth distinct and conflicting policy" of the Post Office Department in 6 weeks.

If the plan is not intended to disqualify the experienced and equipped companies in order to give plums to concerns favored by Postmaster General and Patronage Dispenser Farley and Senator BLACK, it has every appearance of being just that.

[Article from the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, Mar. 31, 1934]

AIR-MAIL CONFUSION

When it was announced that President Roosevelt intended to return air-mail operations to private carriers without waiting for Congress to act, satisfaction was widely expressed that the administration appeared ready to admit the mistake that had been made and move promptly to correct it. That may have been the Chief Executive's desire, but Postmaster Farley clings tenaciously to his own idea of how it should be done.

According to the regulations which he has announced, the principal companies would still be barred from the bidding. The fundamental weakness of the original cancelation order is stubbornly retained—the air-mail operators are condemned without a hearing or a chance to defend themselves. That the Postmaster General is not very sure of his legal grounds seems evident from his desire to forestall court action by arbitrarily refusing consideration to any company which sees fit to contest his rulings.

It was evident some days ago that Congress would not approve the Farley recommendations for arriving at a new basis of air-mail awards. The original McKellar-Black bill, representing the administration view, was scheduled for drastic revision, including elimination of Mr. Farley's pet clause to bar companies that appealed to the courts to determine their rights under the old contracts. The question has now been raised as to whether the Post Office Department hopes to put into effect by Executive order restrictive conditions which Congress would not authorize. Representative CLYDE KELLY, from this county, a recognized authority on postal legislation, brands the whole procedure as absolutely illegal.

Instead of clarifying the situation and returning it promptly to a normal basis, Mr. Farley seems to have succeeded only in adding to the confusion and uncertainty.

WILL ROGERS COMMENTS ON NUMEROUS CRISES PREVALENT THROUGHOUT THE LAND

Well all I know is just what I read in the papers and I tell you we have been scanning the papers mighty close here lately, for there has been what is known as a crisis a-hanging over our heads. Course not any one just great big crisis, but a lot of little crisises that all added together would build up into what might be called a good garden-sized crisis.

Take the air mail. That fits right snugly into its little niche in the crisis cloud. They keep saying they got a lot on all these various companies, but they haven't told as much of it to the people as they ought to. I can accuse you and it makes awful big headlines, but if you don't start getting up in front of a bona fide judge and start delivering some testimony why the general public is going to lose some of its hilarity for my charges.

[Editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer, Apr. 2, 1934]

THE PRESIDENT GETS HIS MAIL

An airplane flies out to sea from Miami, drops a bag of mail on the deck of Vincent Astor's yacht and hurries right back to Miami. Thus President Roosevelt, on a fishing expedition, gets his mail practically on time.

It is a comfort to know that somebody gets his mail on time. Perhaps this instance has not been called to Postmaster General Farley's attention. Surely loyalty to President and party would not prevent Mr. Farley from abolishing the shore-to-ship service as an economy measure, or at least substituting a rowboat for the costly airplane.

[Editorial from the News-Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind., Monday, Apr. 9, 1934]

The efforts of Postmaster General Farley to save the air-mail system from further disintegration, while at the same time saving his own face, have got him into some pretty hot water. The aviation companies have quite properly demurred from a proposed settlement which would impugn their own integrity. The Constitution forbids Congress to pass bills of attainder, which have been described by the Supreme Court as legislative acts that inflict punishment without a judicial trial. Is the Postmaster General willing to submit his accusations against air-transport officials to the courts—with the understanding that discrimination against operators who are not convicted will be dropped? Probably no act of the Roosevelt administration has aroused so much well-justified indignation and unrest as Mr. Farley's insistence that individuals be punished without trial.

A STATEMENT FROM THE PILOTS OF TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC.

The following brief was prepared by and for the 56 pilots and 26 copilots of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc. It is upon our own responsibility that we make and present the representations contained herein. We speak for no other group, individual, or corporation.

1. We have noted considerable confusion in the minds of the average person as to the difference between an air-line pilot and any other pilot. Likewise, there is not sufficient understanding of or differentiation between an air-line pilot and a military pilot. To obtain a comprehensive idea of what goes into the making of an air-line pilot, it is necessary to point out the rigorous training and effort involved. Preliminary and elementary training must be had either in the Army or Navy flying schools or in private flying schools at a cost in the latter case of not less than $4,000 per man. The most conservative estimates of the cost to the Government of training one pilot is $8,000, and during the war was calculated at $10,000 per pilot. It should be borne in mind that this equips a pilot only for military flying or ordinary fair-weather flying, and is only one step toward the making of a finished and competent air-line pilot. It will be noted that to this stage the cost has nevertheless been equivalent to that of a complete college course in the professions, such as engineering or law, for example, and the time required is also about the same. From that point the pilot must accumulate solo hours in the air to the total of 1,200 or more before he can qualify as a first pilot on an airline. He must also learn instrument flying, more commonly referred to as blind flying, which means that he must be able to fly without visual reference to the ground or sky. He must also master the technique of orientation and navigation over the airways on the radio directional beam and be able to fly his course with this and other modern aids to aerial navigation through fog, sleet, snow, rain, or other weather conditions which obscure the ground or sky and reduce or eliminate altogether visibility and ceiling. This training in our own case was provided by the company employing us, in special equipment with seasoned instructors, at a cost of more than $50,000. Without such training and experience, no regularity of scheduled operations can be carried on. Many hundreds of schedules have thus been completed which under the old order of things, or prior to 1933, would have been canceled. This specialized training has been had by very few pilots other than the 600 airline pilots. Those acquiring it did so only after much time and effort, after which they were examined by Department of Commerce pilot-inspectors in writing and in air work before obtaining the certificate of scheduled air transport rating. This is a special rating which must be held by all transport pilots carrying passengers for hire on scheduled operations. It is immediately obvious what a tremendously valuable adjunct these seasoned and highly skilled pilots would be to the country in time of a national emergency. They would, in fact, constitute a special arm of defense hardly comparable to any existing agency.

2. Another phase of an air-line pilot's training, the importance of which cannot be overemphasized, is the science of meteorology. This necessitates a thorough course in meteorology and related subjects, and the result is that most airline pilots are expert weather men.

3. Other elements in a pilot's make-up require a thorough knowledge of instruments, motors, aerodynamics, radio, laws and Post Office regulations pertaining to the handling of United States mail, terrain over which his routes are operated, airways and Department of Commerce regulations, facilities, beacons, emergency fields, etc.

4. An air-line pilot, by the nature of his work and night flying, is forced into habits of living and irregular hours of sleep, eating, and recreation, the sum total of which combine to make his life an arduous one. Yet in order to pass the physical examinations required by the Department of Commerce every 6 months for the renewal of his license, he must keep himself in good physical condition at all times. These exactions contribute to the limitation of his years of productivity. Hence we contend that his compensation during his earning period—estimated to be about 15 years—should be adequate to enable him to create a nominal estate for old age and liquidate the investment made for his training, as is the aim of any other professional man.

Pilots in the group we represent have an average of more than 4,000 hours in the air; many over 6,000; all more than 5 years of flying, and a large proportion 10 to 17 years. The combined number of years of flying of the 12 pilots and 7 copilots stationed in Los Angeles alone represent more than 300 years, and their total hours exceed 90,000, or more than 10 years off the ground. These (T.W.A.) pilots are less than 20 percent of the 600 air-line pilots now flying the scheduled operations.

5. Thus far we have been paid salaries which comport with the above cited conditions, have had congenial relations with our employers, and have enjoyed being identified with an industry which has made such astounding progress and built the commercial air-lines of America, the envy of all other nations and the pride of our own.

As aforesaid, we represent only a portion of the air-line pilots, but our interests are all identical. We are vitally concerned with whatever fate the future holds for us. To be specific, we are more interested in the aircraft we are to fly and the rate of compensation for our services than in any other considerations.

In this connection, may we cite that our company has recently developed two new airplanes, one for mail, which will make possible an overnight mail service from coast to coast, and one for passengers and mail, which recently flew from Los Angeles to New York in 12 hours and 19 minutes. This type, if development is continued, will undoubtedly revolutionize the air-transport industry. Its specifications were written by pilots, engineers, mechanics, and other employees of our company, their combined knowledge and experience being responsible for its high performance, comfort, safety ratio, cruising range, and highly efficient aerodynamic characteristics. The air forces of our Army and Navy will benefit directly from these developments, and have already placed orders for certain types of the mail planes, with minor modifications to fit them to military uses. Hence the Government is profiting directly, as the cost of all this experimentation (already more than half a million dollars) has been borne by our company. It should also be remembered that besides the financial outlay, many lives have been lost in obtaining the knowledge that made these airplanes possible.

The company is now committed to the purchase of 41 of these and 6 other craft and equipment at a cost of $3,048,100. If equitable adjustment is not made of our air-mail contract, it is highly probable that this order will not be filled or the airplanes built at all. Our company's books show a total investment of more than $6,000,000 and losses of $1,250,000. No dividends have been paid, nor net profits realized.

Any fair-minded person familiar with the progress and development of the industry will concede that T.W.A. is one of the pioneers in the business, and has contributed its full share in the building of the imposing structure of airlines. We cite that the tremendous investments of the four major airlines are deserving of profound consideration in the reawarding of contracts; that the pioneers have certain constitutional, ethical, and inalienable priorities over stock-promotional or shoestring operators, who would have neither the equipment, finances, experience, vision, nor concern with the future of the industry that the major operators possess.

The accomplishments of American aviation excel those of any other nation, and we as pilots are proud indeed to have had a small part in the development. We are patriotically and enthusiastically inclined to go on and contribute our bit, despite the yearly toll of lives lost from our ranks.

We perceive, however, that if nondescript and mushroom operators are now given these contracts, as may be the case, those 600 of us who have devoted most of our adult lives to the profession of piloting will be relegated to standards of pay, equipment, and service incompatible with the best interests of public safety.

We are not unmindful of the tremendous burdens resting upon the President and this administration, and therefore would consider this appeal as untoward if not accompanied by some constructive suggestions looking toward a solution of the immediate situation in the aviation industry.

It is therefore our recommendation that as a temporary measure the assignment of carrying the air mail be restored to the original operators as of February 19, 1934, for the balance of the current fiscal year. It is suggested that this be done, applying a rate of 40 cents per mile, or, if greater economy demands it, at the postage return rate, calculated by the House and Senate Post Office Committees, to be 2 mills per pound-mile. This would restore immediate order in the industry and return many hundreds to work who have been furloughed as a result of the cancelations.

The interim between now and June 30, 1934, would provide time for the following vital considerations:

1. The formulation of new legislation that will place the air mail under regulation by a Federal body under which suitable rules can be laid down for the negotiation and granting of contracts, for the regulation of operating companies, and the elimination and prevention of abuses alleged to have occurred in the past.

2. To give adequate study to the terms of contracts to be awarded (with specifications advantageous to the Government and acceptable to the operators) after which it is suggested that the present contractors be allowed to qualify under the new laws, and that if they are unwilling or unable to qualify, throw open said route to rebidding; but if able to qualify and comply with all Federal requirements, their contracts be restored, with such amendments or reservations as required under the new legislation.

3. In the meantime, make specific charges against those who have been alleged to be guilty of fraud or collusion in connection with air-mail contracts, grant hearings with right of counsel; convict and punish the guilty and make equitable redemption to the innocent.

4. Finally, and perhaps of most vital importance in the intervening period to hundreds of businesses throughout the country and the public at large, the Nation would again be provided with efficient, expeditious, and extensive air mail service.

PILOTS' SENIORITY

A pilot's seniority is one of his most valuable possessions, earned after long years of effort and hazard. It is comparable to the prestige built up by a doctor or lawyer, whose clientele is profitable only after many years of practice. A pilot's record for service, safety, schedules completed, general and technical knowledge of his profession, therefore constitute his stock in trade. If we are now to be divorced from the companies we have grown up with, and forced into a melee of seeking employment with operators who have little or no experience and who will doubtless have little regard for anything other than immediate returns on their money (under the 3-year contracts this would be but natural) it is easy to see what the result would be.

EXHIBIT C

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Pittsburgh, January 26, 1934.

Hon. HUGO BLACK,
Chairman Senate Air Mail and Ocean Mail Investigation Committee,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: During the course of your committee's investigation of air-mail contracts there have been frequent references to the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. In newspapers and elsewhere there have been wide-spread inferences and implications as to the origin and management of the corporation which are not in harmony with certain verifiable facts, and as your honorable committee is seeking the facts the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, which is conversant with some of them that we believe will impress you as highly relevant, deems itself under obligation to communicate them to you.

Far from having been brought into existence by any special group or interest, the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was organized in December 1928 purely as a community enterprise, with the active support and sponsorship of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and with no other purpose than to make Pittsburgh an aviation center. The stock was subscribed by over 200 of our business and civic leaders embracing virtually every civic interest and form of industrial enterprise. Of the 46,412 shares of stock issued, no group owned more than 2,400, or approximately 5 percent of the total, which became merely a quarter of 1 percent interest in T. & W. A.

As further evidence of the diversified support of the enterprise and its freedom from the domination of any one particular individual or group, we take the liberty to submit herewith a list of the board of directors elected at the date of organization in December 1928. As may be seen, the board was constituted of 58 persons selected from all types of commercial, industrial, and financial endeavor.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce played a large part in the formation of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation by carrying on a campaign to rouse public opinion in regard to the necessity of an energetic community effort to secure for the city its proper share of the new and rapidly developing industry. Accordingly, at a meeting on Thursday, January 10, 1929, the board of directors of the chamber of commerce unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce has been deeply interested and active for several years in the development of aeronautics and of the airplane industry in the Pittsburgh district; and

"Whereas the industrial-expansion committee of the Pittsburgh chamber has for the last 2 years carried on an investigation of the possibilities of this industry, looking to the establishment of plants manufacturing airplanes, airplane engines, parts and accessories thereto in the Pittsburgh district; and

"Whereas this committee of the chamber, as a result of such investigation, is convinced of the need of some effective and coordinated plan to provide for financial assistance and business guidance to aviation in all its phases; and

"Whereas the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation has recently been organized by a group of business leaders, counseling with our industrial-expansion committee, and the purpose of this organization is to lend such financial assistance and business guidance, and also to encourage all forms of aviation activity in the Pittsburgh district, in a determination 'to make Pittsburgh an aviation center': Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce commend the public-spirited enterprise which has promoted the organization of the corporation and heartily endorses the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. Furthermore, that the chamber of commerce tender its services, especially that of the committee on industrial expansion, and of all other interested committees and divisions of the chamber, in the promotion of the work of the said corporation."

Reviewing the growth and development of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation from December 1928 to the present time, we are convinced that the commendable purposes which prompted its organization as a public-spirited community enterprise have been loyally and effectively kept in mind and fulfilled. The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce did not lose its concern in aviation development after sponsoring the organization of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, but has at every opportunity cooperated in the successive stages of the development of air-transport facilities for Pittsburgh and the great industrial region of which it is the metropolis. Airports had to be constructed, airway systems established, the necessity of adequate air mail and passenger service impressed upon the public, and proper coordination with transcontinental aviation services secured. At every step the dominant purpose, not only of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, but of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, was community service.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce would be pleased to appear before your committee by its proper representatives if it is your judgment that they might aid you in any way.

Respectfully yours,

PITTSBURGH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
FRANK C. HARPER, Secretary.

EXHIBIT D

MAY 23, 1930.

Col. CLARENCE M. YOUNG,
Assistant Secretary for Aeronautics,
Department of Commerce, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly advise us the present status of construction of the Philadelphia-Pittsburgh airway, which we understand is being built jointly by the Department of Commerce and the Pennsylvania State Aeronautics Commission, and when you consider it will be ready for scheduled passenger flying operation? We have in mind particularly the portion of the airway across the Allegheny Mountains.

We presume that the Department of Commerce will require adequate airways, including the necessary aids to navigation, to be available before it will issue a certificate of safety to an operator for a scheduled passenger service over a given route.

For over a year this company has been ready with equipment and personnel to begin scheduled passenger service between Pittsburgh and New York. We have delayed the commencement of this operation until the airway is completed and we can carry it on with the authority of the Department of Commerce.

Your early advices regarding this matter will be appreciated.

Very respectfully,

RICHARD W. ROBBINS,
Executive Vice President.

EXHIBIT E

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR AERONAUTICS,
Washington, May 26, 1930.

Mr. RICHARD W. ROBBINS,
Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR SIR: The following responds to the queries raised in your letter of May 23, concerning the proposed airway between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, which is a part of the new airway between Columbus and New York via Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, and Philadelphia.

Bids for the construction work on this route are scheduled to be opened June 6. In the absence of complications in the matter of bids, bond, etc., an award should be made and contract signed in time for work to be undertaken between July 1 and 15.

It seems probable that bidders will estimate 120 days for a completion of the lighting equipment. Delays usually encountered may add an extra 30 days. Therefore, December 1 could probably be considered as a date for completion. No doubt the intermediate field facilities will be completed prior to that time—say September 1. This would make the route acceptable for day operation if suitable weather information was available.

As to the specific question concerning a certificate of authority: The Department has not yet had an opportunity to analyze the various phases of passenger air transportation for the purpose of giving practical effect to the new regulations. However, the operating experience across the State of Pennsylvania has been such as to indicate that a certificate of authority to operate a scheduled air-passenger service would be in order only in the event suitable airways facilities were available for either day or night service, or both, as the case might be.

Sincerely yours,

CLARENCE M. YOUNG,
Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

P.S.—A copy of the new regulations is enclosed.

[Regulation]

United Air Lines was formed in 1931 as an operating company and to include under one management the following holders of air-mail contracts: Boeing Air Transport, route no. 18, operating between Chicago and San Francisco; National Air Transport, which held routes nos. 3 and 17, route no. 3 operating between Chicago, Fort Worth, and Dallas, and route no. 17 operating between New York City and Chicago; Pacific Air Transport, route no. 8, operating between Seattle and Los Angeles; and Varney Air Lines, route no. 5, operating between Salt Lake City, Pasco, Spokane, Portland, and Seattle.

The contract held by Boeing Air Transport, route 18, resulted from bids which were requested on November 15, 1926, the openings for which were held at noon on January 15, 1927. Under the bid invitation the maximum rate per pound that could be bid was $3 for the first 1,000 miles, plus 30 cents per pound for each additional 100 miles or fraction thereof. The route was to extend from Chicago to San Francisco. The successful bidder was the joint bid by the Boeing Airplane Co. and Edward Hubbard, which bid was for $1.50 per pound for 1,000 miles and 15 cents per pound for each additional 100 miles. The other bidders were: The Columbia Air Liners, Inc., New York City; Stout Air Services, Inc., Detroit; and Western Air Express, Los Angeles. The contract was awarded February 1, 1927, and the route certificate was issued October 21, 1930, good until April 5, 1936. Route 18 was the recipient of one extension, i.e., Omaha to Watertown, 259 miles in length, said extension authority was dated January 16, 1932.

The contract held by National Air Transport, route 3, operating from Chicago to Fort Worth and Dallas, was the result of invitations to bid dated July 15, 1925, which bids were opened on September 15, 1925. The contract was awarded November 27, 1925, and subsequently on November 6, 1929, a 6 months' continuance of life was given this contract under section 1808 of the postal regulations in force on the latter date. Before the expiration of this 6 months' period, specifically, May 3, 1930, the route certificate was issued. There was one other bidder on route 3 at the time bids were opened, i.e., General Airways System, Inc., New York City. National Air Transport's other air-mail contract, i.e., route 17, between New York and Chicago, was the result of bid invitations dated March 8, 1927, which bids were opened at noon on March 24, 1927. The contract was awarded on April 2, 1927, and the route certificate, provided for under the McNary-Watres Act approved April 28, 1930, was issued on October 22, 1930. There were three other bidders on this particular route, i.e., Colonial Air Transport, Inc., New York City; American Airways, Inc., Cleveland, Ohio; and Earl F. Stewart, New York City.

Pacific Air Transport, operating route 8 between Seattle and Los Angeles, received its air-mail contract as a result of bids requested under date of July 15, 1925, which bids were opened on September 15, 1925. Vern C. Gorst was awarded the contract on January 27, 1926, and subsequently the contract was sublet to Pacific Air Transport on March 19, 1926. A 6 months' continuance of life covering route 8 operation was authorized under date of January 23, 1930, in accordance with section 1808 of the postal regulations then in force. Prior to the expiration of this 6 months' period the route certificate, by law provided, was issued on May 27, 1930, good until April 5, 1936. Route 8 received one extension, i.e., from Los Angeles to San Diego, authorized on June 7, 1930, to become effective on July 1, 1930. There were two other bidders on route 8, i.e., Wiley F. Crist, San Francisco, and Western Air Express, Inc., Los Angeles.

Varney Air Lines was awarded the contract on route 5 between Salt Lake City and Pasco as a result of bid invitations dated July 15, 1925, the bid opening date being September 15, 1925. The contract was awarded on November 7, 1925, and on November 6, 1929, a 6 months' continuation of life, in accordance with section 1808 of the postal regulations then in force, was granted. Prior to the expiration of this temporary 6 months' continuance of life, specifically on May 3, 1930, the route certificate was issued.

Varney Air Lines also had received an award on route 32, which operation extended from Pasco to Spokane to Portland to Seattle under bid invitations requested on June 15, 1929, which opening occurred at noon on August 15, 1929. The date of the contract award was September 23, 1929. The other bidders on this contract were Boeing Air Transport, National Parks Airways, and Robert E. Smith, of Portland, Oreg. Under an order dated May 27, 1930, contract air-mail route, C.A.M. 32, was canceled and the service consolidated with route 5; such consolidation was made effective according to the order on July 1, 1930.

The above information regarding dates of bid invitations, bid openings, contract awards, consolidations, etc., together with information not included in the above, may be found in Senate Document 70, Seventy-second Congress, first session.

WESTERN AIR EXPRESS CORPORATION—HISTORY AND OUTLINE OF MAIL OPERATIONS

Western Air Express, Inc., which up to the recent past was operator of C.A.M. 4 (Los Angeles to Salt Lake City), C.A.M. 12 (Cheyenne-Denver-Albuquerque), and a portion of C.A.M. 33 (Albuquerque-El Paso), is one of the original pioneers of air mail, passenger, and express transportation. In 1925 when it was determined that the Post Office Department, then operating experimental transcontinental air-mail service, would turn over to private operators the transportation of United States air mail, Western Air Express was organized for the purpose of bidding for and securing a portion of these pioneering routes.

In July 1925 Western Air Express, Inc., a California corporation, was organized and incorporated for this purpose. In September 1925, in compliance with United States Post Office Department advertisements, Western Air Express placed its bid for the operation of that portion of the transcontinental route between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City via Las Vegas, Nev. The contract was executed on November 7, 1925, and operation of a single schedule each way began on April 17, 1926.

The original operating company was capitalized for 5,000 shares of common stock of $100 par value. The full amount authorized was never issued, there being only 4,283 shares outstanding in January 1929. The proceeds from the sale of the stock were used to purchase flying equipment, to construct hangars and terminal facilities, and to survey and prepare for adequate operation of an efficient, dependable air-mail service between the two terminals. In the first 8½ months of operation, completed December 31, 1926, 66,592 pounds of mail were transported over this route.

Being the first air transport line in the United States to carry passengers between two designated points on regular schedule, Western Air Express began transporting passengers, with the mail, in the late spring of 1926. In the limited space available in the mail planes 209 passengers were carried in this pioneering operation during the remainder of 1926.

In September 1927 a bid was placed for C.A.M. 12, to transport mail between Cheyenne, Wyo., and Pueblo, Colo., via Denver and Colorado Springs. The contract for this route was awarded October 4, 1927, and operation began December 10 of the same year.

In May 1928 Western Air Express, in cooperation with the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, opened a model passenger airway between Los Angeles and San Francisco, using the first trimotor Fokker airplanes. This route was operated for passengers and express only. In June of the same year Pacific Marine Airways was purchased and a service was inaugurated between Wilmington, Calif., and Avalon, Santa Catalina Island. Although no mail contracts were obtained for these routes and their operation resulted in considerable loss, nevertheless their operation was warranted by the development of additional air transportation service which gained for Western Air Express an unexcelled reputation for service, and which further provided experience and data necessary for the future expansion of passenger and air-mail operations. In the year 1928 Western Air Express carried 458,231 pounds of mail and over 6,000 passengers.

The routes established during these first 3 years of operation provided the experience and data necessary for inaugurating new services in 1929. The Post Office Department, in its role of sponsor of commercial air transportation development, established the policy of desiring and aiding the expansion of efficient, safe, economical air passenger transportation. In all of the many future routes inaugurated by Western Air Express, this policy of the Post Office Department was the guiding power behind the expansion. During 1929 the company expanded its operations at a rapid pace to meet the requirements of a growing public demand for air passenger service and for increased frequency of air-mail dispatch. On May 1, 1929, a second service for mail was instituted between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City.

On May 15, 1929, Western Air Express inaugurated a passenger and express service between Los Angeles and Kansas City via Albuquerque, Amarillo, and Wichita, with a view to establishing and developing a more rapid transcontinental transport service and thereby being in a position to bid on future mail contracts that might be let for a central transcontinental route. This was the first concrete experiment in extended air passenger transportation, being the longest operation of its kind attempted so far. A great deal of time and expense was necessary to provide proper surveys and to locate the various landing fields.

In the summer of 1929 a growing demand for additional air-mail and passenger service in the Rocky Mountain States was presented to the officers of Western Air Express. In compliance with this demand and with the knowledge that a definite needed service could be rendered to the cities throughout the Rocky Mountain region, between which rail transportation was none too direct, Harris M. Hanshue, president of Western Air Express, organized a new company, known as "Mid-Continent Air Express Corporation". Equipment for this line was furnished by the Fokker Aircraft Corporation of America, and operating capital was advanced by Western Air Express. Passenger and express service between Denver, Colo., and El Paso, Tex., via Pueblo, Santa Fe, and Albuquerque, began in September 1929. In November of this year the same company connected Denver with Kansas City on a direct air route via Dodge City and Topeka.

Stock in Mid-Continent Air Express was never offered to the public. The company was entirely financed by Western Air Express and General Aviation Corporation, successor to Fokker Aircraft. The operations on these two pioneer routes definitely established them as feasible and necessary to the districts served and, although operated at a considerable loss, it was believed that eventually it would be possible to acquire mail contracts which would materially aid in building up a service of vital importance to the districts affected. In the fall of 1930 Mid-Continent Air Express took over from Western Air Express the operation of the latter's Amarillo to Dallas run and inaugurated a direct service between Pueblo and Dallas, Tex. via Amarillo. At the same time the operation between Denver and Kansas City was discontinued. When the decision was made to discontinue this run it was made with the knowledge that a new operating company, known as "United States Airways", would continue to offer direct air transportation service between Denver and Kansas City. Mid-Continent Air Express, at this time, did not have the necessary equipment to maintain both routes and since the Denver-Kansas City route would be served and it was believed that the already established service between Amarillo and Dallas should be continued, it was therefore felt that it was for the company's best interests and for the best interests of the communities served to make this change.

On August 1, 1931, the Post Office Department granted Western Air Express an extension of C.A.M. 12, from Pueblo, Colo., to Albuquerque, N.Mex., and from Pueblo, Colo., to Amarillo, Tex., The route between Albuquerque, N.Mex., and El Paso, Tex., was granted as an air-mail extension of C.A.M. 33, a contract held by American Airways. This route had been fully pioneered by Western Air Express and its affiliate, Mid-Continent Air Express. Eventually the extension granted American Airways, between Albuquerque, N.Mex., and El Paso, Tex., was subleased to Western Air Express for operation.

During the period from September 1929 to July 31, 1931, Mid-Continent Air Express Corporation suffered a loss in excess of $400,000. Since this company was financed by Western Air Express and General Aviation, this loss was actually sustained by them. Upon the granting of the mail-contract extensions mentioned above, Western Air Express Corporation purchased the assets of Mid-Continent Air Express Corporation at their book value plus $244,000 for the "going value" of Mid-Continent Air Express operations.

In the spring of 1929 the financial structure of Western Air Express, Inc., had been changed to accommodate the expansion program planned. Western Air Express Corporation, incorporated under a Delaware charter, with capitalization of $5,000,000, was organized. The stock of Western Air Express, Inc., was acquired by the new corporation in exchange for its own stock. Western Air Express, Inc., continued as the operating company. Stock in the new corporation was offered to the public and working capital was thereby replenished.

With the additional financing Western Air Express was better equipped for the program of expansion on the Kansas City-Los Angeles route and the pioneering of the Rocky Mountain operations. Furthermore, an additional round-trip schedule was inaugurated between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The operations of the company had outgrown the terminal facilities occupied in Los Angeles. It was decided to acquire property and construct an airport commensurate with the requirements of rapidly increasing traffic in and out of Los Angeles. For this purpose land was purchased in Alhambra and construction of the Alhambra terminal commenced. When completed early in 1930, at a cost of approximately one and a quarter million dollars, it represented the most complete and up-to-date terminal of its kind in the country. It had been entirely planned, financed, and constructed by Western Air Express for the benefit of the air-minded public of southern California.

May 1, 1930, Western Air Express Corporation acquired all of the common stock of Aero Corporation of California, Inc., and purchased from Aero Corporation the assets and franchises of Standard Airlines, an air transportation company operating between Los Angeles and El Paso via Phoenix, Tucson, and Douglas. It immediately extended this service from El Paso to Dallas, Tex., the operation of which meant large monthly losses, as it was solely a passenger and express operation.

Earlier in 1930 two extensions had been made to the Los Angeles-Kansas City run, namely from Amarillo to Tulsa, Okla., and from Amarillo to Dallas, Tex., which extensions furnished to southern California an extremely efficient and rapid air passenger and express service to all major points between Los Angeles and Kansas City and the territory south to Dallas, Tex.

The plans of Western Air Express, to provide to the entire southwest United States the most complete and unexcelled air transport service in the country, were rapidly crystallizing into definite accomplishment. Although the two mail contracts operated by the company were providing a fair profit, the losses on passenger and express routes and their development were far greater. To allow these several services to continue and fully develop, it was necessary that Government mail contracts be granted on one or all of these operations. Such aid would be necessary for a number of years to span the interval of time and development until commercial air transport could become self-sustaining on its passenger and express revenue.

On May 5, 1930, the original mail contract granted Western Air on the Salt Lake City-Los Angeles run was superseded by a route certificate in line with the provision of the Watres bill. The contract on C.A.M. 12 was superseded by a route certificate in October of the same year. The effect of this change was to reduce the revenue for carrying the mail by about 66⅔ percent, thereby further curtailing development of passenger and express services.

In the early spring of 1930 the Post Office Department called for bids on the transcontinental route between Los Angeles and New York via Kansas City, the so-called "central route", and on the southern route from Los Angeles to Atlanta, Ga., via El Paso and Dallas.

Western Air Express had pioneered the western end of both of these routes, having originated the service between Kansas City and Los Angeles in 1929, and from Dallas to Los Angeles in May 1930.

During the period from May 15, 1929, to October 1, 1930, this company had operated the Kansas City-Los Angeles route at a loss of approximately $1,100,000. This loss was considered justifiable as the cost of pioneering the line and preparing it for future development of air-mail, passenger, and express service. Subsequent to the time this operation was started, Transcontinental Air Transport originated an air-rail service between Los Angeles and New York paralleling Western Air operations much of the way west of Kansas City.

The Post Office Department advertised for bids for the operation of a complete line from New York to Los Angeles, with a "cut-off" from St. Louis to Amarillo via Tulsa. W.A.E. and T.A.T., jointly, after public bidding, were found to be the lowest responsible bidders and were granted C.A.M. 34 for carrying the mail between Los Angeles and New York via the mid-transcontinental route and from Amarillo to St. Louis via Tulsa, Okla. Whereupon, a consolidation of Western Air Express' Los Angeles-Kansas City and Amarillo-Tulsa operations was consummated with T.A.T. operations, forming Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., to which company were transferred all the operating facilities and equipment of both organizations on this route, and to which company was sublet the contract for carrying the mail. T.A.T. and W.A.E. each received 47½ percent of the common stock of T. & W. A., and Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation the remaining 5 percent.

American Airways, operators of the line between Dallas, Tex., and El Paso, Tex., were awarded the contract to carry the air mail between Atlanta and Los Angeles. As a result of this, Western Air Express disposed of its operations and equipment along this route to that company. Besides the losses sustained by the Standard Air Lines in pioneering and developing the route between Los Angeles and El Paso, Western Air Express took an additional loss of over $300,000 in originating and operating the extension between El Paso and Dallas, Tex., and maintaining the high standard of Western Air service over the entire route from Los Angeles for the period from May 1, 1930, to October 9, 1930.

In the period from May 26, 1928, when the Los Angeles-San Francisco passenger service was inaugurated, to October 1930, when T. & W. A. had been formed and taken over the Kansas City operations, and the Los Angeles-El Paso-Dallas route had been sold, Western Air Express had diverted over $2,000,000 of their revenue to the pioneering and developing of these de luxe passenger services. This amount is in addition to the $400,000 loss sustained by Mid-Continent in developing the Rocky Mountain service.

Gradually the vast network of air-mail, passenger, and express lines which Western Air Express had originated and developed throughout the southwest United States had been either sold or consolidated, as in the case of T. & W. A., so that in the winter of 1930 there remained but two operations to Western Air Express, one being the original mail contract, C.A.M. 4, between Salt Lake City and San Diego via Los Angeles, extension to the original route into San Diego having been granted June 1, 1930; and the other, C.A.M. 12, between Cheyenne, Wyo., and Pueblo, Colo. No further changes were made in W.A.E. operations until the extension on C.A.M. 12 and 33 in August 1931, at which time this company took over the operations of Mid-Continent Air Express. In January 1932 the Post Office Department discontinued the night flight between Los Angeles and Salt Lake. At the same time, through unfavorable departure schedules and connections, the mail poundage was reduced on the remaining schedule to the point where it was placed in class B operations. During this period W.A.E. continued to offer the trimotor de luxe passenger service on the route, receiving therefor on their mail contract the minimum rate paid for air-mail service. During the first 6 months of 1932 business men and chambers of commerce throughout the Southwest complained bitterly to the Post Office Department of the curtailed air-mail operations from Los Angeles to the Northeast and East via Salt Lake City. The result of this demand by the public brought about a resumption of the service on August 15, 1932.

At that time C.A.M. 4 authorized a service which filled a very vital and economical need of the Southwest and the west slope of the Rocky Mountains. In the beginning of air-mail service the Post Office Department recognized the importance of a service connecting Los Angeles with the Rocky Mountain region and the industrial centers of Chicago and the East. The intermediate stop at Las Vegas, Nev., permits an outlet for the vast amount of Government and private business correspondence and traffic originating from the huge construction work at Boulder Dam, at the same time furnishing rapid air passenger transportation between Los Angeles and Boulder Dam, and east to Denver, Chicago, Washington, D.C., and New York.

A change in departure time and connections instituted by the Post Office Department on June 12, 1933, had practically doubled the mail poundage of C.A.M. 4, the Los Angeles-Salt Lake route. With the continued betterment of business and general economic conditions, it is believed the present poundage could again be doubled. Even during the year 1933 the number of passengers carried by Western Air Express, Inc., had increased about 50 percent over the previous year, and the pounds of mail carried had exceeded the previous year's poundage by over 50 percent.

There can be no doubt as to the vital need of this service, not only to Los Angeles, Las Vegas, and all of the southwestern territory but also to Salt Lake and eastern business and banking houses. The importance of this need was well demonstrated at the time the service was cut in half by discontinuing the night schedule in January 1932. Los Angeles business requires a direct outlet for both mail, passengers, and express to all points east and north of Salt Lake City served by this route.

Although the mail poundage on C.A.M. 12, the mid-continent route, has never been exceedingly high in comparison with C.A.M. 4, nevertheless it has served a territory whose needs have well warranted the expense. The rich mining and agricultural districts of Colorado have never been situated on a direct transcontinental rail service with either the East or the West. The operation of this air-mail route has filled a gap in the transportation needs of a rapidly developing community and district. The trade intercourse between principal Texas communities and Denver and the Northwest has been great, but direct through transportation has never been adequately developed until the present Air Mail Service. The operation of the El Paso-Albuquerque-Denver-Cheyenne and the Amarillo-Pueblo routes provide direct, rapid transportation for passengers and mail into the Northwest and from the Northwest into these territories and Mexico. These Rocky Mountain operations were instituted only after a very careful survey was made of the requirements and needs of the territory served and after heavy pressure had been brought to bear by the various communities involved. Being satisfied that this need existed and that the potential growth of this territory well warranted the expense of developing such a route, Western Air Express felt that the several hundred thousand dollars expended in this development was exceedingly worth-while. It was only after prolonged review of these needs and requirements that the Post Office Department granted the extensions south of Pueblo. The Post Office Department had recognized the essential need of the Cheyenne-Pueblo route when they specified this as one of their first original 12 contractural routes.

Since 1926 Western Air Express, in its pioneering development of commercial air transportation, has seen fit to invest over $4,500,000 in planes, engines, radio, airports, and miscellaneous ground and flying equipment, much of which has become obsolete or worn out in service. In the 7 years of Western Air Express operations, ending December 31, 1932, this company has paid out slightly over $2,750,000 in salaries to employees. It is impossible to state over this period the average number of employees, due to the fact that each year up to the summer of 1930 there was a rapid expansion, with ever-increasing pay roll and number of employees, many of whom were transferred in the fall of 1930 from Western Air pay rolls to T. & W. A. and American Airways. On the basis of the operations of Western Air Express prior to the cancelation of air-mail contracts, pay rolls approximated $350,000 a year for 133 employees. The extent of these pay rolls clearly sets forth the large and important element in the industrial and economic structure of the community played by this company.

During 5 years of the Western Air operations dividends were paid to stockholders, the total amount of which for the 8 years the company has been operating represents approximately 10 percent of the profits derived from the air-mail contracts. Slightly more than 50 percent of all profits on C.A.M. nos. 4, 12, and 33 have been turned back into the development of additional passenger and express services.

It has been felt advisable to conserve our cash as much as possible for the replacement of flying equipment with modern high-speed planes which are now being developed for the company, and any curtailment of revenues from air mail will seriously retard this program, which, if allowed to be completed, will furnish needed employment and business to airplane factories.

It is a significant coincidence that Western Air Express holds both first- and second-place records for reliability on the Operating Efficiency Percentage List of Air Mail Contracts. According to Post Office Department statistics, C.A.M. 4 has had the highest operating efficiency percentage over a period of several years, while C.A.M. 12 has been next.

This company also holds the world's record for safety, having operated for about 8 years, carried about 80,000 passengers, and flown more than 15,000,000 miles without causing a fatality or serious injury to a passenger.

During the past 8 years of aggressive development of the air transportation industry, in which development Western Air Express has played an exceedingly vital part, American business and industry has increased its tempo to the point where the rapid transportation furnished by air transport operators is an exceedingly necessary part of its life. During the past 3 years of depression, when all other forms of transportation have shown a marked decrease in passenger traffic, the recognized air transport units of the United States have shown a very healthy increase in passenger business and revenue each year. Nineteen hundred and thirty-three showed this increase to a marked degree. American business and the American people cannot now do without the advantages of fast air transportation, both from a passenger standpoint and from a mail and express angle. In developing this industry to the point where it will become self-sustaining, at the same time during this period of development offering a maximum of safe, efficient service, there have been many obstacles to overcome. The greatest obstacle of all was the familiarizing of the traveling public and the average business man with the advantages and safety of air transportation. It has not been possible for the industry to develop all sides of its many-sided nature simultaneously. Gradually, the expansion of passenger and express traffic has been developing toward the definite and that eventually revenue from these sources will financially sustain the operators. It is believed that extremely rapid progress has been made in the 8 years that commercial air transportation has existed, and that if the temporary assistance recently received from the Government through mail contracts is continued in diminishing quantities for the next few years, the development of these other sources of revenue will make the industry self-sustaining.

Because of the great expense of originating and developing these routes now operated by Western Air Express, both by Post Office Department and by this company, and because of the vital need of the services as detailed in the foregoing, it is firmly believed the curtailment of these operations has been a most damaging blow to the economic and commercial advance of the districts affected.

HISTORY OF TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC.

The last recorded major item in the history of Transcontinental & Western Air, generally known as T.W.A., is that its air-mail contract has been canceled by Postmaster General Farley for fraud and collusion. Insofar as it represents the temporary and possibly permanent frustration of all that has gone before in Transcontinental & Western Air's history, that last item is here brought out so that it may be borne in mind when considering what has gone before.

The first definition given in Funk & Wagnalls' Dictionary for "fraud" is: "Deception with the object of gaining by another's loss." Just how far from applying to Transcontinental & Western Air that definition is will become more and more apparent as the details of the company's history are unfolded. However, at this point it is desired to make brief comment on the application of that definition to Transcontinental & Western Air. That company has deceived no one. It was awarded its mail contract because, in free and open competitive bidding, it was ruled by the Comptroller General of the United States as the only eligible bidder. The second part of the definition of "fraud" is "with the object of gaining." Transcontinental & Western Air from the date that it was awarded its air-mail contract down to February 28, 1934, lost a total of $1,345,000. Finally, fraud connotes "gain by another's loss." The president of the other bidder, who was declared ineligible, on Transcontinental & Western Air's route, declared before a Senate committee that if Postmaster General Brown had wished to punish him, the worst thing he could have done would have been to award him the contract and require performance under the specifications of the contract or forfeiture of the $250,000 bond that had been posted.

Certainly no one can truthfully say that United Avigation, the low bidder, lost by being declared ineligible. The only other person who could have sustained a loss was the Government. Had United Avigation been forced to attempt compliance with their bid, the Government might have been able to collect from the sureties on the bond. But that was not the objective of the Post Office Department, nor of Congress. Congress, when it enacted the McNary-Watres bill, was desirous of securing the best possible air-mail service at a reasonable cost. It was the intention of Congress that air-mail operations should be adjusted to keep abreast of the advance in the art of flying and passenger transportation. The record of Transcontinental & Western Air clearly demonstrates to any fair-minded person that the Government did not lose, but rather received full value for its money, and received a service which cost the contractor $1,345,000 more than the total revenues received from all sources. At the same time the postal users were given the benefit of the fastest mail transportation service in the world. "Collusion" is defined as "an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights." There is nothing in the history of Transcontinental & Western Air which shows that they entered into any agreements of this character.

On the contrary, the foregoing shows just how far from being literally fraudulent T.W.A. is. The ensuing history of the company will show how, as diametrically opposed to fraudulent, all of the company's policies have been 100 percent honest and constructive, with but one aim in view: the development of an air service on the central transcontinental route that would present the best possible service for the transportation by air of mail, passengers, and express.

Transcontinental & Western Air is the direct descendant of the two companies to which T.W.A.'s air-mail contract was originally awarded, Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express. Therefore, T.W.A.'s history commences with the start of transcontinental plans and operations by those two companies.

Before Colonel Lindbergh took off from New York for Paris he flew the Spirit of St. Louis from San Diego, Calif., to St. Louis, and then from St. Louis to New York. Little did he dream in 1927 that 2 years later practically this same route would be flown with passenger and express service known as "the Lindbergh Line." Among Colonel Lindbergh's backers on his flight to Paris were Messrs. Bixby and Knight, of St. Louis. These men had not put up their money for purely promotional purposes. They were backing that flight first because of their confidence in Colonel Lindbergh's ability to complete it, and secondly, because they believed it would be a most desirable impetus to stimulate the interest of the American public in aviation generally, and in air travel in particular. As they bid Colonel Lindbergh Godspeed, they were even then thinking of the day when their native St. Louis would be less than 12 hours' travel, by scheduled air transport planes, from either coast.

These Missourians, who did not need to be shown, were not alone in their dreams of a transcontinental air service for this country. Any new enterprise needs financial backing, and the first important investment banker to place a stake on the future of air transportation had been Mr. C. M. Keys. He had already taken an important part in the founding of the New York-Chicago air-mail service, but he was not content with that. He, too, was thinking along the lines of a single air service that would link the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. Finally, the Pennsylvania Railroad had already envisaged the possibilities of giving its passengers a better service by a combined air and rail service.

The public acclaim of Colonel Lindbergh's flight and its awakened recognition of the possibilities of the airplane as a carrier convinced this group that the time for action had arrived. Therefore, the formation by the parties just named of Transcontinental Air Transport on May 12, 1928, and the employment of Colonel Lindbergh as technical adviser of the line were but the first concrete steps to be taken on plans that had been brewing for more than a year.

This company had a paid-in cash capital of $5,000,000. There was not one cent of commission paid to underwriters, no dividends have ever been paid on the stock, and its market value today is less than one third of the amount of cash which the original stockholders put in the company.

Transcontinental Air Transport was organized with a feeling of deep responsibility toward the company's prospective patrons. No transcontinental passenger service had ever been flown before. Consequently there was only one method of approach, and that was the expenditure of all time and money necessary for the establishment of a firm foundation on which to build a real transportation system. Therefore Colonel Lindbergh and other officials of the company were told to proceed along these lines.

During the remainder of 1928 and during the first part of 1929 Colonel Lindbergh and his colleagues and assistants gave all their time and effort to the study of the problems involved. Colonel Lindbergh himself had not been employed for the purpose of lending glamor to the undertaking. He had been employed for his actual technical knowledge gained as a pilot on the second contract air-mail route to be flown in this country. He spent many hours in the air trying out all possible routes, choosing landing fields, gathering meteorological data, testing equipment, and selecting pilots.

In the spring of 1929 Colonel Lindbergh finished a complete detailed report of the results of a year's study with the statement that "In consideration of these facts I have the honor to recommend that the inauguration of the transcontinental air-rail service take place on July 8."

Over a million dollars had been spent for equipment and in perfecting a ground organization before the first ticket was sold. Such expenditures and efforts are clearly indicative of the fact that the guiding spirits were interested in building a permanent organization and not merely engaged in stock jobbing. The route, and all facilities had been thoroughly tested—the decision to combine air and rail facilities, the former for travel by day and the latter for travel at night, had been reached. The stage was set for the inauguration of a service whereby a passenger could travel from coast to coast in 48 hours. Thus, on July 8, 1929, with Colonel Lindbergh at the controls, a trimotored airplane, the City of Los Angeles, took off from the city whose name it bore, with th first planeload of transcontinental passengers.

During the remainder of 1929 and on into 1930, the planes of Transcontinental Air Transport continued to fly back and forth across the central transcontinental route, carrying passengers and express. They were not making money. As a matter of fact, they had not expected to. There could be no question but that operations were still in a pioneering stage and the fact that considerable development loss had been anticipated is shown by the reserve of $2,000,000 that was set up in the original capital structure as a provision for development and contingencies.

If they had been promoters, the line's officials might have ordered a cessation of operations as soon as it was apparent that there would be no dividends to be paid out. They might have become discouraged and quit when they had their first accident, in which the lives of several passengers and two pilots were lost in a crash caused by bad weather conditions on Mount Taylor, N.Mex., in September 1929. But money and lives have been lost in the pioneering of practically every major enterprise known to man—particularly in the field of transportation.

Transcontinental Air Transport carried on. It trained personnel; it developed its own airway system; it made detailed studies of meteorological conditions; it conducted extensive surveys in the field of communications; it developed terminal facilities along the route; and it convinced an ever-increasing number of people that air travel was here to stay. Transcontinental Air Transport was not alone in developing the central transcontinental route. Shortly before their operations were started Western Air Express began flying express and passengers between Los Angeles and Kansas City.

Western Air Express was a real pioneer in every sense of the word, having flown mail between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles since 1926, and having been the first line in the country to operate a scheduled air service for passengers without mail (Los Angeles to San Francisco).

During the latter part of 1929 and first part of 1930 these two lines vied with each other for all the passenger and express business that was available. The financial result was, of course, that the two lines had to split the available traffic revenue and consequently lost more money than they might have otherwise. However, one constructive result of this duplication of effort was that twice as much experience and knowledge of operations along the central route was gained as might have been otherwise.

With operating backgrounds as described in the foregoing, representatives of Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air went to what in reality was one of the most constructive conferences ever held as far as the development of air transportation in the United States is concerned. This is true notwithstanding the fact that it has been used as a smoke screen behind which our domestic air-mail system has been crucified, together with those who were responsible for making it the best in the world. These representatives went, just as they did to a conference called last August by Mr. Farley, because they had been invited by the Postmaster General for the purpose of discussing mutual problems. They were informed at that meeting that it was the intention of the Postmaster General to provide two new transcontinental routes to be known as the "central transcontinental" and the "southern transcontinental." They were also advised that these two routes were to be competitive with each other and with the original transcontinental route, which was already in operation.

Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express already had substantial investments in portions of the central route. Neither one of them had sufficient equipment or personnel to operate the entire route alone, and it was both logical and in the public interest that they should use their combined resources and experience in this new undertaking. At the time they made their agreement it was not known to their representatives whether the route would be established by the Postmaster General under his power to make extensions and consolidations, or whether it would be put up for competitive bidding. When the Postmaster General subsequently decided to call for bids, these two companies submitted a joint bid for that route. By so pooling their resources, all the experience and pioneering efforts of both companies were utilized in the further development of the air-rail transcontinental service over the central transcontinental route into an all-air service.

Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express further decided that it would be necessary that they purchase from Aviation Corporation stock which that company owned in Western Air. The reason for this was that Aviation Corporation intended to bid on the southern transcontinental, and the holding of a controlling interest in Western Air would be a violation of the Clayton Act, as well as of the announced principle of the Postmaster General that he desired all three of the transcontinental routes to be competitive. They further decided that it would be advantageous to purchase from Aviation Corporation certain hangar properties in Tulsa, through which the central route would go. These are the simple facts of the so-called "Halliburton deal", to which some individuals in the Senate have been able, by great overtaxing of their imaginations, to ascribe wrongful motives.

As already stated Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express were awarded the contract for the central transcontinental route for the reason that they submitted the only responsible bid. It was then in order to form a new operating company to take over the assets of the two companies that would be used in the operation of the entire transcontinental route. Thus Transcontinental & Western Air was formed with 47½ percent of the assets being contributed each by Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air, and the remaining 5 percent by Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. This latter company had done a considerable amount of pioneering work over the Allegheny portion of the route and owned what was, at that time, the best available airport in the Pittsburgh district.

A point to be noted here is that not one of the three stockholders of Transcontinental & Western Air charged the new company one cent for the developing and pioneering efforts they had already expended on the central transcontinental route. Thus, Transcontinental & Western Air started operations with a virtual gift of about $4,000,000, which was the combined operating loss that had already been incurred in pioneering the route over which the company was to fly. Transcontinental & Western Air was not the only beneficiary of the pioneering efforts of its predecessor companies. The Government also benefited. It had had to do its own pioneering on the northern transcontinental and many other routes. In this case, however, all the pioneering losses had been assumed by private capital, and, as a matter of fact, certain airway facilities which had, at the time, a book value of $279,000, were ultimately turned over to the Government by Transcontinental & Western Air for $1.

On October 25, 1930, the first regular scheduled flight was made by Transcontinental & Western Air over air-mail route no. 34. That flight represented a very important milestone in the development of air transport. For the first time, mail could be hauled from coast to coast under one contract, which was a highly desirable step forward from the Government's point of view.

For the first time a passenger could span the entire breadth of the country by air. Likewise, in so doing passengers were being flown over the Alleghanies for the first time in multimotored, radio-equipped airplanes. That flight, in short, represented a tremendous amount of progress from Colonel Lindbergh's first survey flight over the route only 2 short years previously. To illustrate just how great that progress was, the question might be asked those gentlemen who are intent on destroying this great line and forcing its devoted patrons back to the railroads: "How long was it from the time when the first surveying parties went out until the first transcontinental Pullman passenger bought his ticket?"

With a mail contract in hand, Transcontinental & Western Air could have ceased its pioneering efforts. It could have refused to spend any money for experimental work; it could have carried on operations in a manner so as just to meet the minimum requirements of the Post Office Department. It could, in short, have chiseled. If it had done so it might have made money. It chose the harder alternative—it chose to continue spending money for every purpose which might legitimately enable it to provide, ultimately, the acme in air transportation. Therefore Transcontinental & Western Air took up where Transcontinental Air Transport & Western Air had left off.

First of all Transcontinental & Western Air was faced with the necessity of making original installation of most of the necessary ground facilities east of Columbus, since none of the three companies had previously operated over that territory. This meant the equipping of terminals, installation of communications facilities, obtaining of hangar space, and kindred tasks. All of this work required effort and money, but the company went forward, convinced that all efforts expended in building firm foundations would some day be rewarded.

The response of passengers to the new service was most gratifying and about 5,000 were carried on the transcontinental line during the 3 months of operations in 1930. That was big volume at that time and was due purely and simply to the type of service that was being furnished. Practically all operations were in trimotored equipment, manned by two pilots, and in two-way radio communication with the ground at all times. In addition, on some portions of the route, rather than go without, Transcontinental & Western Air was supplying its own airway facilities, pending the time when the Department of Commerce could complete the airway all the way across the country. Such operations were expensive, but they were the best that money could buy, and that was the policy to which the company's officials were committed.

As a result of the foregoing policy, Transcontinental & Western Air's loss for the period from October 1 to the end of 1930 amounted to $680,919. Total operating expenses per mile flown amounted to $1.27, while revenue from mail amounted to only 39 cents per mile flown with mail, and averaged only 16 cents per mile for all mileage flown by Transcontinental & Western Air, while during the same period the Post Office Department paid an average of 90 cents a mile to all operators, including Transcontinental & Western Air. Certainly no relation of revenues to expenses such as that can be considered as a plundering of the Government such as some of our Senators have spoken recently.

Almost simultaneously with the inauguration of the new service the company was met with a further pioneering problem of night flying over the route. Under authority of the Department of Commerce, early in 1931 night operations were commenced west of Kansas City, and a little later were inaugurated east of Kansas City. With the inauguration of night service, another milestone was reached, along the route which Colonel Lindbergh had first blazed back in 1928. This was a 24-hour mail service between Los Angeles and New York—the fastest mail service available, between two points as far apart, anywhere in the world at that time.

However, these milestones that were reached with great regularity were milestones on the road to progress—not on the road to the financial bed of roses in which some individuals have implied all the air lines were lying. The inauguration of night flying meant the necessity of maintaining 24-hour shifts at some stations and further increased communications expenses. Thus, although expenses were reduced from $1.27 a mile to 85 cents a mile, they were still operating at a loss and it amounted to $1,058,000 for the year 1931.

One reason for that loss being so great was that Transcontinental & Western Air—far from being overpaid, as the present Postmaster General would have us believe—was underpaid in 1931 by almost $300,000. That amount represents the difference between what the Post Office Department paid Transcontinental & Western Air and what they should have paid if they had paid rates in accordance with the actual service performed.

Although it was not yet sufficient to offset the difference between mail revenue and operating expenses, which amounted to $2,160,000 in 1931, the response of the public to Transcontinental & Western Air's services was truly remarkable. During 1931 passenger and express revenues were paid to Transcontinental & Western Air in a total of $1,228,000, which was the highest annual figure for commercial revenue that had ever been attained by any air line up to that time. Certainly no stronger evidence of the quality and type of service that was being performed by Transcontinental & Western Air could be asked than that dollars-and-cents stamp of approval by the American public.

Nineteen hundred and thirty-two was in many respects a period of transition for Transcontinental & Western Air. Most of the definitely pioneering work had been completed. What remained was the smoothing off of rough edges, the establishment of permanent operating procedures, and the general coordination of effort. However, this meant no halt in the progress that always had and always has characterized Transcontinental & Western Air as a company and its officials as individuals. The transition, rather, was from pioneering to experimentation. In other words, the basic principles regarding conduct of operations had been established and the order of the day was now the development, expansion, and improvement of those basic principles.

Several notable advances along these lines were made by Transcontinental & Western Air in 1932. The most notable and general was a decided reduction of operating expenses to about 65 cents per mile, the reduction amounting to almost 20 cents per mile, or about 25 percent of the per-mile expenses in 1931. This was due to the full utilization of the company's maintenance base which had been completed at Kansas City in the latter part of 1931. This base is probably the most completely equipped and efficiently operated air transport maintenance and overhaul base to be found anywhere in the world. The efficiency of the base itself and of the men in charge is responsible for the reduction in expenses and successful experimental projects that have been carried on by Transcontinental & Western Air during the last few years.

In addition to bringing about generally more efficient operations, with a consequent reduction of expenses, Transcontinental & Western Air made many other notable steps forward in 1932. A great deal of progress was made in perfecting radio communications. The line led all others in the perfection of devices for the prevention of ice formation on the wings, a situation that had previously been one of the greatest hazards to bad-weather flying. Finally, specifications were drawn up for new equipment and submitted to various manufacturers that they might go ahead with the development of new equipment.

In 1932 the Post Office Department finally recognized the fact that Transcontinental & Western Air was offering the fastest coast-to-coast mail service and started placing through transcontinental mail on Transcontinental & Western Air's ships for the first time. This resulted in a tremendous increase in the volume of mail service rendered by Transcontinental & Western Air, and a total of more than 1,539,000,000 pound-miles were flown at an average cost to the Government of just 2 mills per pound-mile. The latter is the figure which is generally recognized as being the amount of revenue which the Government receives from air mail. The density of mail traffic in 1932 was greater over Transcontinental & Western Air's route than over any other contract mail route in the country.

In spite of the foregoing, Transcontinental & Western Air had its difficulties. Approximately $94,000 in mail revenue was earned in June of 1932, but not paid due to insufficient appropriations. A further handicap under which Transcontinental & Western Air was operating in 1932 was the fact that, although its mail loads were greater than those of any other route, only one through round trip per day with mail and passengers was authorized by the Post Office Department, whereas three through transcontinental trips were authorized for its major competitor, with even more on parts of the line.

The foregoing situation had its effect on 1932 commercial revenues. The line could not afford to operate additional through transcontinental trips without mail revenues, and consequently was forced to see much passenger and express traffic that might have come its way go to its competitor. The result was that revenues from commercial sources declined about $330,000 from the levels of 1931.

The result of the decline in commercial revenues was such that, although per-mile expenses had been reduced by 25 percent, the company was able to reduce its deficit, which had amounted to more than $1,719,000 at the end of 1931, by less than $335,000.

The final major achievement of 1932 was the inauguration of night passenger service on the transcontinental route. This made possible the fastest coast-to-coast passenger service that had ever been offered up to that time.

In 1933 Transcontinental & Western Air continued to reduce its per-mile expenses and thus place itself in a position of being able to make further headway in the reduction of the deficit that had been incurred in its pioneering efforts. In the further reduction of costs the line was eminently successful. Total costs were reduced to 54 cents per total mile flown from 65 cents in the preceding year. This was in spite of the fact that the use of more expensive multimotored equipment was increased as compared with the preceding year.

From a revenue point of view 1933 presented, at the start, hopeful prospects for Transcontinental & Western Air. The 24-hour passenger service was bound to bring increases from that source. Transcontinental & Western Air's leadership in the development of air express was sure to mean some, even though slight in comparison to the total, revenue, and there was every reason to hope that mail revenue would at least equal that of the preceding year.

It was the last hope—concerning reasonable payments from the Post Office Department—that failed to materialize. The first setback came when Transcontinental & Western Air was required by the Post Office Department to surrender its contract and accept a route certificate. This meant an actual cash loss of postal revenue of about 10 cents per mile flown with mail.

The policy of continuing to authorize more mail schedules on the competitive transcontinental line continued in effect in 1933 in spite of the amazing record that Transcontinental & Western Air had made in the preceding year. In addition there was another deficit in June and Transcontinental & Western Air failed to receive more than $53,000 which it had justly earned. Finally, the total appropriation for the fiscal year starting June 1, 1933, was cut to $14,000,000. The combination of the foregoing factors resulted in a decrease in mail revenue from 1932 which amounted to $350,000, for which more service was rendered to the Government.

Although the Post Office Department continued to refuse authorization of additional schedules with mail, Transcontinental & Western Air went ahead and flew additional schedules without mail compensation, but in many cases carried mail gratuitously on those schedules. The result was a response from passenger and express traffic that made possible an increase of $400,000 over the preceding year.

Nevertheless, in spite of the increases in commercial revenue, the offsetting decrease in mail revenues, coupled with the increase in the cost of the additional mileage, resulted in a negligible profit for the year. This profit amounted to less than $130,000, and still left the accumulated deficit at the end of 1933 of $1,254,000.

Two of Transcontinental & Western Air's 1933 accomplishments are particularly noteworthy, in that they stood out above all others and represented entirely new achievements, never before attained by any other air transport company. The most important was the flying, for the first time, of T.W.A.'s Douglas air liner. This airplane, developed by the Douglas Aircraft Co. in conjunction with Transcontinental & Western Air's technical committee, of which Colonel Lindbergh is chairman, showed a performance that astonished even its designers.

The Douglas is capable of handling almost two tons of pay load. It can cruise with that load at 195 miles per hour, using only 75 percent of full throttle. If need be, it can show a top speed of 217 miles per hour. Using just one of its two 700 horsepower motors, it took off from Winslow, Ariz., and flew over the Continental Divide to Albuquerque, N.Mex. Such performance has never yet been equaled and it is doubtful if it soon will be.

The other outstanding achievement of the year was the development of the polar front theory of weather forecasting. This achievement is perhaps somewhat less dramatic and spectacular than the performance of the Douglas, but none the less important to the future of efficient air transport operations. The technical details will not be dwelt upon here. Suffice to say that it has been adopted by the Government and enables pilots to have an infinitely more complete knowledge of what to expect from the weather than ever before.

Before concluding this history of Transcontinental & Western Air, it is felt that a review of some of the phases of its operations over the entire 39-month period from October 1930 through December 1933 will be in order.

During those 39 months Transcontinental & Western Air received slightly less than $7,770,000 in mail revenue. In return for that amount, T.W.A. flew more than 3,451,000,000 pound-miles for the Post Office Department. Thus, its mail service was performed for the Government at the rate of 2 mills per pound-mile, which is the estimated revenue which the Government receives from air mail. No other contract air-mail route in the country has rendered, over the entire period of its contract, as cheap a service and no possible distortion of the facts could describe such a relation between a contractor and the Post Office Department as graft, subsidy, or any of the other libelous adjectives that have been bandied about recently.

More than 100,000 passengers have been carried, along with hundreds of thousands of pounds of express. From these commercial sources, approximately $3,783,000 have been received in revenue, representing a public confidence and patronage enjoyed by few other air lines.

However, the foregoing revenues, coupled with those received from the carrying of the mail, were not sufficient to offset the expenses of a company committed to the rendering of the best available air transport service. The company's officials, looking toward the future, could afford to sacrifice dollars but not progress nor the public demand for progress. Consequently, expenses for the 39 months' period totaled $12,477,000, which, when added to charges not directly applicable to operations, was $1,254,000 in excess of total revenues. A few of the major items that went to make up those total expenses are of interest at this point.

Total salaries and wages paid out during the 39 months' period amounted to almost $5,000,000, which was alone equivalent to more than 60 percent of total mail revenues. However, this large pay roll was not due to any exorbitant salaries paid to officers. As a matter of fact, the highest salary ever paid was $20,000, and that was in 1 year only. In all other years the highest salary paid any individual has been $18,000 and, during 1933, only two officers received higher salaries than those paid the pilots.

Oil companies benefited, during the 39 months of operations, to the extent of $1,400,000, which were expended by Transcontinental & Western Air for gas and oil. Almost $700,000 was paid out for insurance, while more than $1,000,000 was paid for communications expenses. Those are just a few of the major items of expense that must be incurred in the operation of a major transcontinental air line.

No dividends have ever been paid Transcontinental & Western Air's stockholders, nor have any bonuses nor exorbitant salaries been paid its officers. Instead, every cent has been expended in the operation of an air line whose efficiency is second to none. Moreover, every effort has been made to reduce expenses to the lowest possible point that is commensurate with safety, and that Transcontinental & Western Air has made phenomenal progress along such lines is amply illustrated by the fact that total operating expenses were reduced from $1.27 per total mile flown in 1930 to 54 cents in 1933. The fact that Transcontinental & Western Air's deficit at the end of 1933 stood at more than $1,000,000 in spite of that progress in the reduction of costs hardly bears out any charges of plundering the public Treasury.

As for collusion, and as for receiving favors from Postmaster General Brown, the 39 months' record hardly substantiates such accusations. Rather, the record reveals that Transcontinental & Western Air was constantly asking for recognition of what it considered to be its just rights, and more often than not failing to get them. Transcontinental & Western Air asked for through transcontinental mail—and failed to get it until 1932. As many schedules as were flown by the competing transcontinental line were desired, but never obtained. Payment for weight-space actually used in the hauling of mail was claimed, but disallowed. Authorization of service to Chicago and San Francisco was early demanded, but not granted until 1933. Finally, the company was forced to surrender that contract about which so much has been said, and accept a route certificate which meant an immediate reduction in rates amounting to more than 10 percent. That is the summary of Transcontinental & Western Air's actual dealings with Postmaster General Brown, and to any fair mind it must represent a far cry from collusion or connivance.

Two questions remain to be answered before drawing this history to its close: What had Transcontinental & Western Air and its predecessor companies accomplished from their inception down to February 19, 1934? And, what was its position on that day when the last load of mail was flown?

Instead of going into the whole list of Transcontinental & Western Air's accomplishments, it is felt that a list of the company's firsts will be sufficient to impress even the most skeptical with the progress that has been made. Transcontinental & Western Air and its predecessor companies were—

1. The first to fly passengers by air on schedule.
2. The first to offer an air-rail transcontinental passenger service.
3. The first to offer an all-air transcontinetal passenger service.
4. The first to offer a 24-hour coast-to-coast mail service.
5. The first to offer a 24-hour coast-to-coast passenger service.
6. The first to order an entire fleet of transport airplanes completely equipped with the latest of all safety devices.
7. The first to fly, on regular schedule, a transport airplane capable of cruising at approximately 200 miles per hour.

It is a company with a background such as that which certain members of the administration and Congress seem intent on destroying. That they could have such thoughts and intentions is no more reasonable than if they were suddenly to put for naught all the accomplishments of the great transcontinental railroad systems and decide that there should be a reorganization and revamping of those systems. In place of companies such as Transcontinental & Western Air, the gentlemen who have caused the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and sponsored ruinous and vindictive new legislation would set up in the air transport business promoters who have done no pioneering and had no previous experience in this most technical of all forms of transportation.

On February 19, 1934, when Transcontinental & Western Air ceased to carry the mail, it was being run by a group of practical operating men, whose names read like a list of "Who's Who in Aviation." Its president is Richard W. Robbins, who is one of the individuals most responsible for obtaining for his native Pittsburgh the place on the air map of the Nation which that great city deserved. It was his leadership which has led his company to the achievements listed above.

As Mr. Robbins' assistants are two of the country's most famous former service pilots. One is Lt. Com. D. W. Tomlinson, leader of the original Sea Hawks, famous naval air squadron. The other is Lt. Leslie Arnold, one of the Army's round-the-world pilots.

Chairman, and actively so, of the line's technical committee is Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. Supervising public relations is Capt. E. V. Rickenbacker, America's ace of aces during the World War.

In charge of operations is Jack Frye, who has been flying ever since the barnstorming days of the Jennys.

Under these men on February 19 were about 700 other individuals whose business lives were being devoted to the development of a great air transport system. There were about 95 pilots and copilots, the best in the country, all of them veterans, and many of them dating their flying experience back to the war or even before. Caring for the ships of those pilots in every last-minute detail were about 250 skilled mechanics. Keeping communications open, moving, and up to the minute for the pilots and the supervisory personnel were about 75 members of the communications department. Devoted to selling the public the benefits of air travel were about 60 members of the traffic department.

In addition to the foregoing there were clerks, stenographers, and the like, all intent on the operation of what they wished to be the finest air transport system in this country. These 700 individuals were functioning at the time of cancelation as a smooth-running machine with an esprit de corps and morale that could be duplicated nowhere. And then somebody threw the proverbial monkey wrench into the machinery. More than half of the group above described have been necessarily placed on indefinite furlough. Some have added, at a time when reemployment was supposed to be the order of the day, to the ranks of the unemployed. Others, luckier in one sense, perhaps, have been forced into new businesses.

Through the efforts, guidance, and skill of those 700 individuals, the company had averaged more than half a million miles per month in 1933, most of those miles with United States mail. There were 22 ground stations. Twenty radio stations were operated, and the company's own meteorological staff was constantly furnishing up-to-the-minute weather information. The final steps toward the solving of the blind or bad-weather flying problem, were being taken. In short, a major transportation system was functioning with an efficiency and precision that defied duplication.

For the future the stage was set for an even greater efficiency for the rendering of a service which its potential operators had hardly dared dream of a few short years before. Forty-one of Transcontinental & Western Air's Douglas air liners had been contracted for at a total cost of about three and one half million dollars. These ships were to be equipped with the latest of every safety and comfort device known to aeronautics. Before the end of 1934 an overnight coast-to-coast mail and passenger service was to be inaugurated. The public and the aircraft industry was voicing its approval.

Back in July 1929 a trimotored Ford known as the City of Los Angeles had stood ready to be taken off by Colonel Lindbergh on the first transcontinental flight with passengers. Those first passengers arrived in New York about 48 hours later; operations over the central transcontinental route had started.

Less than 5 years after that first flight, on February 18, 1934, to be exact, Capt. E. V. Rickenbacker, in Los Angeles, put in a telephone call for New York. Another City of Los Angeles was fueled and ready to take off for the transcontinental flight, with mail, passengers, and express. "What's the weather?" was the captain's question to Mr. Clover, chief meteorologist for Transcontinental & Western Air. The latter gave his forecast in detail, but the chief point was that a landing must be made at Newark before 3 o'clock of the following afternoon, due to fog and snow conditions that would exist after that time. That left only 15 hours from the scheduled time of departure, and no transport airplane had ever crossed the continent in such time. Captain Rickenbacker made his decision. The City of Los Angeles to be used this time was the first of the new Douglases.

As Transcontinental & Western Air's 700 employees heard, or were told, of the Los Angeles dispatcher's laconic radio message that flight no. 4 was out at 8:56 p.m. Pacific time, ship No. 300, Pilot Frye, Rickenbacker in charge, they saw a dream coming true. All of their efforts, thought, and labor were to reach a climax in this flight. The humblest station porter went home and told his family with all the pride of participation, "The Douglas is on her way."

At 12:58 p.m. eastern time, on February 19, exactly 13 hours 2 minutes and 5 seconds after its take-off, the Douglas settled down on the cinders of Newark Airport. Two hours later the weather at Newark was unflyable, as Meteorologist Clover had predicted, but a dream had been realized.

The climax of Transcontinental & Western Air's history—the climax of operations of that company and its predecessor companies which had resulted in financial losses of more than $5,000,000—had been reached. A new era might have dawned, an era of overnight, coast-to-coast passenger and mail service and an era of recouping the losses on which such progress had been built. However, such was not to be the case, for the mail that came across the continent in but slightly more than half a day was the last transcontinental mail to be carried by Transcontinental & Western Air. It represented an achievement in which the entire operating personnel of the company, as well as the hundreds of thousands of stockholders whose investments are in the companies directly interested in Transcontinental & Western Air might justly be proud, but it was an achievement which our Government ruthlessly ridiculed and condemned.

The foregoing recitation of Transcontinental & Western Air's history leaves just two questions to be asked: Are Congress and the administration going to force the disorganization, disbanding, and disruption of the organization that has compiled such a record of progress? and, Are they going to see Transcontinental & Western Air forced out of business and so faced with the necessity of disposing of the 40 sister ships of the record-breaking Douglas to foreign countries who were quick to take advantage of the wholesale wricking of the air transport system of this country and at once offered to purchase those ships?

The answers to those questions will tell the American public whether the present administration and Congress are going to continue to use aviation as a political football to be kicked about for the edification of political publicity and favor seekers, or whether it is committed to a sponsorship of that type of progress which has been shown by Transcontinental & Western Air and other major air-mail lines.

CHRONOLOGY AND ANNUAL SUMMARIES OF EASTERN AIR TRANSPORT, INC., 1928–33, INCLUSIVE

Eastern Air Transport, Inc., was required to relinquish the financial considerations of its contracts for A.M. 19 and A.M. 25, and to accept in lieu of the revenue so provided lower and diminishing compensation, as detailed by the chronology here presented.

Under the contracts, compensation averaged $2.612 per pound of mail. Under the Watres Act, the average compensation was reduced nearly one fourth, to $2.008 per pound. Applied to the poundage transported since November 30, 1930, the loss imposed on the company by the lower rates amounted to $1,378,309.

CHRONOLOGY AND ANNUAL SUMMARY, 1928

February 28, 1927: Contract for C.A.M. 19 between New York (Hadley Field, N.J.) and Atlanta, Ga., was awarded to Pitcairn Aviation, Inc., upon competitive bidding and pursuant to official advertisement dated December 23, 1926.

The contract rate of pay was $3 per pound, and the distance 792 miles. Service was to be inaugurated not later than 6 months after date of contract.

November 23, 1927: Contract for C.A.M. 25 between Atlanta, Ga., and Miami and Tampa, Fla., was awarded to Pitcairn Aviation, Inc., pursuant to official advertisement dated October 18, 1927.

The contract rate of pay was $1.46 per pound, and the distance 619 miles.

May 1, 1928: Service was inaugurated over C.A.M. 19, a delay having occurred awaiting completion of airway by Department of Commerce.

August 1928: Larger mail planes placed in service, due to reduction of postage rate and consequent increase of cargo.

September 1, 1928: A shuttle service operating between New York and Philadelphia was established.

December 21, 1928: Service was inaugurated on C.A.M. 25 between Atlanta, Ga., and Miami, Fla.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement.

I read from the Evening Star of this afternoon:

BIDS ON AIR MAIL STARTLINGLY LOW—LESS THAN FIFTH OF RATES FORMERLY PAID BY POSTAL DEPARTMENT

The lowest bids ever received for carrying air mail in the United States started postal officials and the Nation's air transport operators today as the Post Office Department began opening bids for 3 months' temporary air-mail contracts.

There were exclamations and whistles of surprise from a jammed crowd of aviation leaders as the bidding dropped below 20 cents per airplane mile, less than a fifth of rates formerly paid and far below the minimum amount on which it was thought a few months ago that an air line could exist.

PICTURE BEING REDRAWN

It became apparent on the face of the early bids that a complete redrawing of the Nation's air-mail picture was in progress, with many of the old air transport lines going down to defeat before "unknowns" in a savage battle for the new air-mail contracts.

The scene as the bids were opened was one of the most dramatic in recent air-mail history. More than 100 representatives of competing companies, some of which were destined to go into oblivion and others to rise to power under the new Post Office Department procedure, occupied every inch of space in the big office of Stephen A. Cisler, general superintendent of the railway- and air-mail services.

Then there is a further statement showing those who were present and the remarkable submission of bids under the advertisement for temporary contracts.

I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the article be printed in the RECORD, without reading, for the information of Senators tomorrow.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of Friday, Apr. 20, 1934]

COMPANIES REPRESENTED

Among those present, in addition to Postmaster General Farley and all the heads of the Post Office Department, were representatives of all the present air transport companies in the country, a number of hastily organized new companies, flying schools which have been reorganized into air lines, and former aviation officials who have sought in vain in the past to get air-mail contracts.

Col. L. H. Britten, who passed out of the air-mail picture following his sentence to jail for contempt of the Senate, was there, together with Ernest Breech, president of North American Aviation; C. W. Cuthell, president of Transcontinental & Western Air; Lester D. Seymour, president of American Airways; Clarence Chamberlain, trans-Atlantic flyer, and others.

Meantime, while the Senate was getting ready to debate the air mail bill, which would provide for a congressional commission to study the whole aviation situation, Senator BLACK, Democrat, of Alabama, announced that officers of the International Mercantile Marine Corporation would be summoned soon for questioning by his investigating committee.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPING READ

Discussion of the International Marine came up in the Senate after Senator ROBINSON, Republican, of Indiana, had read a newspaper clipping charging that Kermit Roosevelt, who was on the Astor yacht Nourmahal with President Roosevelt recently, had received radiograms from the steamship company giving him instructions as to what to tell the President.

Answering a question by ROBINSON, BLACK said he would be glad to call Kermit Roosevelt, who is vice president of the line, or Astor, whom ROBINSON called a large stockholder, and permit the Indiana Senator to question them.

ROBINSON asked BLACK whether it was true that the committee had copies of the messages purported to have been sent to Kermit Roosevelt. BLACK did not answer the question directly, but asserted that an attempt was being made to convert the committee into a semipolitical body for the purpose of delaying its inquiry.

Investigation into the affairs of the International Mercantile Marine would have already been under way, he added, if the course of the inquiry had not been "diverted."

OLD LINES REORGANIZED

The opening of the bids today revealed that the country's old air-mail lines, whose contracts were canceled 2 months ago, appear under new names, which indicated the reorganizations they have made to comply with the Post Office Department's action.

Eastern Air Transport, operating through Washington from New York to Miami, was active in the bidding as "Eastern Airlines, Inc." Its bids, on routes far outside its present field, at a figure of 19 cents a mile, came as the first major surprise.

On its present route from New York to Miami through Washington, a distance of 1,200 miles, Eastern Airlines bid 29 cents per mile, its officials not anticipating serious opposition in an area which has been swept clear of independent operators. On the route from Chicago to Jacksonville, Fla., however, Eastern bid 19 cents. In a third bid it offered to carry mail from New York to New Orleans by way of Washington and Atlanta for 19 cents.

United Airlines, one of the largest air transport systems in the country, was heavily underbid by a number of competitors on the Great Northern transcontinental route and Midwestern lines. Officers of the company have said that unless they have air-mail contracts, they may be forced out of business. Their bids ranged from 33 to 39½ cents per mile.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—THE SILVER QUESTION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of this morning. I think Senators will generally agree with me that the newspaper correspondents who are with us from day to day fairly report our proceedings and seek to convey accurate opinions where opinions are expressed respecting matters transpiring in the Senate and in Washington and in Government agencies. I pay tribute to the accuracy and sincerity of representatives of the press whose duties bring them into contact with the work of the Senate.

It is very seldom I have had occasion to complain of unfair or inaccurate reports or statements appearing in the press which emanated from their representatives in Washington; but I do complain of and denounce a statement appearing in the paper to which I have referred. The headlines of the article are in large type, and they and the article in part are as follows:

SILVER GROUP SNUBS BID OF ROOSEVELT TO COMPROMISE—SENATORS ASKED TO WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE, SEND EXCUSES; NOTHING TO BE GAINED BY TALK, THEY SAY—BLOC LEADERS PLAN MONETIZATION BILL—FALLING PRICES ARE CITED BY BORAH TO SHOW NEED FOR ACTION NOW; "HALFWAY MEASURES" OPPOSED

President Roosevelt was scheduled to meet a delegation of silver Senators this afternoon to try to compromise proposed silver legislation, but the engagement was canceled when several Senators called up and asked to be excused. The stated reason was that the Senators wanted to stay on Capitol Hill for the vote on the sugar control bill. Two leaders of the silver bloc said tonight, however, that since both sides had taken irreconcilable positions on silver legislation nothing was to be gained by a conference.

Leaders of the silver bloc have satisfied themselves that the most the President will accept is permissive silver legislation. In their determination not to be turned aside again by such a compromise, they see no room for effective negotiation and are for forcing the issue on the President by passing the legislation up to him in the strongest form that can command a majority in Congress.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING, Democrat, of Utah, is attempting conciliatory moves in an effort to avert a show-down. Most of his silver colleagues think it was he who arranged today's scheduled White House conference and that the object was to give the President a chance to use direct influence on the silver bloc.

EXCUSE TO STAY AWAY WELCOMED

The advocates of direct action, therefore, welcomed a reason for asking to be excused from going down to the White House today. The pendency of the sugar bill before the Senate was all that they needed. Senators BORAH; WHEELER; and PAT HARRISON, Democrat, of Mississippi, were among those telephoning the White House their inability to attend.

Senators BORAH and WHEELER made it plain to colleagues tonight that they did not want to be put in the position of asking an interview with the White House on the subject and preferred not to attend after having made up their minds not to yield. Apparently, they apprehended that Senator KING had asked the Presidential interview in the name of the silver aggregation. By the unwritten rule that a Presidential invitation is a Presidential command, both would, however, attend such conference if directly requested by the White House.

Mr. President, the article is inaccurate, misleading, filled with insinuations and innuendoes, and reflects a bias and prejudice that I think reprehensible. In the first place, the silver group did not snub the bid of Roosevelt to compromise. The statement is untrue. The President made no bid of any kind, and no proposition to the Senators.

The writer of the article knows, or should know, as the representatives of the press here know, that several months ago some 27 Senators, who believed that there should be legislation to remonetize silver and to make of it primary money, and who desired legislation to effectuate that result, met in Washington to consider the questions involved. A resolution was adopted at the meeting in conference declaring that the remonetization of silver was the objective sought and that legislation should be secured to accomplish that end.

Subsequently a number of informal discussions took place among Senators who had participated in the meeting referred to. Two or three weeks ago 24 of the Senators who had participated in the first meeting again met for the purpose of considering the silver situation. At that meeting a resolution was adopted reaffirming the position taken by the Senators at the first meeting with reference to the remonetization of silver. It was decided that a committee should be named—I will not call it a steering committee—to consider various questions which would arise respecting silver legislation and to confer with Senators and keep them advised with respect to the action of the House and the chances for silver legislation, and finally that upon the return of the President the committee should confer with him and present the views of the conference respecting silver legislation.

I happened to be selected as chairman of the committee, with authority to name the other members of the same. The committee consisted of seven; and I was directed, by the Senators, to confer with the President upon his return and arrange for a conference at which the committee referred to, and such other persons as the President might indicate, might have opportunity to present to him their views on the silver question and with him consider legislation dealing with this question.

Last Tuesday I had the honor of meeting the President, and stated that members of the committee would be glad to talk with him in regard to the silver question. He indicated that he would be glad to confer upon the matter. I conferred with one of his secretaries for the purpose of arranging for the conference, and the next day I was informed that upon the following day, which was yesterday, at 3 o'clock, the President would meet with those who desired to discuss the silver question with him.

Senators know, and the newspapermen knew, that a very important measure was under consideration in the Senate. The sugar bill is one which has provoked a great deal of controversy; but it was generally conceded that if any benefits were to be derived this year by the sugar producers from this measure it should be promptly enacted.

About 2 o'clock, yesterday afternoon, it became apparent that the sugar bill could not be passed in time for the members of the committee to meet with the President at 3 o'clock, if they were to remain upon the floor during the consideration of the bill. I may add that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], one of the members of the committee, was deeply interested in the sugar bill. The Senators from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and I were also concerned in the passage of the bill. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], had the bill in charge, and he was to participate in the silver conference. Senator WHEELER, who was detained from the Senate on account of illness, was also interested in the passage of the sugar bill.

I called the White House about half past 2 and conveyed to the President the information that it would be impossible for the committee to be there at 3 o'clock unless we should leave the floor before the bill had passed. The President indicated that the sugar bill was one of importance, and that he would postpone the conference to such time as was agreeable. I suggested that we probably would finish the sugar bill by 3:30 and that we could meet with him at 4 o'clock. He advised me that that would be entirely agreeable.

At half past 3 it became apparent that the sugar bill would not be passed before probably 5 or 6 o'clock. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and I then called the White House and advised the President that the bill would not be passed in time for us to keep the appointment with him at 4 o'clock. The President responded that the importance of the sugar measure was such that it would be quite proper for those who desired to confer with him, and who were interested in the sugar bill, to remain until it had passed. He further stated that he would meet with the committee, and such others as might be invited in, at 12 o'clock on Saturday—the 21st instant. Thereupon it was agreed that the conference which had been called for 3 o'clock, and then deferred until 4 o'clock, should be held on Saturday at 12 o'clock.

There was no snub of the President by the "silver group", or by any person. We asked the President for an opportunity to confer with him respecting this important monetary question, and he, in a proper and gracious way, granted the request and fixed the time for the conference.

I should not have taken the trouble to mention this matter except for the unfair, inaccurate, and improper statements, and particularly that the silver group "snubs" the President. I think a paper of the standing of the Herald Tribune would deeply regret publishing such a statement, an article so unfair and unjust as the one to which I have called attention.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, 15, 20, 23, 24, 25, 33, 38, and 39.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 21, 27, 29, 31, 34, 35, 42, and 45, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,522,897"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the the following: "Provided, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the payment of passenger transportation at a rate in excess of the lowest through rate or combination of rates available for the type of transportation used"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "not to exceed five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report. The changes are so trifling that I can see no reason for postponing action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask to have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York state what was done with the provision appropriating $10,000,000 for the use of the President in reference to aviation?

Mr. COPELAND. It was cut in two—in the middle—reduced to $5,000,000, after conference with the President. Three million dollars of the amount is to be used to procure new airplanes; $1,000,000 is to be used for fuel; and $1,000,000 is to be used for the investigation which is proposed by the President. This matter was discussed with the President by the chairman of the conference committee of the House, the Director of the Budget, and myself.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, is the agreement a complete one?

Mr. COPELAND. It is a complete agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY NOT HOSTILE TO WOOL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this morning I received from Hon. Leslie A. Miller, Governor of the State of Wyoming, a telegram in which he states that he has had advices from Casper that wool buyers representing certain Philadelphia and Boston concerns are undertaking to beat down the price of wool in Wyoming, using as their argument the proposed reciprocal tariff agreement, stating that wool is one commodity which will suffer. Such wool, the Governor goes on to say, as has been sold in Wyoming has brought prices as high as 33 cents per pound; but now these buyers are talking about 20-cent wool.

I understand from Representative TAYLOR of Colorado and from other Representatives of wool-growing States that similar messages have been received from other communities. The same representations that are being made in Wyoming have been made by wool buyers in Colorado, and, I assume, are being made elsewhere.

Last month similar charges were made. It was stated then that the Secretary of Agriculture was opposed to the wool industry, and would undertake to discriminate against it. At the same time reports were being circulated that he was opposed to the beet-sugar industry and that the sugar bill which was then in contemplation would, if enacted, tend to destroy the beet-sugar industry. In other words, the effort was being made to inspire fear throughout the country among those interested in both the beet-sugar and the wool-growing industries.

I communicated with the Secretary of Agriculture at that time, and received personal assurances from him that no such program with respect to wool, or, indeed, with respect to beets, was in the contemplation of anybody in the Department of Agriculture. I communicated with the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, who has been at work upon the preliminaries of the reciprocal tariff agreement, and I received the same assurances from him.

Today, on receipt of these additional telegrams, I conferred with Secretary Hull, and asked him to send me a formal statement. This I have just received from the Secretary. It reads as follows, dated April 20, 1934:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 20, 1934.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just received your message to the effect that eastern wool buyers in Wyoming are undertaking to beat down the price of wool by the representation that the Federal Government in entering into reciprocity commercial agreements will so affect the wool situation as to necessitate heavy cuts in domestic wool prices.

This sort of statement is wholly irresponsible and unjustified. In the first place no discussion whatsoever has been had here about wool, nor has there been any negotiation concerning any other specific commodity apart from the very narrow range of items which entered into our discussions with Cuba. Secondly, the broad and definite policy on which all reciprocity trade agreements will rest is that of mutual and equal profitableness to the countries participating. Thirdly, it must be apparent that after the passage of the tariff bargaining bill an effective organization freely accessible to all interests concerned must be developed. Ample time will be required for the making of necessary studies and for carrying on exploratory conversations with various governments before steps can be taken for the negotiation of definitive agreements.

Sincerely yours, CORDELL HULL.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senate.

I have advised those who have communicated with me from Wyoming today that, in my judgment, the wool producers should not permit themselves to be intimidated by what is obviously an attempt upon the part of the wool buyers to drive a hard bargain.

There is politics in business as well as in government. It is only natural for the purchasers of wool to do what they can to obtain a low price, but I am sorry that without justification they are willing to go so far as they are apparently going in their efforts to spread uncertainty and fear among the producers.

I may call attention to the fact that there is nothing revolutionary about the idea of reciprocity. President McKinley was urging such a policy at the time of his assassination.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks there shall be published in the RECORD a letter which I wrote to the Governor of Wyoming last March with respect to the misinterpretation, if not the misrepresentation, which was then being made of the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POSITION OF SECRETARY WALLACE

MARCH 10, 1934.

Hon. L. A. MILLER,
Governor of Wyoming, Cheyenne, Wyo.

DEAR LES.: A few days ago you wrote advising me that you had been told that Secretary Wallace had issued a statement to the effect that the tariff policy of the President would be hostile to the wool industry. The statement came as a great surprise to me, because I knew that no spokesman for the administration had made any statement whatsoever with respect to any particular industry. To make certain, however, I communicated immediately with Secretary Wallace, and as I advised you on March 7, he told me personally not only that he had never made such a statement, but that he never even contemplated making it.

Since I wrote you I have discovered what I think is the source of the report. Late in February Secretary Wallace wrote an article entitled "America Must Choose!" This article was widely published in many newspapers and has now been issued in pamphlet form. Yesterday on the floor of the Senate, Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, who, by the way, I have found to be one of the ablest of the Republican leaders, had occasion to comment upon this article. He said:

"Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture writes this amazingly candid booklet entitled 'America Must Choose', and I want to commend his candor. He gives us three routes which we may follow. One is nationalistic, another is internationalistic, and the third is a middle ground between the two. He approaches the problem from the middle ground with leanings that are frankly internationalistic. I think I would approach the problem from the middle ground with leanings that are nationalistic. But certainly he is right that America must choose."

This is a correct analysis of the Secretary's article which, as the Senator said, was a frank discussion of the economic problems which confront this country and a statement of the widely divergent courses which may be followed. He discussed the philosophy and methods of nationalism. He then discussed the philosophy and methods of internationalism, and finally he discussed the philosophy and methods of what he called the middle course, which he himself favors.

In describing the readjustments which the international policy—not the middle course, observe—would entail, he said: "This will involve a radical reduction in tariffs that might seriously hurt certain industries and a few kinds of agricultural businesses, such as sugar-beet growing and flax growing. It might also cause pain for a while to wool growers and to farmers who supply material for various edible oils. I think we ought to face that fact. If we are going to lower tariffs radically, there may have to be some definite plan whereby certain industries or businesses will have to be retired. The Government might have to help furnish means for the orderly retirement of such businesses and even select those which are thus to be retired."

This quotation is undoubtedly the source of the report which reached you, but I want to call your attention to the fact that it was not a statement of policy approved by the Secretary. It was no more representative of his view than were the statements contained in his discussion of the meaning and effect of the nationalistic policy. For example, in discussing nationalism, he said:

"If we finally go all the way toward nationalism it may be necessary to have compulsory control of marketing, licensing of plowed land, and base and surplus quotas for every farmer of every product for each month in the year. We may have to have Government control of all surpluses, and a far greater degree of public ownership than we have now. It may be necessary to make a public utility out of agriculture and apply to it a combination of an Esch-Cummins Act and an Adamson Act. Every plowed field would have its permit sticking up on its post."

It is perfectly apparent that a quotation of the first statement without reference to the context would constitute a misrepresentation of the Secretary's attitude. Particularly is this true since in describing what he calls the middle course the Secretary in plain words described both nationalism and internationalism as improbable extremes. Let me call your attention to this statement by the Secretary:

"No matter how fervently nationalist or free-trade in principle our planned future policy may be, the jostle of world circumstances will be almost certain to take us across middle ground. With the modern world as it is, absolutely free trade is a dream probably never to be realized; and so is a completely independent national economy. Somewhere between these improbable extremes lies the proper course; and that is the course we are following now. But the trouble is that we have at present no markers set up to guide us. With great spirit, but with no commonly understood destination, we are veering off this way and that as obstacles arise. A middle course need not be indefinite. It can be clear-cut and uncompromising if we choose to make it so. To begin with, we can set up tentative markers and discuss the gain and the cost of a resolute march along that line. And as a result of our discussion we can far more definitely reset the markers in accord with the common will for the long pull."

I greatly regret that although Secretary Wallace in the clearest possible language showed that he did not favor either the nationalistic or the internationalistic program, there has been a disposition to quote his description of a policy which he specifically rejected in such a manner as to leave the impression that he actually favored it.

Such tactics are fair neither to the Secretary nor to the people and cannot be too severely condemned.

We may not agree even with the middle-course policy which the Secretary has described, and it is perfectly proper to enter into debate with him with respect to the merits of the course which he actually espouses, but it is altogether improper to attribute to him the policies which he described only for the purpose of saying that he did not support them.

I am very glad, therefore, to say to you again that Secretary Wallace has not made any statement of any purpose to injure the wool industry.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as a kind of postscript to what the Senator from Wyoming has said, I merely wish to remark that this goes to show how very ill-advised it is even to take up a proposal to disturb all the tariffs. I sympathize with the people in Wyoming, and I do not for a moment condone the attitude of the wool buyers. However, it just goes to show what we might expect when there is a proposal to unsettle all the tariff arrangements and to vest somebody with the authority to negotiate trade treaties over all the world.

Mr. President, this is a typical example. Suppose the wool buyer is right in his calculations. He might be; he could be. We do not know what wool is going to bring; we do not know what sugar is going to bring; we do not know what oil is going to bring. This whole thing was started before we went into power on this side of the Chamber, by which the ipsi dixit of an Executive can make and unmake the taxes of a country, and now it is to be extended by reciprocal tariff agreements, which might bind us for as long as 3 years' time. We saw the lack of wisdom in what we did. This matter brought up by the Senator is typical of what might be expected to come even from a move in that direction.

I hope Senators will take notice of what they may expect. I hope that at an early date this tariff move, which I consider very ill-advised, will be withdrawn, after a consideration of what has already resulted from it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at this late hour I shall not attempt a reply to the observations made by the Senator from Louisiana. I may say, however, in partial answer only, that I cannot conceive of reciprocal tariff arrangements or agreements which would be disadvantageous to the American people. The very term connotes benefits and advantages to the United States and postulates enlarged foreign markets for our surplus products. President Roosevelt has given evidence of his solicitude for agriculture, and his determination, so far as is within his power, to advance commodity prices to the advantage of those engaged in industry, as well as those engaged in every form of labor.

The legislation which he has suggested has had back of it the purpose to increase prices. It is absolutely necessary, with the stupendous debt resting upon the United States Government and the American people, approximating $200,000,000,000, that there should be a great advancement in the prices of commodities.

A commission appointed a few years ago by Great Britain, consisting of some of her ablest statesmen and business men, after an exhaustive examination, made a report that there must be an increase in commodity prices to avert universal bankruptcy. It is certain that neither the President nor his advisers would adopt any policy, or enter into any agreement, that will not have for its object the increase in business, the advancement in commodity prices, and the augmentation of the wages of labor.

Just one word supplemental to what was said by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. I have had a number of communications today and yesterday from Chicago, and from points west, to the effect that those who were buying lambs in Chicago and in other places are making similar representations to those being made by the wool buyers; namely, that the price of lambs must fall. They are offering less for lambs today, and were yesterday, than they were offering a few days ago. It seems to be a conspiracy upon the part of a number of wool buyers and purchasers of livestock to depreciate prices in order to enhance the profits of those who are disseminating these unwarranted and unfounded statements. In the stock markets rumors were set on foot and misleading statements were sent out to depress the market value of stocks. Reports today would be made to depress stocks and thus secure profits, and other reports tomorrow would be broadcasted to give a fictitious market value to stocks in order that illegitimate profits might be made.

I condemn those who are disseminating these unfounded statements. They are calculated to deprive farmers, the wool growers, and livestock producers of property or profits to which they are entitled.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wonder if my friend from Utah will permit me to ask a question.

Let us assume there might accidentally be an honest wool or cotton buyer, or the buyer of something else. If the Senator were in his shoes, I was wondering if he would not be very meticulous at this time, so as to know just exactly what he could depend upon, if there were impending overnight changes in tariff rates and adjustments of treaties that might lower or raise the rates as much as 50 percent?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in the condition of flux in the economic life of the United States, as well as of the world, no one can predict with any degree of certainty what the situation economically or industrially will be tomorrow, or next week, or next year. No one can predict, Mr. President, what the effect of any particular act of Congress may be upon the economic or industrial situation of our country. But answering, I hope categorically, the question of the Senator from Louisiana, I will say that I should not hestitate to buy wool or cotton tomorrow or today, if I were engaged in the business, because of any statements in regard to reciprocal tariffs or by reason of other propaganda being given currency for the purpose of depressing prices. I think the curve is upward. We are rising out of the depression. If the policies of the administration—or at least most of them—are carried into effect, I believe that a brighter day will soon dispel the depression through which we have been passing.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not believe my very undeveloped mind grasped what the Senator said as being an answer to my question. What I am trying to ascertain from my friend from Utah—because I am sure he is going to vote as I am going to vote, to put this thing into a swinging balance—is, assuming he were a wool buyer, what does the Senator believe he could depend upon, and would the Senator know where he was in his purchases? That is the point I am inquiring about.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think my answer a moment ago ought to have been satisfactory to the Senator from Louisiana. I said, in substance, that if I were a wool buyer, or if I were purchasing cotton or purchasing wool, I would buy today or I would buy tomorrow with the assurance that I would make a profit upon the investment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana. The Senator indicates that he thinks some disadvantage to America may be involved in the proposal to grant to the President of the United States power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements. I should be very glad if anyone would point out any more extensive power contained in the proposed act than is contained in the existing law, under section 338, which gives the President of the United States authority, without being bound by anybody, to mark existing tariff duties up or down 50 percent.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is very simple. The difference is that the action taken under the proposed legislation would remain in force for a period of 3 years. At this time the President must act in accordance with what he thinks is the desire of Congress. Otherwise his action would result in a change by Congress. If he should act in making reciprocal agreements, they would continue in force for a period of 3 years. Then the condition would be so static and so much harm would have been done in that time that a change by Congress would not do very much good.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, under the present law a change cannot be made until there has been an investigation by the Tariff Commission. Under the proposed law authority is given to the President to make a change without a hearing having been had. There is a vast difference between the two.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Ohio is very evidently referring to section 336 of the existing law, which requires a finding of fact by the Tariff Commission.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. But under section 338 no finding of fact by the Tariff Commission is required at all.

Mr. FESS. Section 338 of the present law?

Mr. CLARK. Of the present law. That is a provision for which the Senator from Ohio voted.

Mr. FESS. The Senator says section 338 permits action without a hearing?

Mr. CLARK. Absolutely.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be glad to have the Senator read the act; and if I am in error about it, to have him come back and confound me.

COINAGE OF SILVER

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Franklyn Waltman, Jr., in regard to the silver question, which appeared in the Washington Sunday Post of April 15, 1934.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington (D.C.) Post, Sunday, Apr. 15, 1934]

CAPITAL RESOUNDS WITH SILVER TALK OF THE "GREAT COMMONER"—ISSUE BRYAN RAISED COMES TO LIFE AGAIN—REGAINS ROLE IN POLITICS AFTER 38 YEARS—SENATOR BURTON WHEELER METAL'S NEW SPONSOR

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Perhaps the most remarkable phenomenon to occur in American politics is the recrudescence of the silver issue almost 38 years after it was believed the matter had been disposed of definitely and for all time.

When William Jennings Bryan was defeated for the Presidency in 1896 by a margin of 500,000 votes, after waging his campaign for free coinage of silver, and was more decisively rejected by the American people 4 years later, it might have been supposed that never again would a serious attempt be made to give the white metal a primary place in the Nation's monetary structure.

Events in the years which followed this double defeat of Bryanism and free silver seemed to confirm that impression. The Nation became more firmly wedded than ever before to a single-gold standard. As a result of Bryan's venture the Democratic Party was divided and became a minority party until dissention split the Republicans in 1912. Even after the 8 glorious years of Wilson's new freedom, the taint of being unorthodox in money matters stuck to the Democrats.

From the turn of the century until the pillars of economic stability were jarred during the current depression there appeared to be no party and no group of men, except a small handful from the silver-producing States, which would risk the odium of waging the fight to restore silver to the status of money. Silver remained a commodity, like wheat and potatoes.

CRY OF EASY MONEY RAISED IN WEST

But as prices fell to their lowest levels in modern times, as more millions of men than ever before in this country trod the streets seeking work which did not exist, as increasing thousands of homes and farms were sold to satisfy mortgages and taxes, and as banks commenced to fall like tenpins before the roll of the ball, the cry for easy money and more money came out of the West, as it did 50 years ago.

For the first time in 40 years a vote was taken in January 1933, in the Senate, on a proposal of Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, the Montana Democratic successor to the Great Commoner of Nebraska. The novelty of WHEELER's proposal to a generation which came to maturity after the election of 1896 attracted attention, but few took his movement seriously.

Nor was his following of serious proportions. His silver amendment, offered to the Glass banking act, was rejected by the overwhelming vote of 56 to 18. Its supporters, as was to be expected, represented the silver-producing States, and it would have been political suicide for them to have voted otherwise.

The Congress in which that vote was taken came to an end and President Roosevelt called into special session the first new deal Congress. In this body were men newly elected by the same cohorts of laborers, toilers in the mines, crossroads merchants, and farmers that had stood behind Bryan when he cried out that "You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold."

MISERY WAS BLAMED ON ECONOMICS

In this new Congress was a House of Representatives and about one third of the Senate that had been elected by the votes of people whose misery was blamed on all the orthodox ways of finance and economics. They wanted change. They wanted higher prices for the products of their farms and their mines. Those in the city wanted work.

Although most of the Representatives of these people in Congress were elected on a platform which promised a sound currency, they turned their faces to monetary experimentation as the first remedy for the distress of their constituents. This was not strange in view of history, because since the colonial days of Daniel Shay's rebellion in Massachusetts, those in economic distress in this country have cried out for monetary reform, for a scaling down of debts, and a leveling of the position of intrenched wealth.

Moreover, the debt-burdened plowman of the West and South had never been convinced that Bryan was wrong. The peerless orator and that Tiberius Gracchus of the West, who had shocked the best people of the East, left a lasting impression on the hearts of agrarian toilers. Remonetization of silver was no heresy to them. They believed it was salvation.

With the agricultural adjustment farm relief bill before the Senate, Senator WHEELER, on April 17, 1933, again put forward his proposal for remonetization of silver. The vote this time—just 3 months after the first vote—was 48 to 33. He was again defeated, but this time he knew that the trend of sentiment was toward him and substantial action to rehabilitate silver.

Nothing that has happened in Congress since the new deal started so apparently alarmed the administration as did this silver vote. Within 2 days it came forward with the proposal, known as the "Thomas inflation amendment", which gave the President wide discretionary powers to devaluate the gold dollar, issue greenbacks in an amount up to $3,000,000,000, to expand Federal Reserve currency by a like amount and to remonetize silver.

It was the first victory of the monetary inflation group and for a time it stilled the silver bloc in Congress. This group, however, was not satisfied, particularly when the President failed to exercise the discretionary powers given to him. In beating back the silver bloc, the administration had urged that domestic action be withheld until an international agreement could be reached for the benefit of silver.

At the London Monetary and Economic Conference, the only objective reached was an agreement on silver. The 66 governments represented at that conference agreed to abandon the policy of and practice of melting up or debasing silver coins and to refrain from any action which would depreciate the value of silver. The present low price of silver is blamed not on overproduction, but oversupply brought about through governments, chiefly India, melting down their silver money stocks.

A separate agreement was entered into by China, India, and Spain, as holders and users of large quantities of silver, on the one hand, and by Australia, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and the United States, on the other, as large producers of silver. The first group of governments agreed that until January 1, 1938, they would not dispose of, or would limit their disposition of, silver derived from the debasement of silver coins.

The group of producing nations agreed that until the same date their governments would absorb from the mines in their countries an aggregate of 35,000,000 ounces annually. The United States agreed to absorb and keep off the world market during the period 24,421,410 ounces of silver annually.

President Roosevelt last December made this agreement effective in an Executive order which provided, in effect, for the purchase of all newly mined silver in this country at a price equivalent to 64½ cents an ounce or about 50 percent greater than the then prevailing market quotation or one half of the statutory monetary price of $1.29. He directed that the silver thus purchased should be paid for with newly issued silver certificates.

Two months prior to this action, the President embarked on a more sweeping monetary experiment. He inaugurated the purchase of gold in the domestic and foreign markets at prices more than 50 percent in excess of the statutory price of $20.67 an ounce. The objective was to enhance all commodity prices.

But commodity prices failed to respond in proportion to the increase in the gold price. The silver bloc in the Senate prepared to renew their fight when Congress convened in January. Then came the December Executive order in respect to silver. Although hailed at the time as a great boon for silver and aid to increased trade with China, this action likewise failed to satisfy the silverites—because prices failed to move upward with the rapidity expected.

The new session of Congress was not many days old when the President sent to it his gold devaluation bill, reducing the gold content of the dollar to a point where the yellow metal had a value of $35 an ounce. The bill nationalized the country's gold stocks and ended permanently the redemption of currency in gold coin.

When the bill came before the Senate, Senator WHEELER decided to strike for silver. This time he proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury be required to purchase silver at the market price, starting at 25,000,000 ounces a month and continuing on a lesser degree until 750,000,000 ounces of silver were in the Treasury or the market price reached the equivalent of 16 to 1 with gold.

Administration leaders pleaded with the Senate to delay taking action on silver until the results of the gold policy could be measured. But despite that plea and all that was being done in the bill to make easy money, the Wheeler amendment was defeated by a margin of only two votes. The result was 43 to 45, and since every Member was accounted for, if pairs are considered, the vote was 47 to 49.

BILL MAY PASS UNLESS STOPPED

Since that vote was cast it has been the general opinion of observers on Capitol Hill that soon or late Congress would pass a silver bill of sweeping proportions, unless President Roosevelt, like Grover Cleveland, squarely met the issue, or unless economic recovery took a sudden turn for the better and prices showed marked improvement.

In this recital of the development of the silver movement on Capitol Hill reference has been made only to what has taken place in the Senate. Although sentiment for liberal silver legislation is greater in the House than the Senate, the latter body, free from restrictive rules, has been able to force action.

The House, however, contributed to the movement several weeks ago, when through the influence of Speaker HENRY T. RAINEY, it adopted by a vote of 2 to 1 the Dies bill, which provided for the sale of American farm surpluses abroad in exchange for silver at a premium not in excess of 25 percent of the metal's market price. For the silver bullion received from abroad the Secretary of the Treasury would issue silver certificates.

The Senate Agricultural Committee has taken this bill, rewritten its original provisions to clarify and simplify them and has added to the measure a provision for the nationalization of all silver in the country and for the purchase of 50,000,000 ounces monthly, wherever it may be found, at the market price until the latter reaches $1.29 an ounce or the commodity price index reaches the 1926 average.

PLACES UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON DOUBLE CURRENCY BASE

Redemption of all currency in silver is provided by the bill, thus placing the United States on a silver standard, since its currency is not now redeemable in gold. The old Bryan ratio with gold of 16 to 1 has been abandoned and, instead, a ratio slightly in excess of 26 to 1 with the newly devaluated gold dollar would be established by this bill. The number of silver grains in the dollar would be kept unchanged.

The section of the bill for nationalization of silver, a sweeping undertaking, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to take title to all monetary silver bullion domiciled within the United States and its possessions for the public use and general welfare and to pay for this silver not less than the highest world price prevailing, in silver certificates.

How much silver the Treasury would acquire under this provision is not definitely known but it would be several billions of ounces, for which almost as many billions of dollars would be issued in payment, thus almost doubling the currency now in circulation.

In addition the Secretary of the Treasury would be directed by this bill, starting on January 1, 1935, to purchase silver bullion at the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces per month wherever silver shall be procurable, at a price to be fixed by him from time to time.

It is a safe prophecy that this bill will be modified on the floor of the Senate, although it has the unanimous approval of the Senate Agricultural Committee. But after the modification it is almost certain that the bill's provisions will go far beyond anything that one would have dreamed possible a year ago.

Every indication on Capitol Hill points to the enactment by House and Senate of such a bill unless the session is ended before a final vote can be taken or unless President Roosevelt aggressively opposes the measure and uses pressure to whip his party into line. The militant attack made Friday by Speaker RAINEY on opponents of silver legislation reflects the sentiment in the House.

It is not believed that President Roosevelt favors what amounts to a free coinage of silver, or that he is sympathetic with what the silver bloc is trying to do. But it is by no means certain he will come to grips with the advocates of sweeping silver legislation. His actions during the last 15 months have been based on a desire to conciliate and compromise with the silverites and inflationists rather than fight them.

The present situation is analogous to that which existed during the 20 years after the United States ceased the monetization of silver, which culminated in the Bryan fight of 1896. In that earlier period both Republican and Democratic Parties resorted to expediency in dealing with this issue, much as they are doing now.

Heralded throughout the Nation for the remainder of the century as the "crime of 1873", Congress in that year codified the mint laws and omitted all provision for the coining of silver. At the time silver production had suddenly increased while gold production declined. Also about that time the western nations of Europe were abandoning silver as a metallic base.

At all events, the fight over silver soon started. In the years that followed virtually every adverse turn in the affairs of the Nation was laid to the abandonment of silver. In 1873 came the panic caused by the inflation of the Civil War period and for 6 years prices fell. Soon the greenback movement changed into a demand for remonetization of silver.

The situation was somewhat eased by the capital which flowed into the country in the early eighties to build the far-flung railroad empire. But toward the end of the decade, in the Harrison administration, came the first signs of the panic that was finally to break in 1893. The Republicans in control of Congress, to placate the militant free-silver sentiment in their party and as a result of platform straddles on the question, in 1890 passed the Sherman Silver Purchase Act.

GOLD RAN OUT

This measure provided for the purchase by the Treasury of 4,500,000 ounces of silver a month, to be paid for with legal-tender Treasury notes redeemable either in silver or gold. Almost as fast as the notes were issued for silver, they were presented to the Treasury for redemption in gold and it soon became evident that it would be impossible to retain sufficient gold stock to meet the demands.

For a time Grover Cleveland, after he commenced his second term, tried to carry out the Sherman Act but was forced to borrow large sums to purchase gold in order to prevent a financial break-down of the Treasury. He finally found it was an endless chain that had been set in motion to keep the Treasury drained.

Meanwhile the country became panicky. Cleveland called Congress into special session and made repeal of the Sherman Act his first concern. He charged the unfortunate plight of the country was due to the silver-purchase act and declared for "sound money", telling Congress that the Government had no right to injure its people by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states.

ENEMY OF SILVER BLOC

Although denounced by the silverites as "a tool of Wall Street" and "a creature of the British Government", Cleveland refused to compromise with the silver bloc. Using every means at his hand, he brought sufficient pressure to force through Congress repeal of the Sherman Act. But the real struggle was ahead.

Preparing for the fight ahead was Bryan, then a member of the House. Bitterly hostile to Cleveland, Bryan soon became the leader of his party through his magnetism and eloquence. Also in the House was William H. McKinley, also an influential member of the silver bloc but subsequently to abandon that stand when he became the Republican Presidential nominee on a sound-money platform.

As Frank R. Kent in his history of The Democratic Party points out, "It was Cleveland who took the free-silver theory by the throat and forced a show-down. It was his flat-footed, uncompromising opposition to it, his indictment of it as a dangerous and degrading fallacy, and his declaration that it was abhorrent to the sound-money principles of the Democratic Party, that split that party and made it safe for cautious and conviction-less Republican leaders to swing their party to the sound-money side. There isn't any possible doubt that Celeveland, more than any other man, won the sound-money fight, avoided the danger of the free-silver experiment. And, no matter what his course did to his party, it certainly served the country."

BRYAN THE SILVER-TONGUED

Cleveland did all he could to keep his party from jumping into the free-silver chasm. But Bryan, with the holy zeal of a crusader and fanatic, flashed out of the West holding aloft a standard which overjoyed and electrified into action that agrarian West and South, but which struck terror and frenzy into the hearts of the moneyed East.

Bryan was defeated, probably due to the generous use of money contributed by frightened bankers and plutocrats, as some historians contend. Cleveland left the White House, the target of unprecedented scorn and vituperation from members and the press of his own party—"traitor to Democracy", "supine servant of high finance", and "political leper" were mild among the epithets hurled at him. It was thought that at last the American frontier had lost control and that henceforth this country would be an industrial and financial Nation.

But the specter of Bryan and silver has again appeared to haunt the forces of Democracy. Thrice it has strode unsuccessfully across the Senate floor. In 15 months the agitation for silver legislation has gained momentum, like a huge snow rolling down a precipice. Those 3 votes are significant—18 to 56; 33 to 48; and 43 to 45. Once again the Democrats find themselves at the crossroads. If the issue is not met now, it will have to be met next year or the year after that.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered to the Vermont Bar Association, Montpelier, October 3, 1933, by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I would not have it understood that I am presenting this address from a political aspect, because I conceive that it supports the policies maintaining the legislation we on this side of the Chamber have presented; but, other than this, because the address is one of a very high order on constitutional law, and serves as instruction to the lawyers on both sides of this Chamber touching the legislation passed by the present Congress under the present administration, I therefore recommend it upon that consideration.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT MUST BE SAVED

Government is not taken for granted today. Since the Civil War there has been no time or occasion when the question what shall be the Government of the United States of America was thrust upon the people more insistently than it is at the present time. A national emergency has awakened an old justification for removal or change of the limitations upon Federal authority imposed by the Constitution. A figure of speech has been emotionally propagated not only to excite cooperation of the people, but to bring to bear on political judgment the basis of a state of war for breaking down the constitutional safeguards of individual liberty. The concept of a representative form of government with independent coordinate branches established by the Constitution is challenged as inapplicable to conditions of the present time. In the name of relief to humanity and under the representation that it is temporary, we are suffering a suspension of the Constitution by peaceful revolution.

On the one side we have taken a most important step toward democracy by using, for the first time in our history, conventions instead of legislatures for the ratification of a constitutional amendment; and, on the other side, we have leaped the fence of constitutional authority and increased the power of the central Government and of its Chief Executive to an extent which will probably astonish us when we observe it with a proper perspective. Generally throughout the land there is concern and apprehension lest we forget the indispensable requisites of liberty—namely, fidelity to the fundamental laws of and protection to the Constitution whenever it is attacked.

So far as the members of the profession of the law are considered in this situation, they have a special interest and a very important duty, jointly and severally, to resist the invasion of fundamental rights and to keep the Government founded upon the solid rock of known laws to which the people are a party, and to prevent it from being shifted to the treacherous sands of expediency and revolution.

The principal objects of the Act to Relieve Destitution of 1932, the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, the Act for the Establishment of a National Employment System of 1933, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, the Farm Credit Act of 1933, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, and the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 are concurred in unanimously by the people of this country. Moreover, the very general acquiescence of the public in the N.R.A., inaugurated without any authority of law whatever, indicates that the spirit of the people of the United States is patriotic and humane. They are united, as if in war, to overcome the depression and to recover prosperity. When the wolf is at the door of many houses in this land, business men and women, employers and consumers, willingly sacrifice rights and liberties, wealth and convenience, to uplift the unfortunate. A great wave of emotion, stimulated by most generous and public-spirited publicity, freely given by the public press, the radio, and other agencies of communication, and promoted by public speeches and demonstrations has swept over the land. Its object was so good and so much to be desired that it contained the danger of our people's ignoring the breach of constitutional law by which it was accomplished and the tolerating of fundamental changes in our Government in an irregular and informal manner.

There have been even those who approved the suspension of the Constitution and the conversion of the Federal Government into a strongly centralized system on the ground of an emergency. They employ the reasoning of the Supreme Court in Adkins, et al., v. Children's Hospital (261 U.S. 525), in which, to uphold a minimum wage law for women of the District of Columbia, it is said:

"Moreover, in sustaining the wage feature of the law emphasis was put upon the fact that it was in this respect temporary 'leaving the employers and employees free as to the subject of wages to govern their relations by their own agreements after the specified time.' The act was not only temporary in this respect, but it was passed to meet a sudden and great emergency. This feature of the law was sustained principally because the parties, for the time being, could not or would not agree. Here they are forbidden to agree.

"The same principle was applied in the Rent cases (Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, and Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U.S. 170), where this court sustained the legislative power to fix rents as between landlord and tenant upon the ground that the operation of the statutes was temporary to tide over an emergency and that the circumstances were such as to clothe 'the letting of buildings * * * with a public interest so great as to justify regulation by law.'

"The regulation is put and justified only as a temporary measure (citing Wilson v. New, supra). A limit in time, to tide over a passing trouble, well may justify a law that could not be upheld as a permanent change."

By contrast we call attention to the holding in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall. 2, at 120, 121). This case arose under the exigencies of the Civil War (certainly an emergency), yet the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Davis, said:

"Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors; for even these provisions, expressed in such plain English words, that it would seem the ingenuity of man could not evade them, are now, after the lapse of more than 70 years, sought to be avoided. Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril, unless established by irrepealable law. The history of the world had taught them that what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances. No doctrine, involving more pernicious consequences, was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of Government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism, but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false; for the Government, within the Constitution, has all the powers granted to it, which are necessary to preserve its existence; as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to throw off its just authority."

How dangerous is the situation is reflected in the statement by a leading professor of law:

"The Constitution today is a document which permits the spirit of the times to stalk unrestrained."

President Martin, of the American Bar Association, stated our responsibility in this terse sentence:

"If our Republic of today disintegrates into a social democracy tomorrow, it will be our fault; it can be none other."

The doctrine of emergency has not been fully developed; but there are sufficient decisions pro and con to indicate the necessity of vigilance on the part of the voters of this country to insure that form of government by which individual liberty and opportunity are most likely to be preserved, when they find themselves in the midst of such an emergency, and under the menace of that which is represented to be temporary, becoming permanent for the lack of vigorous resistance. We have had many abnormal expansions of government authority in time of war; but the Supreme Court has made a point to observe that even in cases involving war-time regulation of industry, the existence of a state of war did not remove or change the limitations upon Congressional authority imposed by the Constitution. See Hamilton v. Ky. Distilleries Co., 251 U.S. 146, 156 (1919); U.S. v. Cohen Grocery Co., 255 U.S. 81, 88 (1921); U.S. v. New River Collieries, 262 U.S. 341 (1923).

In Highland v. Russel Car & Snow Plow Co. (279 U.S. 253, 262) Mr. Justice Butler, on April 8, 1929, delivered the opinion of the Court, saying:

"Under the Constitution and subject to the safeguards there set for the protection of life, liberty, and property (cases cited), the Congress and the President exert the war power of the Nation, and they have wide discretion as to the means to be employed successfully to carry on (cases cited)."

In that case the Court held that the fixing of prices by the President under the authority of Congress given in the Lever Act to regulate production, prices, and sales, to requisition coal and other necessities, to purchase and sell wheat, flour, and other staple articles of food, and to take over and operate factories and mines, was not as applied to the coal in question so clearly unreasonable and arbitrary as to require them to be held repugnant to the due-process clause of the fifth amendment.

To sound the warning, which is the object of such addresses as this, it is not necessary to argue the question whether an economic emergency stands differently than a war-time condition, to justify suspension of the Constitution. We are confronted with a condition, not a mere theory. The Constitution is suspended; and the interest we have is to restore it and, if possible, to give it more vitality, if we intend to preserve the Republic and to prevent a social democracy or a Fascist autocracy.

Some of the practical effects of making permanent the assumption by the President of police power in intrastate affairs and the abdication by Congress to the President of the duty to regulate interstate commerce, and to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and fix the standard of weights and measures—whether enforced by the boycott or by any of the methods of punishment and coercion set forth in the N.I.R.A.—would be intolerable.

Amendment of the Constitution by revolution would be approved.

The sovereignty of States as the great reservoir of authority would be broken down.

The independence of the three coordinate branches of Government would be destroyed.

Individual liberty, responsibility, and opportunity would be wiped out.

Industrial, agricultural, and mercantile activities would be smoothed down to a common level of mediocrity.

Government would be in business, and private enterprise would soon be out of business.

Taxes would be increased so rapidly and to such a level that they would not be and could not be paid.

I forbear to state what other ultimate consequences might follow making permanent the N.R.A.

It was a significant and beneficial change for the better to have the amendment of the Constitution recently acted upon in Vermont and elsewhere, submitted as it was in Vermont and in many other States, to the direct vote of the people for their ratification. This was so because thereby the people became a direct party to the fundamental law. It is said, and justly so I believe, that the provision for ratification by legislatures and conventions is a submission to the people, through their agent. But no one will question the effectiveness in securing assent to and loyal cooperation in the law of a direct vote by the people. On the other hand, the removal of the people from participation in the change to the extent involved in the Chief Executive's controlling local business, authorized or not authorized by the Congress, is most certain to result, in the long run, in resistance by those who suffer a loss of liberty thereby.

Regardless of whether the specific result may be beneficial or not, economically, the effect upon our Government of making codes permanent which put the Federal Government into partnership with and regulate the conduct of purely local trades or industries which do not engage in interstate commerce, or which are not in direct competition with interstate business, is an amendment of the Constitution without method of limitation, which is destined to break down as soon as the emotion or fear which excited the assent of the people evaporates.

If the events of the past 6 months should cause such a change to be made in the Federal law that every constitutional amendment must be submitted for ratification to conventions of the several States, members of which are to be elected at large in a direct vote by the people, instructing the delegates on the precise question at issue, as was done in the State of Vermont with the twenty-first amendment, a complete denunciation of the method involved in the N.R.A. would be accomplished and something creative and constructive would develop out of this emergency.

Possibly this may be done by a mere act of Congress.

The decisions of the Supreme Court dealing with the subject of congressional legislation in respect to Presidential electors seem to indicate that Congress has not undertaken to function concerning an election to be held within a State.

Nevertheless, it was held in the Bradwell case, supra, at 449:

"The right of the United States in respect to these elections is a constitutional right to legislate or not to legislate as is deemed expedient or necessary."

In the Siebold case it was held:

"As a general rule, it is no doubt expedient and wise that the operations of the State and National Governments should as far as practicable be conducted separately, in order to avoid undue jealousies and jars and conflicts of jurisdiction and power. But there is no reason for laying this down as a rule of universal application."

In the Green case it was held:

"The sole function of the Presidential electors is to cast, certify, and transmit the vote of the State for President and Vice President of the Nation. Although the electors are appointed and act under and pursuant to the Constitution of the United States, they are no more officers or agents of the United States than are the members of the State legislatures when acting as electors of Federal Senators, or the people of the States when acting as electors of Representatives in Congress (Constitution, art. I, secs. 2, 3).

"Congress has never undertaken to interfere with the manner of appointing electors, or, where (according to the now general usage) the mode of appointment prescribed by the law of the State is election by the people, to regulate the conduct of such election, or to punish any fraud in voting for electors; but has left these matters to the control of the States."

The matter is of so much importance, however, and the occasion is so urgent for doing something definite to reassert this fundamental right, that even if a constitutional amendment should be necessary, I would favor its submission to the people.

The various relief measures which Congress passed, earnestly dealt with the solution of economic problems, and without any question the administration has honestly and faithfully attempted to put them into effect.

Human distress, as an exciting cause, was fortified by the belief of people that there were structural defects in our economic system, that unfair methods have existed in business which could not be remedied by agreements or combinations because of the anti-trust laws, and that social injustices arose out of the power wielded by the few who had acquired extremely large fortunes.

The proposal of these acts granting extraordinary powers to the President attracted the advocacy of organized labor because the N.I.R.A. provided for collective bargaining through representatives of labor's own choosing; provided for freedom from restraint or coercion by employers in the designation of representatives or in self-organization; forbade the requirements of an employee to join a company union or to refrain from joining an organization of his own choosing as a condition of employment; and obligated employers to comply with the conditions of employment prescribed by the President, including the maximum hours of labor and the minimum rates of pay.

These acts enlisted agriculture by the promises of regulation of production, of increase of prices, and of refinancing of farm mortgages.

Big business came to the support of these acts because they promised some relief from the restrictive effects of the antitrust laws.

Material benefits have accrued. I have no doubt that by continued cooperation this country will certainly raise itself out of the depression. The education of all the people at the same time to the principle that permanent private good is dependent upon the public welfare and that selfishness and greed are hostile to the public welfare is a positive spiritual benefit. The units of each industry have been drawn together for the purpose of making codes. These code sessions have done more than trade conventions ever could do to bring together the leaders of thought and those who control the policies of business. By these agreements which could not have been entered into before, because of the antitrust laws, there have been eliminated many bad practices and unfair features of competition. The ethics of business have been raised to a higher standard; price declines due to cutthroat competition have been stopped; and although the benefits intended by the Agricultural Adjustment Act have not kept pace with the benefits intended by the N.I.R.A., nevertheless, there have been increases in prices of agricultural products as well as manufactured products.

The standardization of service, quality, and cost, which has been sought by economists, has not been fully achieved, but a good start has been made in that direction; child labor has been abolished; the American working day has been cut; suffering has been ameliorated substantially; the number of unemployed has been reduced approximately two and one half millions during 6 months. Title II of the NIRA, providing for public works and construction projects, has put into circulation huge sums of money and promises to improve business considerably in the near future. The conservation works have put into circulation millions of dollars monthly and have certainly benefited 350,000 young men and their families to a very marked degree, not only economically, but socially.

These things we praise, as well as approve; and we give Godspeed to the remainder of the program; but the indispensable requisite of this great movement is its termination. It must be ended—we must take from the President the extraordinary powers we have given him; we must restore to the States their police power; we must return to Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce and coin money; we must replace contracts upon the sound foundation of absolute certainty. Looking forward and building for the future, we foresee that if we gain all the objectives of these relief measures for the time being, at the cost for all time of the guaranties of liberty which we have tested and found true, we will have lost more than we shall have gained.

The special training and experience of lawyers, as well as the responsible position that they occupy in social and political affairs, charge them with the high obligation to replenish the love of liberty in the hearts of men. We should emphasize and make perfectly obvious the necessity of protecting the Constitution if we are going to save our Government.

We should promote, as never before, faith in rugged individualism. The sneering attack on individualism is designed as a cover or smoke screen by those who would make use of misery to promote paternalism, direct action, public ownership of all property and the reduction of all service and attainment to a dead level. This menace must be exposed. In a great emotional period we should serve as a steady influence to keep us all from getting into the lunatic fringe which characterizes every great emotional wave.

In the words of Lincoln: "This Nation under God may have a new birth of freedom" if we do our duty in this great emergency. The opportunity is afforded to consolidate the position of representative government.

The Federal form of Government in the United States has survived ideas, which altered beyond recognition the various forms of government in France, Germany, Italy, Austria, Russia, and China; but vigilance must be exercised now, or this country which is the home of progress and liberty may suffer the fate of such governments.

The spirit of the American people should be quickened to the recognition that the power and the glory of the United States consist not in wealth and prosperity, but in the freedom of the individual made possible and made secure by his voluntary sacrifices, written into the fundamental law for the sake of the regulation of the conduct, and the promotion of the welfare of the masses.

We should favor and work for improvement of our form of government. We should be willing to make further sacrifices of individual liberty for the public good. We should be willing to curtail some of the sovereign powers of the several States in order to increase the authority of the Federal Government to enable it to perform the stupendous work of fending off dictatorship of either a ruler or a proletariat. It is vital to the saving of the Government and to any permanent freedom and to any permanent progress morally, socially, economically, or politically, that we save the Constitution, and that we make our changes in government under and in conformity with the fundamental law.

"THE NEW DEAL AND THE 'BRAIN TRUST'"—ADDRESS BY MRS. PAUL FITZSIMONS

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address on the subject of "The New Deal and the 'Brain Trust'", delivered by Mrs. Paul FitzSimons, Republican national committeewoman of Rhode Island, before the Business and Professional Women's Republican Club of Boston on April 17, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW DEAL AND THE "BRAIN TRUST"

On assuming office, the President of this great Nation of ours takes the following oath: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." The time has come to gravely consider whether the Democratic President now holding office has kept faith with the solemn oath he took on March 4, 1933. Although I am speaking to a Republican club, and as an ardent Republican myself, I am today addressing you primarily as a patriot prepared to wage battle to uphold that great document—the Constitution—under which we have risen from a small group of colonists less than 3,000,000 strong to the great and prosperous Nation we have become. What did the citizens vote for in November 1932? Certainly not for revolution. And for what did those Republicans who, disloyal to their party, voted for the man who for 4 long years had been Governor of the great State of New York and who had left that office with a record of maladministration and reckless extravagance?

Did those millions who voted for their Representatives in Congress for a moment suppose that they were electing a supine body, which in panic would give over to the Executive their constitutional rights and delegated responsibilities, without question, without even consideration? Certainly not. And the powers, which through cowardice the Congress sacrificed, were at once delegated by the President to certain young men, of radical tendencies, to administer as they saw fit. These men, commonly known as the "brain trust", were not elected or chosen by the people, these tsars who are dictating at present, after the manner of soviet commissars, regimenting our lives, our industries, our businesses according to their own Bolshevik theories, have no fundamental or constitutional right to dictate to the citizens of our Nation. It is only due to the lack of courage and of character, and because of the cowardly desire to side-step responsibility, that our elected representatives in Congress, with few exceptions, handed over their authority to the branch of our Government not empowered by the Constitution to exercise these powers. You all know that many of the bills passed during the special session of Congress a year ago were never even read by the men who voted upon them. Is that abiding by their oath of office? Was that what we elected them for?

I am only mentioning this ancient history of the new deal to refresh your memory and emphasize the foundation upon which the present alarming sovietization of our Nation has been built. We all hoped that the new deal would be successful. Some of us who knew Mr. Roosevelt and his record since school days had grave doubts, but nevertheless, through loyalty, endeavored to support him in the emergency. That, however, was no excuse for Congress to capitulate, violating its constitutional responsibility to the point where Senator BORAH only a few days ago stated that having sacrificed its authority, the Senate could do no more than "petition."

The aims of the "brain trust" are now being openly broadcast. The doctrines they preach and publish under their own names are unrefutable proof of their objectives. Secretary Wallace, Professor Tugwell, et al., have within the last 3 months published articles and pamphlets openly advocating Government control and Government ownership and the regimentation of citizens under a system of social regulation. The counsel for the N.R.A., Mr. Donald Richberg, spoke here in Boston a short time ago, and I will quote a paragraph from one of his speeches.

"There are only two alternatives which can be presented by those who cry 'scrap the N.R.A.' The first is to scrap all effort at a planned economic recovery, to scrap all effort to bring order and justice into our industrial civilization, to relapse into an anarchy of unrestrained self-seeking, to return to the law of the jungle and to let the most ruthless and selfish of our breed survive—in a word, to 'scrap civilization.' The second alternative is to establish a new Government endowed with power to own and operate all essential enterprises, free from any obligation to preserve individual liberty of action or individual rights of property—in a word 'scrap the Constitution.'"

A few years ago, yes, even 18 months ago, such a statement by an appointee in the Government service would have caused a wave of indignation from coast to coast. Do not our citizens realize what is happening to our country, to our form of Government, or have they become so depression-weary and consequently so cowed that they willingly submit to the scrapping of the Constitution and of their own individual rights and liberties?

What is there about the "new dealers" that could inspire any confidence in their infallibility? The answer I think is admirably given in a book called the International Goal of Russian Communism by William Armstrong Fairburn, which I will quote. He says: "The American is, however, pathetically gullible, as well as inexperienced, in world affairs (political, economic, and social), and in a desire to be fair he is emotionally influenced in judgment and leans over backward. The American intellectuals are shallow in diagnosis and in resultant knowledge, and not only 'take kindly' to, but 'fall hard' with avidity for superficialities and spell-binding mirages offered to them as realities; moreover, they have what is virtually a mania for anything new and 'radical', and their bigoted and emotional reaction to novelty they erroneously define as liberalism."

An unprejudiced visitor to Washington today, earnestly seeking to be enlightened and hoping to be converted to a faith in the new deal, finds instead of encouragement, all the clashing and sordid motives of selfish and reckless ambition, and the lust for power and personal advantage which the administration so glibly ascribes to the rest of us. There is no reason to suppose that being in Government office reforms or ennobles men to the extent of making the politicians the best judges of righteousness in others. The country has been for over a year surfeited with Roosevelt and new-deal propaganda. There is a determined effort to muzzle the press; the radio is already censored; they want to control all communications—telephone and telegraph and wireless. Secretary Wallace has naively told us that to achieve the aims of the new deal, we must submit to having our thinking done for us, and our opinions formulated for us by Government edict. The self-righteous attitude of the "brain trust" is an insult to intelligent American citizens.

A man whom I consider a great American, a real patriot, former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, in an article in the December issue of that truly invaluable magazine the New Outlook, stated as follows:

"I am for experience as against experiment. If I must choose between private management of business and management by a Government bureaucracy, I am for private management. I am ready to go through a certain amount of deflation if the choice is between this and outright money inflation. If I must choose between the leaders of the past, with all the errors they have made and with all the selfishness they have been guilty of, and the inexperienced young college professors who hold no responsible public office but are perfectly ready to turn 130,000,000 Americans into guinea pigs for experimentation, I am going to be for the people who have made the country what it is. And I say this with full knowledge of the facts that there are many things in the old order of society which I should like to have changed and which I do not applaud or even condone."

One of the most clear-cut summaries of our present situation was a letter which was published in the Boston Transcript about 6 weeks ago, signed A. D. Radley:

"TIME TO REBEL

"To the EDITOR OF THE TRANSCRIPT:

"It may be well for those who deem it patriotic to support the Roosevelt administration policies to calmly consider the progressive stages through which our Government is being pushed into Russian sovietism. Working quietly in the background is a group of followers of Professors Tugwell and Frankfurter. These men are now the controlling influence in our Federal administration. Proposed legislation must have their approval before it is introduced into Congress. This Tugwell and Frankfurter group consists largely of young lawyers and economists, able, crafty, and well versed in the art of revolution so successfully practiced in Europe. Their material was the world-wide depression, followed by unemployment and a weary and discouraged people. Prior to the Roosevelt regime, aided by Fascists in the business world, they flooded the country with propaganda for a regimented planned society and for abandonment of sound, constitutional, and economic principles. The election of the socialistic Roosevelt was their great opportunity. Sudden, spectacular grand coups have ever been dear to the hearts of all the Roosevelts. Sudden grand coups are most essential to the success of all revolutions, for they startle and confuse the public into a blind compliance.

"Each grand coup of the Roosevelt administration has been accompanied by the following propaganda: Vast overemphasis of the evils to be remedied and false reasons for such evils, terrifying insinuations of revolution by the people unless the coup succeeded, disparagement of sound constitutional and economic principles, luring the people into the belief that they were voluntarily and patriotically cooperating in measures within the Constitution, though such measures violently infringed on constitutional liberty and had behind them the penalties of fine and imprisonment, hurling stinging and derogatory epithets at all who raised constitutional or economic objections, and finally wholesale congressional investigations accompanied by censored radio propaganda aimed chiefly at discrediting political opponents and the soundest business institutions in our country.

"Such has been the first stage of the revolution which has succeeded in setting up the framework of a Russian Soviet. The next stage will be the destruction of all rights to private property. This can easily be brought about by the proposed enforced control of production, distribution, and profits through the A.A.A. and the N.R.A., the hamstringing of all private financing through the National Securities Act and the proposed National Securities Exchange Act, control of credit through money manipulation, and confiscation by taxation.

"If Government ownership of property is attained, it will then be easy to abolish freedom of speech, of the press, and of religion and to reorganize our Government into a nonelective society, for he who will not comply will not be allowed to eat. If the revolution is allowed to come to this stage, it will not be possible for the courts to stop it. Already the bold threat is made in Washington that unless the United States Supreme Court will comply by misinterpreting the Constitution, its efficiency will be destroyed by an increase of its membership and the appointment of sufficient radical members to overcome all opposition.

"Is it not, therefore, time for the sovereign people to rise in their might and through court action, the ballot box, or constitutional conventions if necessary put down this revolution by their public servants? The evils aimed at by this revolutionary scheme could easily have been remedied by modification of the antitrust laws, regulation of monopoly, Government aid to the needy and the enforcement of existing laws.

"BOSTON, March 1."

Our citizens have been blind to the steady and persistent undermining of our national policies, even of our form of government. The first real awakening came on the cancelation of the air-mail contracts—the vindictive injustice of this action, the man in the street was able to realize and comprehend. He had been bewildered by the multitude of measures, written in complicated legal phraseology, in most cases so written with the purpose of concealing the real object to be achieved; but in the air-mail cancelation there was condemnation, without opportunity for the accused companies to testify or defend themselves, which the dullest wits could comprehend. Theoretically in the United States every man or corporation is innocent until proved guilty, but not so under the utopia of the new deal. The attempt to discredit Colonel Lindbergh was another outrage, before which the citizens rose in their wrath. The disclosure in Saturday's press that Colonel Lindbergh had been subjected to a grueling cross-examination in secret is further evidence of the establishment of soviet methods in our midst. I will quote an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune of April 16.

THE OGPU AT WASHINGTON

"The revelation that Charles A. Lindbergh was questioned secretly for 4 hours by a Department of Justice agent following his appearance before the Senate Post Offices Committee a month ago makes unpleasant and disturbing news. Following so closely upon the cancelation of the air-mail contracts—an utterly unjust and dictatorial abuse of public power—this resort to star chamber tactics calls for a strict investigation.

"The test of the character of Colonel Ristine's investigation lies in the stenographic report thereof. Senator AUSTIN does well to announce that he will insist that this secret record be produced before the Black committee. Were the questions designed to develop constructive advice? Or were they the gruelling to which a district attorney subjects a suspect? The record will speak for itself.

"If it was a grilling, as is charged, the episode will constitute one more milepost on the road from normal American processes of justice to the Russian system. As such, it is of deep concern to the whole Nation. Mr. Lindbergh can take care of himself on any witness stand, as he has demonstrated. Such scrupulous integrity and clear-eyed courage as are his are proof against the assaults of any browbeating inquisition. But the resort to such tactics would constitute a vicious and highly dangerous precedent and deserve the sternest rebuke.

"Incidentally, it would be interesting to know whether Commissar Farley played any part in instigating this experiment with Ogpu methods. Having punished the air-mail companies without the pretense of a trial, did he perhaps think that a little terrorizing of a hostile witness might help out his case? The country is already greatly in the debt to Senator WARNER ROBINSON AUSTIN, of Vermont, for taking up the air-mail fight. Here is another opportunity for his clear, fair questioning in the pursuit of truth."

The criminal action of sending out Army flyers, in Army planes not built for the rigors of the Air Mail Service and not equipped with any of the instruments necessary for that perilous duty, piloted by men untrained in that type of flying, was the last straw—I do not hesitate to say that that action was murder—and no excuse is possible for the men who ordered such needless sacrifice of courageous young lives, merely to satisfy the officials' vindictiveness and their desire to bring discredit upon the previous administration. Thirteen young men have now been sacrificed to the malignant temper of the present administration. It is a disheartening exhibition of the lack of virile public opinion that this criminal action should be allowed to be perpetrated with only a murmur of dismay from our citizens, who take it as they do, the undermining of our very governmental structure, lying down.

Has all red-blooded, courageous Americanism died? Are we mere pawns, willing to be moved about the board at the whim of our Soviet-inspired commissars, without protest, without a fight for our rights, our liberties, or for justice?

Was it for this that our New England ancestors fought and died to achieve? Have the 300 years of struggle, of courage magnificently sustained, often under the most cruel hardships and sufferings, and the tenacity of purpose which has brought our land to its great development, all been in vain? Have we no longer sufficient character and determination to insist upon our rights, and demand that we return to Constitutional Government? We elected Congress to execute certain powers representing us, but we did not vote to have these men delegate to anyone else the responsibility which, under the Constitution, we vested in them. Rouse yourselves while there is yet time! Inform yourselves of actual conditions; also investigate the records of the men who ask your vote next November. Too long have our citizens neglected their political duties—been negligent and indifferent to what has been happening. Do you realize that under our form of Government, which is the two-party system, only the Republican Party stands between you and the overthrow of our national institutions? We Americans are slow to rouse, we are lethargic politically, leaving our entire destinies in the hands of professional politicians. We are now paying the penalty.

We are too prone to vote through our emotions and not with our intelligence. We are confronted with the greatest menace our Nation has ever faced. The power to prevent disaster lies with you, the voters. Here in Massachusetts you are particularly fortunate in having large numbers of unselfish and patriotic men, many of them young in the political field. Realize that every vote counts; that by word and by ballot we are waging as great a battle this year as ever took place under arms.

There is no better way by which I can close my address than by quoting to you excerpts from Patrick Henry's immortal speech before the Convention of Delegates in Philadelphia in 1775:

"Mr. President, it is natural to man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things which so greatly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and to provide for it.

"I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past.

Let us not, I beseech you, sir, deceive ourselves longer. Sir, we have done everything that could be done to avert the storm which is now coming on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne, and have implored its interposition to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry and Parliament. Our petitions have been slighted; our remonstrances have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded; and we have been spurned, with contempt, from the foot of the throne. In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free—if we mean to preserve inviolate those inestimable privileges for which we have been so long contending—if we mean not basely to abandon the noble struggle in which we have been so long engaged, and which we have pledged ourselves never to abandon until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained, we must fight! * * *

"They tell us, sir, that we are weak; unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be the next week, or the next year? Will it be when we are totally disarmed? * * * Shall we gather strength by irresolution and inaction? Shall we acquire the means of effectual resistance by lying supinely on our backs, and hugging the delusive phantom of hope, until our enemies shall have bound us hand and foot? Sir, we are not weak if we make a proper use of the means which the God of Nature hath placed in our power. Three millions of people armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us. * * * The battle, sir, is not to the strong alone; it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave.

"Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death!"

The enemies referred to by Patrick Henry were the British. The enemies I refer to today are those within our gates—those who under the guise of emergency would enslave us under a Soviet system—appalling and repulsive to our great and free people. For 13 months this Soviet influence has insidiously been forging the chains which are to shackle our liberties, our individualism, our initiative. The men we elected to guard our rights have sacrificed them. Through a combination of propaganda and censorship, a confusion of words, and a multiplicity of legislation forced through Congress under the lash of vital and immediate emergency, we find ourselves bereft of most of our constitutional protection. It is here that Patrick Henry's inspiring message is as applicable today as when he delivered it. May the great patriot's words of 159 years ago put new courage into our flagging hearts, new patriotism and hope into our timid souls, enabling us to again realize that we, the citizens, are still the captains of our souls, still the masters of our fate. Our Nation's destiny lies in the hands of the citizens. May we prove worthy of the task.

Again I call your most emphatic attention to the oath of office of the President of the United States. Let that solemn pledge before God and our countrymen be also graven on your hearts, on your very souls. In these days of national peril I urge every loyal American, man and woman, to take a solemn oath that they will faithfully execute their duties as citizens and to the best of their ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of these United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers in the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the nomination of Fred S. Minier, of South Dakota, to be register of the land office at Pierre, S.Dak., vice Guy Francis Barnes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The calendar is in order.

TREATIES

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it is now 25 minutes of 6 o'clock, and there is not sufficient time for the consideration of the treaties on the Executive Calendar. Therefore I ask that they may go over. I give notice, however, that immediately after the disposal of the measure now before the Senate I shall ask for an executive session for the purpose of considering and acting upon the treaties on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaties will be passed over.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George M. Abbott, of Ohio, to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Cecil Wayne Gray, of Tennessee, to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Waldemar J. Gallman, of New York, to be consul.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

This completes the Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until Monday, April 23, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, O God; we acknowledge Thee to be the Lord. Out of the depths, Heavenly Father, where the purest affections and the sweetest emotions have their birth, we appeal to Thee for help and guidance. This day allow nothing to come between us and the light. We do not pray for easy ways, but we do pray that we may be strong men with powers of understanding to meet our tasks. Bless us with a most helpful measure of grace, and may we be rich in wisdom, faithfulness, and sincerity. May we ever cherish ideals as the travelers of old cherished the stars, and keep their guiding light radiant and high above the dust, the clouds, and the mists of earth. Heavenly Father, establish in all breasts the secret of a good, useful life which is never to allow our spiritual and mental powers to become stagnant. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 8861. An act to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. COSTIGAN, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WAGNER and Mr. NORBECK members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Interior Department.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. What would the ruling of the Chair be on a point raised that the report on a bill was ordered to be made in the committee while the House was in session, the committee not having the permission of the House to sit during the sessions of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the rule to be that a committee can transact no business at all while the House is in session unless that committee has the permission of the House to sit during the sessions of the House. The Chair will read the rule.

No committee of the House, except the Committee on Rules, shall sit during the sittings of the House without special leave.

Mr. STEAGALL. I ask for information in connection with H.R. 7908, which was reported on the 12th of April.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that it was reported out by the committee while the House was in session?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the parliamentary inquiry the Chair will state that the action of the committee in so reporting the bill is absolutely void, and the Chair will direct that the report and the bill be stricken from the calendar. The purported report on the bill (H.R. 7908) made to the House on April 12, 1934, being invalid the Chair holds that the bill is still before the Committee on Banking and Currency for such action as that committee thinks fit and proper.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon the Washington Times, a Hearst paper, falsely and maliciously stated that I was censured by the Speaker of this House, and also yesterday afternoon in the little Washington News there appeared under large headlines the false and malicious statement, "BLANTON is censured." And in this morning's Washington Herald, another Hearst newspaper, it falsely and maliciously stated that I was reprimanded by the Speaker of the House. And this morning's Washington Post falsely and maliciously stated that the Speaker reprimanded me yesterday. I claim that is a question of personal privilege, and I ask to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that the Speaker of the House cannot censure or reprimand a Member except on instructions by the House. The statement made in the newspapers is not true. The Speaker did not censure or reprimand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]; he simply read the rule that certain words were out of order, and the House struck them from the RECORD. Immediately afterward permission was given to the gentleman from Texas to proceed in order in the committee when it resumed its session, which the gentleman from Texas did.

The Chair holds that the statement made about the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in the newspapers in question give him the right to rise to a question of personal privilege and address the House. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I am deeply grateful to the able and distinguished Speaker of this House for correcting this great injustice which these domineering Washington newspapers deliberately and maliciously tried to do me. While under the rules I am entitled to the floor for an hour, I hope to use only a small part of that time. I regret the necessity of using any time today, but I do not intend to continue to allow them to maliciously and deliberately publish baseless lies about me and get away with it.

All of my colleagues here know why the Hearst papers lie about me. I am one of those here who fearlessly opposes William Randolph Hearst when he tries to put anything over on the people of the United States. I tell him and his newspapers where to head in, and they do not like it. And all of you older Members here know why Eugene Meyer, the great get-rich-quick-on-the-Government, and his Washington Post dislike me. And it is hardly worth while to even mention the waspy little Washington News.

While Eugene Meyer was amassing his fortune as the head of the Federal Reserve and was putting into effect his unwise policies that broke many of the well-to-do cattlemen of the United States and eventually closed many good banks all over the United States and impoverished American farmers, I was criticizing his waste and extravagance and his policies that permitted him and others to amass unearned and unmerited private fortunes and was doing my dead level best to have him kicked out of the Federal Reserve System. The Washington Post was the natural heritage of the McLean boys. When, with his unlimited money and his paid hirelings, Eugene Meyer secretly hornswoggled these minors out of their family heritage I gave him a good dressing down about it. So he and his reporters take their spite out on me by misquoting me, by maliciously attacking me, by unwarranted abuse, and by printing false statements about me.

Eugene Meyer runs in his Washington Post what he calls "The National Gallery", which clearly exemplifies the contempt and hate he has in his heart for all Senators and Congressmen. He has employed a cheap, unskilled, caricaturist named S. Robles, who daily, under said "The National Gallery", and over the name of some Senator or Congressman, prints some crude drawing that more resembles some animal than a human, and which does not in the slightest way resemble in any particular the one whom it attempts to depict. The ridiculous caricature Eugene Meyer's Post carried this morning of our colleague, Hon. ANDREW L. SOMERS, of New York, is a vicious libel that has no excuse or justification whatever. He takes a fiendish delight in picturing Senators and Congressmen as pudgy, senile, imbecilic morons, without a single feature of intelligence about them. He wants his readers to get this impression of Senators and Congressmen. He has libeled every one he has caricatured, and every one of them ought to file damage suits against Eugene Meyer that will make him sleepless at night.

HEARST'S CANADA JUNKET

William Randolph Hearst invited me to go on his junket trip through Canada, sending me a two-page telegram to my home in Abilene during vacation, and offered to pay all of my expenses, but I did not fall for it. As soon as that Congress met, we found him trying to get the Members whom he had entertained on this junket, to put a sales tax over on the people, and overburden the already tax-burdened shoulders of the people. I was one of those here who fought him to a finish. And we licked him. And he has never forgiven us for it.

HEARST'S FIGHT TO RESTORE SALARY CUTS

Then daily from the time this Congress met William Randolph Hearst browbeat and abused Congress in an attempt to force it to restore all pay cuts in Government salaries. He had not restored pay cuts to his employees. I was one who would not let him cajole me. I would not fall for his threats. I fought back when he abused. And we passed a law that continued that part of the cuts which the President did not agree to restore.

HEARST NOW WANTS HIS LOST DEPOSITS

Lately Hearst has been browbeating Congress trying to get it to pass his McLeod bill, that will make the taxpayers of the United States pay back to him his millions he has lost in defunct banks. And his papers went so far as to induce some employee or Member of the House to violate House rules, in giving them the names on an uncompleted petition, which three Speakers of the House, including Vice President Garner, have held that such list cannot be made public under the rules, until it has been signed by 145 Members and entered in the RECORD. And when I criticized him for stealing this information, to which Hearst was not entitled, his papers falsely represented that I wanted to keep the proceedings of Congress secret. I am one of those here who has contended that all proceedings of Congress should be public, and kept in the open. But when a rule of the House forbids an incomplete petition to be made public, I want to see William Randolph Hearst and the Associated Press respect such rules of the House, just as those not in high authority are forced to respect same.

FALSE A.P. REPORT TO MY HOME PAPER

My splendid home paper, the Abilene Morning News, in its issue of April 17, 1934, in an A.P. report from Washington dated April 17 stated that I attacked newspapers for publishing a list of petitioners, intimating that I was trying to keep congressional proceedings from the public, when the facts were that I had objected to Hearst and the Associated Press stealing incomplete proceedings which the rules of the House forbade them getting. I was demanding that the rules of the House be respected by the A.P. and Hearst. And if the valuable and hitherto dependable Associated Press wants the public to have confidence in its reports, and to give them due credence, it must stop misquoting what happens on this floor. Let it print the truth. This is just a concerted, continued effort on the part of the Washington newspapers to abuse me because I do not obey their orders. The caustic remarks I made yesterday about my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] in the heat of debate were in violation of the rules and should not have remained in the RECORD, and I do not censure my good friend from New York, the minority leader [Mr. SNELL], for protecting one of his Republican Members when somebody is rapping him. That is his duty. I am still his friend. I expect him to do it, just as I would expect the majority leader to defend a Democrat on this side.

We often get without the rules of the House in debate. Rules are violated here every day. The Speaker merely rules according to points of order that are raised. As the Speaker has said, he did not censure me and did not reprimand me. He merely ruled on a point of order. Inasmuch as one of these newspapers states that "Speaker HENRY T. RAINEY censured and reprimanded Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON once before", may I ask the Speaker now, has the Speaker ever reprimanded or censured me since he has been Speaker of this House?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker never has done either.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the Speaker. I see our distinguished and beloved majority leader here, JOE BYRNS. When I was making a fight yesterday for the Democratic party, and to preserve and protect our Democratic appropriation bill, I want to ask him if he censured me for anything I did.

Mr. BYRNS. Every member of the House knows that a ruling such as was made yesterday was in no sense a censure or reprimand of the gentleman from Texas and certainly the gentleman knows that I did not censure him. The gentleman from Texas is one of the hardest working and most useful Members of this House. He is a man of very positive and emphatic convictions, and he never hesitates to express them. He is usually, and he should be, very vigorous in presenting his opinions and his views upon legislation pending here. There is no more active Member than the gentleman from Texas. I have often said that the gentleman, during his service here, has rendered a splendid and great service to the House and country.

Mr. BLANTON. I deeply appreciate that statement from our Democratic leader. And may I ask the majority leader if it is not a fact that I always faithfully cooperate with him, and sometimes obey his orders?

Mr. BYRNS. I would not say that the gentleman obeys my orders, because I never give any.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman from Tennessee, our Democratic leader, is the only man here whose orders I would obey. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. I never give any orders. The gentleman is very active and very earnest and very loyal to the organization of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri rose.

Mr. BLANTON. And I see my good friend from Missouri here [Mr. COCHRAN]. When he offered his amendment yesterday to add an additional $36,823 to the Utilities Commission item in the bill, I opposed and helped to defeat his amendment. That did not interfere with our friendship. I just did not believe this $36,823 was necessary. Yet simply because I opposed the $36,823 the newspapers played us up as enemies and said my friend gave me a tanning yesterday. [Laughter.] Is there anything between the gentleman from Missouri and myself that would warrant the newspapers in saying that he gave me a tanning?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman from Missouri had given the gentleman a tanning yesterday, he would not look so good today. [Laughter.] Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; for another tanning.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman tell the gentleman from Missouri how he gets it into his head that he was making a fight yesterday for the Democratic Party? The Democratic Party has never asserted in convention or otherwise that its members should legislate for the Capital of the Nation as though it were a country town. I challenge the gentleman's statement; and I think that the whip of the Democratic Party had a lot of nerve when he sent out the letter he did to the Members yesterday to support the bill; and I resent that, too. The whip on our side should not take it upon himself to send out letters affecting legislation that cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be classed as party measures. That is not his duty.

Mr. BLANTON. I was at least working with the Democratic leadership in protecting that bill against the onslaught of my friend's $36,823 amendment. Appropriation bills have to be protected. The majority in control of Congress has to protect its bills, and the leadership looks to the Members in charge of appropriation bills that the majority places at the table to protect their bill.

I was working with the leadership, and we had enough votes to defeat all amendments. I know there were not many Members remained on the floor, and I know that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] made a gallant fight, which is the kind he always makes. And every Member here appreciates the good work he is constantly doing here. He has one of the finest newspapers in the country in his city of St. Louis, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I think there is no better newspaper in the United States than the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I read it regularly. I know that it is fighting for control of public utilities, just as my friend is fighting for their control, and I am fighting with them. I caused to be held at Abilene some years ago a public mass meeting to show how Samuel Insull had control of our power officials in Texas, and at that hearing I predicted what would happen to Samuel Insull. I have been fighting monopolistic public utilities of the country for many years, right along with my good friend and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri rose.

Mr. BLANTON. And right with the gentleman from Missouri, I will continue to fight such monopolies.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. While, of course, I cannot concede that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was right yesterday, I will admit he has been one of the leaders in the fight against public utilities and has exerted himself in an effort to secure a fair deal for the public. The fact that he has always fought the battles of the little fellow is what puzzled me yesterday. The country is indebted to the gentleman from Texas for his services here. I have not always agreed with him, as was demonstrated yesterday, and I hope that between now and the time the bill comes back from the Senate he will see his mistake on the question in which I am interested, and being one of the conferees, he will accept the Senate amendment; for I am sure the Senate will restore the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Such action on his part will demonstrate what he has so often demonstrated here, that he is a real champion of the great masses and not the special interests.

Mr. BLANTON. As a conferee on the bill, I will of course carefully consider all amendments that the Senate may place thereon. But I sincerely hope that the Senate will find this bill such a generous and well-proportioned measure it will not deem it necessary to amend it in any particular.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention one other very unfair statement in a newspaper. In the last issue of the Gorman Progress it erroneously states that I "voted to override the President's veto of the 'salary grab' act." That shows you just how very erroneous impression a newspaper editor in Gorman, Tex., can get from irresponsible newspaper reports sent out from Washington. The bill that we passed over President Roosevelt's veto was not a "salary grab" bill, but just the opposite. If we had not passed this bill, there would have been a "salary grab." By passing this bill we prevented a "salary grab." The editor of the Gorman Progress is a good man, and means well, and would not knowingly mislead his readers, and he thought that he was telling them the truth. But he was not. Here are the facts: All pay cuts in all Government salaries expire on June 30, 1934. If no law were passed before July 1 continuing pay cuts, all cuts would be restored and former salaries would be paid in full. Those wanting a "salary grab" did not want any law passed. But to continue on after July 1 that part of the cut which the President wanted continued, it was necessary for us to pass the law that we did pass. I hope that the Gorman Progress will correct its erroneous statement.

SUGAR

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, in what way has the Senate amended the House bill?

Mr. JONES. The bill has just come over, and I have not had a chance to go over the Senate amendments. I am simply asking to send the bill to conference to expedite matters. A number of amendments were made to the bill in the Senate, but as to the merits of them I have not had an opportunity to make full inquiry.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the action we are about to take prevent the Membership from voting on the conference report to be reported out later?

Mr. JONES. After the conferees agree, should they reach that point, the report will come back to the House for final vote.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this is merely a request to permit the House to appoint conferees.

Mr. JONES. Yes

Mr. WOODRUFF. To give them an opportunity to consider the amendments that have been adopted by the Senate. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. JONES, FULMER, DOXEY, HOPE, and KINZER.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF LEXINGTON

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, the one hundred and fifty-ninth anniversary of the Battle of Lexington, the amiable and distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts introduced into the RECORD a petition from citizens of Lexington which in effect was a criticism of this administration. Now, I do not propose in these 3 minutes to argue with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. In fact, I know enough not to argue with the gentlewoman; but I shall let my constituents answer her in the words of the following telegram received by me yesterday:

> The citizens of the North End, numbering several thousands, in public celebration in North Square opposite home of Paul Revere, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:
> "We, the residents of the North End, representing the spirit of those whose patriotism and leadership inspired the hearts of Americans in every part of the Thirteen Colonies to action, heartily endorse the administration of President Roosevelt and rejoice in the leadersip he has given to the people of the United States the past year, resulting in preserving the homes, protecting the savings of a lifetime, and giving decent living conditions to millions of Americans on the verge of despair when he took office.
> "We resent the actions of certain citizens of Lexington taking advantage of a public holiday to decry the patriotic leadership of our beloved President instead of calling attention to his marvelous statesmanship, which commands the admiration of the civilized world.
> "We feel we speak as Cotton Mather, James Otis, Paul Revere, Benjamin Franklin, and Sam Adams would speak if they were here.
> Newspapers say Mrs. ROGERS will present Lexington resolutions today. Hope you will answer her with these resolutions.
> JOHN F. FITZGERALD.
> NICHOLAS SCARAMELLA,
> Commander Post 53, American Legion.

All these signers are American citizens. [Applause.]

JOSEPH W. MOLYNEAUX, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, MINNESOTA

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privilege of the House.

On my responsibility as a Representative, and in the presence of this House, and before the American people, I charge Joseph W. Molyneaux, judge of the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, with the commission of acts which, in the contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes and misdemeanors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the charges and the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 344

I do impeach Joseph W. Molyneaux, United States district judge for the district of Minnesota, of high crimes and misdemeanors. I charge him with usurpation of power and violation of law in that—

(1) He has corruptly used his judicial powers in the appointment of receivers.

(2) In that he has corruptly disposed of estates in receivership under his jurisdiction so as to embarrass bankrupts and annihilate assets of litigants and others appearing in his jurisdiction.

(3) In that he has corruptly interfered with justice and committed acts which in the contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes and misdemeanors.

(4) In that through mental senility or dishonesty he has denied justice and practiced favoritism and brought the Federal judiciary in disrepute throughout the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into the official conduct of Joseph W. Molyneaux, district judge for the United States District Court of the District of Minnesota, discharging the powers and duties of the office of said district judge, and to report to this House whether, in their opinion, the said Joseph W. Molyneaux, while in said office, has been guilty of acts which were designed or calculated to overthrow, subvert, or corrupt the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof; and whether the said Joseph W. Molyneaux has been guilty of any act or has conspired with others to do acts, which, in contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes and misdemeanors, requiring the interposition of the constitutional power of this House; and that said committee has the power to send for persons and papers and to administer the customary oath to witnesses.

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent funds of the House, on the order of the Committee on the Judiciary, such sum or sums of money as may be required to enable the said committee to prosecute the investigation above directed and such other investigations as it may be ordered to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, on the 22d day of January last I took the floor of the House and introduced a resolution asking for the impeachment of Joseph W. Molyneaux, Federal judge for the district of Minnesota.

The judiciary throughout the United States, as we all know, is fomenting a revolution in America. In the United States, as in other countries, revolutions have been brought about by judges sitting in their high places. The revolution which brought about the Christian religion, if you please, was brought about by a judge sitting in a high place. These judges who today are usurping their power—and I am directing my charges today against one judge, Joseph W. Molyneaux—have discredited the judiciary, the judicial system, and our system of jurisprudence not only in my State but throughout the United States.

To begin with, I am sorry to state that this judge has not his right mind. He has a very bad case of mental senility, if such it may be called. He has been taken upon several occasions to institutions for the cure of mental cases. He has been removed from Minnesota by his friends and confined in sanitoria in California. As a matter of fact, he is crazy; yet sitting on the Federal bench, if you please.

The State of Minnesota is blessed with the left wing of the Chase National Bank, the Wiggin outfit of Wall Street. This same judge is tied in with that institution through the ownership of stock by his wife in affiliated institutions. This Northwest Bank Corporation affiliated with the Chase National and Wiggin throughout the Northwest, with about 158 affiliated banks in its chain, put across a stock-selling orgy several years ago in which they sold about $100,000,000 of stock to the people throughout the Northwest. They were the big clearing-house bank of Minneapolis. The other banks borrowed money from them. They would get other little banks into a hole and then force liquidation of the assets put up as collateral for the loans, and force the banks into the combination. Then this combine would issue stock and sell it in the little community where the bank had existed for years. They would sell the stock at fabulous prices. The stock was sold up to $100 a share. It was nothing but a promotion scheme, pure and simple, the most high-handed kind of robbery. The people were led to believe that it was a strong institution, that they would be safe.

The employees of practically every one of these banks were forced to buy stock in the bank and to assign each week a certain portion of their pay in payment for this stock, to be deducted by the bank at the end of each week from the pay of the employee. This stock, which sold for around $100 a share, is now worth between $4 and $5 on the market. Widows put their life savings in this bank stock. They were called in by the cashiers and employees of the various banks, and especially the president, Mr. E. W. Decker, whom I caused to resign as president of this institution last January. Their life savings were put into this stock. They have lost everything. There are something like 3,000 upon the charity lists and in the poorhouses today in the State of Minnesota who just a few years ago were pretty well off, and who invested their money in this nefarious outfit.

It came to the point where the State of Minnesota said that something must be done. Money was appropriated by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota to make an investigation through its blue-sky commission or its commerce commission into the activities and the methods used in selling this stock and the manner in which the people of the State of Minnesota had been robbed by this tentacle from the Wall Street octopus.

The investigation was started by the State of Minnesota. Whereupon, this chain-bank institution appeared before Judge Joseph W. Molyneaux and got a restraining order or injunction restraining the State of Minnesota from protecting its own citizenship against the graft of the bankers of the State of Minnesota and of the State of New York, interfering with State rights, interfering with the constitution of the State of Minnesota, and in violation of the Constitution of the United States of America. Knowingly and willfully did the judge issue an injunction restraining the State of Minnesota from protecting its citizenship against the most vicious kind of graft that has ever been perpetrated upon the citizenship of any State in many years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the restraining order may be placed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. This necessitated an answer from the State of Minnesota. The State was required to come before the court.

After my speech against the judge on the 22d of January of this year he got cold feet. When it came to hearing the arguments on whether or not this temporary injunction should be made permanent, he ducked out of the picture and turned the matter over to three other Federal judges, namely, Judges Joyce, Nordlye, and Woodrow, the latter of Omaha. These three judges then went to work and dissolved the temporary injunction, ruling against the original temporary injunction.

Mr. BLACK. How long a time had elapsed between the issuance of the original injunction and the decision of the three judges?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. The three judges made their report on April 5 and the original injunction was filed on the 18th of January.

Mr. BLACK. What happened in that time?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. There was just delay.

Mr. BLACK. Did the State consent to the delay or was it caused by order of the court?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. By order of the court.

Mr. BLANTON. No judge has ever been impeached for exercising discretion or for want of good judgment. The gentleman first must show something that is of a criminal or dishonest nature.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, I will bring plenty of that out.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief prepared by the attorney general of the State of Minnesota in answer to the injunction.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Does the brief filed in behalf of the State of Minnesota reflect on the judge?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. No. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] asked why this took so much time. They are playing for time until the expiration of the time limit of a criminal charge which expires, I believe, in 3 years under Federal law. So they are playing for time there on this proposition to let these bankers get out from under and before the people of the State of Minnesota can get to them.

Mr. BLACK. If they are being prosecuted under a Federal statute, it is not of importance what the State authorities may do. The 3 years' limitation is a Federal limitation. A delay on the injunction might or might not affect any criminal activities against them. The gentleman does not connect up the two statements.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. These are national banks which come under Federal law.

Mr. BLACK. But the gentleman said something about State action.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. This might interfere with the State action also.

May I say this with regard to various other things that this judge has done? Take receiverships for instance.

Mr. BLACK. In reply to a question of the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman was going to say something about the judge's conduct in connection with this matter. Is the gentleman coming back to the question?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Yes. I may say further that the judge acting in this injunction I believe was influenced by the fact that his wife is one of the substantial stockholders of this corporation. Not only that, but through this bank, the director and the president of this bank, the judge has made it a business to appoint close associates, both in the banks and in railroad companies and various other institutions to the receiverships that take place in the city of Minneapolis, and in that community.

I call particular attention to the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co. receivership. Here is a paper company that is practically the only independent manufacturer of newsprint in the United States of America. It is the only paper company that is not tied up with the International Paper Co. It is the only paper company in America that the newspaper men can go to and hold the price down and not be robbed by the combine. If they get the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co. into the hands of the International Paper Co., the paper-manufacturing industry of the United States will be tied up into one of the most gigantic trusts in America.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that all the paper manufacturing industry is associated and affiliated with the International Paper Co.?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Either directly or indirectly.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken in that contention.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. The fact of the matter is that the officers of this paper company have been called in time and time again at the behest of the other companies to try to get them to agree to fix prices on print paper, and so forth and so on.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman's statement that they are all allied with the International Paper Co., I am sure, is wrong.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I said directly or indirectly.

Mr. SNELL. Directly or indirectly, I am sure the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman claim that the Blanton Paper Co. of Grand Rapids, Minn., is so connected?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I am speaking of the big paper companies and not the little companies. I am speaking of the big paper companies that might be able to influence the price upon the market in the United States of America.

Mr. BLACK. It does not make any difference whether this larger paper company controlled all of them or not if it gained control of this company by methods that were improper.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. They would be its biggest competitors.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is it not a fact that at the hearing held last week, Ed W. Backus, head of that paper company, was charged with having appropriated to his own use $7,000,000 of the assets of this company, now in receivership?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. There were many charges flying back and forth.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. And is it not the fact that the same Ed W. Backus has been the most mischievous political influence in the State of Minnesota for several years?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. That is a matter of opinion. I am not here either to condemn or commend him.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I hope the gentleman is not going to commend him.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. In reference to the newsprint industry, since we have changed the tariff the statement has been made by the one in authority under the N.R.A. that the newsprint industry in the future will be discontinued by Executive order.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I am not interested in the tariff in this speech here or in the Executive order of the N.R.A. That is beside the issue. It is Judge Molyneaux I am talking about. It is not Backus we are trying here but the actions of Judge Molyneaux, and for that reason I rose to impeach him.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I cannot yield any further.

This concern was thrown into receivership by this judge granting the petition of a couple of small creditors, and in the same decision under which he threw it into receivership he said that the paper company was solvent but at the same time placed it in a receivership.

Mr. BLACK. Have you a written opinion to that effect?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Why not put that in the RECORD?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I will.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman ought to put that in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. With regard to this receivership, his first unlawful act in this step was in granting the petition of a small creditor, trumped up for the occasion, as a basis for the receivership, and in the same decree he adjudged the company as being solvent.

His next unlawful act was in entering into a conspiracy with the Bankers and Bondholders Protective Committee of the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co. in discrediting the original receivers, thereby forcing their resignation and appointing in their stead R. H. M. Robinson and C. T. Jaffray, both of whom had never had any experience in these lines of business of this company and who, therefore, were unfit for the operation and the administration of that business.

He fixed the salary of Mr. Robinson at $70,000 per annum and of Mr. Jaffray at $30,000 per annum. He fixed the salaries of two firms of attorneys at $51,000 per annum, and fixed the fees for the previous receivers and the local attorneys for the 9 months preceding at $177,000, under the recommendation of Robinson and Jaffray, or a total for 21 months of $328,000. The total for 34 months, including outside attorneys and all expenses for attorneys and receivers, reaches the enormous total of upward of $700,000. This is a pretty juicy melon for a bunch of grafters to split up under the act of a Federal judge, if you please, sitting in high places.

His next unlawful act was in permitting the receivers for the company, appointed by himself, to enter into an agreement in violation of the Sherman antitrust law with competitors in the newsprint industry, under which they agreed, for a consideration, to withdraw all sales efforts from the market and in conspiring with the manufacturers to maintain fixed prices. Losses sustained under this act were estimated at $3,000,000.

Judge Molyneaux, upon the recommendation of Robinson and Jaffray, approved the refinancing of National Pole & Treating Co., under which they presented to note holders one third of the capital stock of the company, valued at upward of $2,000,000, together with commissions paid brokers and other wasteful items in management, which brings the loss on this transaction to approximately $2,500,000.

Then came the sale of the Commercial Appeal, Memphis, Tenn., which was owned by this company, the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co. The property there was appraised by men who knew the business, by newspaper appraisers. They appraised the property at a value of $5,000,000. This was the Commercial Appeal, a daily paper. Five million dollars was the appraisal made by appraisers of that newspaper, and the receivers in this instance sold the whole thing for less than one and one half million dollars when it had an appraised value and a ready sale at $5,000,000. This sale was made, and after the sale was made the judge approved it and signed on the dotted line.

This has been going on in many instances. He not only let these receivers go out and do as they pleased, but after they have done this they bring the papers and lay them before him and he signs on the dotted line.

The Minnesota Products, another subsidiary of the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co., was sold at a loss of over $1,000,000. Judge Molyneaux confirmed a contract with the Great Lakes Paper Co. that was recommended by Robinson and Jaffray, under which the company sustained a loss of over $1,000,000.

The International Paper Co. owed the Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co. $175,000.

The International Paper Co. was good and could have paid $175,000, but the receivers were given a settlement for $50,000. In other words, the International Paper Co. lost through these receivers to the amount of $125,000.

The amounts I have read reach a total of $10,000,000. I am now investigating other matters.

I am not interested in the Minnesota-Ontario Paper Co., but I do know that while it has been interested in shady politics, still they were employing thousands of workmen who are laid off as the result of this receivership. They are trying to wreck this institution.

This company has a vast water power and public utilities—400 miles of railroad on the Canadian border—and this property is all turned over into the hands of these connivers.

This man Jaffray, one of the receivers, is one of the best connivers in the State of Minnesota.

He was made president of a company which had defaulted $5,000,000 in bonds. When president he knew where the bonds were located, and he went out and bought up the bonds for little or nothing—in some cases paying only 3 and 5 cents on a dollar. They gathered these bonds together, and when they got into their hands, they went to the R.F.C. and borrowed $5,000,000 on bonds they had practically stolen. That is this man Jaffray.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I have not the time. The Democratic administration has appointed this man Jaffray to look after the closed banks of the Northwest in that Federal Reserve district. He holds that job, and not only that but he is president of this great banking institution, and he draws down tremendous salaries from these four jobs. He is the receiver for the closed Federal banks, is the president of the bank, is president of the railroad company, and then draws down $70,000 a year as a receiver in this institution. These are the things that are going on in our Federal courts today, and I call specific attention to this judge out there who is not only committing a conspiracy but is compounding a felony in his actions, so far as his judicial conduct is concerned, and so far as the laws of the land are concerned. I have begged for a hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not criticizing that committee; I know that they are busy; but these things must be corrected, and they must be corrected if we are going to save this country from ruin, for all down through the history of the ages we know the effect of the decisions of judges, and we have come to that point in America today where we have practically no judges who look on the human side of things. They all have the other slant and look on what is known as "property rights" and trample underneath the sacred human rights of man.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. For a short question.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think there is one exception to his last statement in view of the mortgage moratorium decision rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I think they saw the handwriting on the wall and paid attention to it.

Mr. TRUAX. I think the gentleman is right. The great majority of judges are heartless. The people are being sold out, having their property confiscated every day.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Not only are they heartless, so far as property rights are concerned, but they are heartless so far as human rights are concerned. I sat for months and checked in every man who came into the penitentiary at Leavenworth and wrote up his life history, and I saw them bring before me to check into that penitentiary boys 15 and 16 years of age, and I saw them put them in there with hardened criminals, to make "Pretty Boy Floyds" and gunmen out of them, and that is what they are doing in our jurisprudence in America today. It is a crime and a shame. I do not want to take up very much more time, but I am going to read just a few little excerpts from a letter that I received:

JANUARY 25, 1934.

Hon. FRANCIS H. SHOEMAKER,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I have read your attack upon one Judge Molyneaux, of the Federal district court. It is about time that some Congressman should have the "sand in his craw" to flay the many legal reprobates who have been landed on these Federal benches by the most corrupt and vicious powers in our land.

I have been a kind of lawyer for more than 40 years and I have made it a special task to investigate the antecedents of the many scoundrels who have been lodged in these most vital and important positions and which deal with rights and liberties of the people of this land.

The bench of the Federal courts has been the final refuge of the most heartless and perverted legalists that ever cursed a nation. It is well known that the notorious George M. Fullman had the infamous Peter S. Grosscup appointed a Federal judge in Chicago, and we know the record of this scoundrel as such a judge. We know the influence that placed Judge Jenkins upon that bench and we know his record. We know the record of Judge Pollock, of Kansas City, and it is a rotten one, indeed. But why elaborate?

It is imperative that an exhaustive and thorough investigation of the Federal courts should be had in the matter of receiverships handled by these czars of the United States. The light of day should be turned on the ramifications of this branch of these courts, and the results would be astounding. Just cogitate on this fact: The Irving Trust Co. has been a pet of these Federal judges in the way of receiverships. It now has some 5,000 of these estates in its charge, and you know how these estates will be plucked clean by this institution.

The situation at Chicago should be thoroughly cleaned up, and there is rich picking there for an honest investigator. The favoritism that would be developed would shock the Nation if it can be shocked by the revelations of judicial and political depravity.

All of these Federal courts should be put under the magnifying glass and their rottenness exposed.

Mr. RICH. Who wrote that letter?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Oh, you do not want certain things to go into the RECORD. Everywhere, since my speech here on January 22, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, from practically every district, from practically every State in the United States, I have been receiving letters, information, telling about what these judges are doing in the various States. I wish the Members of Congress knew how serious this is. If you think it is not so, just get up here and attack a Federal judge and see the response that you get from the general public throughout the United States of America. That is one way to learn. The people are losing their homes, they are being robbed of everything.

There is another deal in Minneapolis, the Foshay deal, where over $150,000 was spent in 1 month for fees handed out to attorneys and receivers.

The Foshay Tower was put into receivership by the Power Trust of the United States of America because Foshay was the only utility man in the United States that employed union labor; and day before yesterday he went to Leavenworth to spend 15 years for the serious crime of employing union labor in putting up his buildings and his utilities. They loaned him money until they got him on a barrel, then they put him into receivership and framed him into the penitentiary for the false sale of stocks, and gave him 15 years. This same judge is implicated in that deal, if you please.

I hope that something may be done and may be done immediately. In fact I demand that action be taken with regard to this judge at once. I know that he is mentally unfit to sit upon the bench; and I know that he is absolutely incapable from the standpoint of legal knowledge. He has practically no legal knowledge and was considered one of the dumbest lawyers in the State of Minnesota before his appointment to the Federal court for the district of Minnesota.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that this judge is unfit mentally. Was the gentleman ever examined by physicians to determine his sanity?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. He has been in several sanatoria for mental trouble.

Mr. RICH. Was he ever examined for that particular ailment?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. The doctors handled him; yes. They did not put him in the sanitarium without a doctor.

Mr. RICH. Have they ever given him an examination to determine his sanity?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. They have never given the results to the public; no. They took him to California to avoid that.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, DISTRICT OF MINNESOTA, FOURTH DIVISION

NORTHWEST BANCORPORATION, A CORPORATION, PLAINTIFF, V. ELMER A. BENSON, COMMISSIONER OF BANKS OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA; S. PAUL SKAHEN, COMMISSIONER OF SECURITIES OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, AND GARFIELD W. BROWN, COMMISSIONER OF INSURANCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, ALL COMPRISING AND CONSTITUTING THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA AND ACTING AS THE SECURITIES DIVISION THEREOF, DEFENDANTS. IN EQUITY NO. 2747. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Whereas in the above-entitled cause a verified bill of complaint for a permanent injunction has been filed and it having appeared from said bill that there is danger of immediate and irreparable injury, loss, and damage being caused to plaintiff before notice can be served and a hearing had thereon unless defendants are, pending such hearing, restrained as herein set forth, for the reason that defendants threaten to proceed immediately and on January 19, 1934, with hearings and further proceedings under orders issued by them under date of November 21, 1933, in the matter of the investigation of the sale of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, and in the matter of the exemption from the operation of the law regulating the sale of securities of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, and in connection therewith to conduct a general examination and investigation of the books, records, papers, accounts, property, business, and affairs of plaintiff; that such injury threatened to plaintiff includes, or appears to include, interruption of and interference with plaintiff's business and the conduct thereof, damage and loss to plaintiff's business and the value thereof, and the subjecting of plaintiff to the hazard of fines and penalties provided in the Minnesota statutes, and the violation of plaintiff's constitutional rights, all as more fully set forth in said bill, all of which injury and damage is irreparable because plaintiff is without adequate remedy at law and for the reasons more fully set forth in said bill:

Now, therefore, take notice that you, Elmer A. Benson, commissioner of banks, S. Paul Skahen, commissioner of securities, and Garfield W. Brown, commissioner of insurance, of the State of Minnesota, all comprising and constituting the department of commerce of said State and acting as the securities division thereof, and each of you in your official capacity and individually, and all of your agents, servants, assistants, employees, and attorneys, and all persons in active concert and participating with you, and who shall, by personal service or otherwise, receive actual notice hereof, are hereby temporarily restrained and enjoined from holding any hearings under or pursuant to those certain orders made and issued by you under date of November 21, 1933, in the name of the department of commerce of the State of Minnesota and entitled "In the matter of the investigation of the sale of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, order for investigation", and "In re the exemption from the operation of the law regulating the sale of securities, of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, order suspending exempt status of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, a corporation", and from proceeding in any way under or by virtue of said orders, or either of them, and from enforcing or attempting to enforce any and all subpenas made and issued, or purporting to be made and issued under and by virtue of said orders, and from procuring or attempting to procure from any court any search warrants to be used for the purpose of obtaining any books, records, documents, writings, or papers of the plaintiff or of any of its directors, officers, agents, or employees; and from instituting or attempting to institute any proceedings for contempt under or by virtue of the issuance or service of said subpenas, and from instituting or attempting to institute any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, under or by virtue of or based upon the making or issuance of said orders or said subpenas, or any of them; and from making public or in any manner disclosing to any person whomsoever any information acquired by examination of any witness or of any of plaintiff's books, records, papers, or accounts under or by virtue of said orders, or any proceedings had or steps taken thereunder, until the further order of this court.

This temporary restraint is on condition that a bond be filed by plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 conditioned upon the payment of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered by such defendants as may be found to have been wrongly enjoined or restrained hereby, and upon plaintiff's not issuing or selling, directly or indirectly, any of the shares of its said common capital stock.

It is hereby ordered that the above-named defendants, and each of them, show cause before the court at chambers at the Federal Building, in the city of Minneapolis, Minn., at 10 o'clock a.m., on the 27th day of January 1934, why the temporary relief and other relief asked for in plaintiff's motion of even date herewith should not be granted.

It is further ordered that the temporary restraining order hereinabove set forth shall expire 10 days from this date unless the time thereof be extended hereafter by the court for good cause shown.

Let a copy of this order be served upon each of the defendants within 2 days from the date hereof.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 18th day of January 1934.

BROWN, COMMISSIONER OF INSURANCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, ALL COMPRISING AND CONSTITUTING THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, AND ACTING AS THE SECURITIES DIVISION THEREOF, DEFENDANTS. IN EQUITY, NO. —. MOTION

Now comes Northwest Bancorporation, the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, and moves this court on the verified bill of complaint filed herein for a temporary injunction, to be effective during the pendency of the above-entitled cause and until the final determination thereof, restraining and enjoining the above-named defendants, and each of them in their official capacity as stated in the title of this cause and individually, and all of their agents, servants, assistants, employees, and attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participating with them, and who shall by personal service or otherwise receive actual notice thereof, from holding any hearings under or pursuant to those certain orders made and issued by you under date of November 21, 1933, in the name of the Department of Commerce of the State of Minnesota, and entitled, "In the matter of the investigation of the sale of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, order for investigation", and "In re the exemption from the operation of the law regulating the sale of securities, of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, order suspending exempt status of the common capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation, a corporation", and from proceeding in any way under or by virtue of said orders, or either of them, and from enforcing or attempting to enforce any and all subpenas made and issued, or purporting to be made and issued under and by virtue of said orders, and from procuring or attempting to procure from any court any search warrants to be used for the purpose of obtaining any books, records, documents, writings, or papers of the plaintiff or any of its directors, officers, agents, or employees; and from instituting or attempting to institute any proceedings for contempt under or by virtue of the issuance or service of said subpenas, and from instituting or attempting to institute any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, under or by virtue of or based upon the making or issuance of said orders or said subpenas, or any of them; and from making public or in any manner disclosing to any person whomsoever any information acquired by examination of any witness or any of plaintiff's books, records, papers, or accounts under or by virtue of said orders, or any proceedings had or steps taken thereunder; and from retaining any of plaintiff's books, records, papers, or accounts, including copies thereof and excerpts and notations therefrom, heretofore submitted to or produced before or examined by defendants, their attorneys, agents, servants, assistants, or employees until a final determination and hearing of this cause.

And upon said verified bill of complaint plaintiff further moves the court for a temporary restraining order to be issued forthwith and without notice, restraining the defendants, and each of them, in their official capacities as stated in the title of this cause and individually, and each and all of their agents, servants, assistants, employees, and attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participating with them, and who shall, by personal service or otherwise, receive actual notice of such order, from doing any of the acts specified in the paragraph numbered 1 in the prayer for relief in said verified bill of complaint.

Each of the foregoing motions is made upon all the grounds and for all the reasons set forth in said verified bill of complaint, and the motion for said temporary restraining order is further made upon the ground that defendants threaten and propose forthwith on January 19, 1934, at 10 o'clock a.m., to proceed with hearings and require compliance with the subpenas hereinabove mentioned.

PAUL SKAHEN, COMMISSIONER OF SECURITIES OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA AND GARFIELD W. BROWN, COMMISSIONER OF INSURANCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, ALL COMPRISING AND CONSTITUTING THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA AND ACTING AS THE SECURITIES DIVISION THEREOF, DEFENDANTS. IN EQUITY NO. 2747

Brief of defendants—Statement of facts—Introductory

We believe that a statement of facts in their chronological order will give the best possible idea of the situation in this case and that such a statement will be more comprehensible than any other that might be made. Such a statement will show the law under which the Commerce Commission of Minnesota (herein referred to as the commission) acted, the making of the order for an investigation of the stock sales by Northwest Bancorporation (herein referred to as Banco, by which name it is commonly known), the issuance of subpenas for witnesses and the production of records, and the conduct of the investigation by the commission up to the time of the issuance of a temporary restraining order herein.

In brief, the story will be that of the attempt by certain financial leaders, mostly in Minneapolis, through the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis and its president, Edward A. Decker, to establish here a financial empire in the great Northwest. At first the operations were in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and North Dakota, and then spread into South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, and Washington. The plan was to acquire the ownership, and thus the control, of banks, both national and State, in the territory mentioned, by a corporation, the plaintiff Northwest Bancorporation. The scheme for acquisition of the ownership of this stock was in keeping with the bold ideas of control which moved the men behind Banco. They created the corporation, Banco, with no assets and no liabilities, launched it on its course of acquisition, which was successful to the amount of $80,000,000, of bank stocks for which Banco gave only its stock, and then through a series of frauds, misrepresentations, concealment of facts, corporate abuses, payment of dividends and other charges out of capital, stock-selling campaigns, pools, and syndicates of the insiders who controlled Banco, a disregard of sound business and accounting practices, which necessitated the setting up of an entirely new financial structure for Banco, in which the frauds, concealments, dishonesty, and corporate abuses that had preceded were again in turn concealed and which reorganization itself was obtained by fraud and concealment and misrepresentation of facts, many of which constitute violations of corporate law, both civil and criminal, almost ran Banco to the point from which it started, viz, that of having no assets, all of which resulted in losses of tens of millions of dollars to investors. Banco started with nothing, soared to a market value of almost $90,000,000, and has collapsed to almost nothing. It is a story of wrongdoing and base betrayal, which we propose to reveal, not in our own words, but in that of plaintiff's own officers and plaintiff's own exhibits.

The investigation has only been started. There have only been 3 days of hearing. Every fact has been substantiated by evidence. Many facts are still to be proven. Mr. Decker, chairman of Banco and Northwest National Bank, has told his interrogators before the commission time and again that the facts are to be found in plaintiff's records and that he personally does not know. He has stated in his short time on the witness stand that he does not know 117 times. The commission has resorted to plaintiff's records to get the information which it now has. It proposes, with the lifting of the restraining order herein, to search those records for the matters that Mr. Decker does not know. It proposes to explore the realm of "I don't know." The answer "I don't know" repeated so many times suggests a motive for concealment. As the court said in Gates v. Kelley, 15 N.Dak. 639, 110 N.W. 770, 773:

"Even an untruthful witness will not usually lie without a motive."

Why does not Edward Decker know, on the stand, those things which he ordinarily would know and which it was his duty to know? This, the commission proposes to find out in order to protect the public and perform its duties under the laws of the State of Minnesota.

STATUTE UNDER WHICH COMMISSION ACTED

The statute, laws of Minnesota, 1925, chapter 192, section 19; amended id. laws 1927, chapter 66, section 11; amended id. laws 1934, chapter 408, section 15, so far as here pertinent, is as follows:

"Whenever the commission from information in its possession has reasonable ground to believe that any person within 3 years has sold, or is about to sell, any securities, including securities exempted by section 2 hereof, and that such securities are or were fraudulent or are about to be or were sold in a fraudulent manner, or that such person in such sale or attempted sale of such securities has worked or will work a fraud on purchasers thereof, or that such person in such sale or attempted sale has violated or is about to violate any of the provisions of this act, the commission shall have power to investigate said matters. In any such case the commission shall have power to make an examination and investigation of the books, records, papers, accounts, property, business, and affairs of such person, and to make or cause to be made on its behalf an audit of the accounts, books, and records of such person, and by its order to require such person to permit such examination, investigation, and audit to be made and to require such person to submit to the commission his books, papers, records, and accounts for the purpose of such examination, investigation and audit. If such securities were or are about to be sold for or on behalf of the issuer thereof the commission shall have like powers as against such issuer.

"If any person or issuer shall fail or refuse to obey any order of the commission, which it is authorized under this act to make, requiring such person to permit an examination, investigation, or audit of his books, records, papers, or accounts by or on behalf of the commission, and to submit the same to the commission for such purpose, the district court, upon petition of the commission, subject to the limitations in sections 7 and 10 of article 1 of the State constitution and in articles 4 and 5 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, shall forthwith and without notice cause a search warrant to be issued directed to the sheriff commanding the sheriff forthwith to search for and seize the books, records, papers, and accounts of such person or issuer and deliver them to the commission for the purpose of such examination. The petition of the commission filed with the district court, if duly verified and sufficiently specific, or and any affidavit filed in such proceedings may be taken by the court as authority for the issuance of such search warrant; and all proceedings thereunder shall be substantially the same as like proceedings under sections 10537 to 10540, both inclusive, General Statutes 1923. Any books, papers, records, or accounts so seized shall be held by the commission for a reasonable length of time for the purpose of making such examination, investigation, or audit, and shall be then returned to the person from whose possession they were taken, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

"The commission may by summons or subpena require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books or papers before it relating to any matter as to which it has jurisdiction under this act. Such a summons or subpena may be issued by any commissioner. It shall be served in the same manner on a summons or subpena for witnesses in criminal cases issued on behalf of the State, and all provisions of law relative to a summons or subpena issued in such cases shall apply to a summons or subpena issued under this act so far as applicable. Any commissioner may require any witnesses to be sworn before testifying. Any judge of the district court may, upon application by the attorney general on behalf of the commission, compel the attendance of witnesses and the giving of testimony before the commission in the same manner and to the same extent as before said court.

"A natural person who shall claim the privileges of refusing to testify on the ground that his testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, might tend to incriminate or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, shall not be excused on said ground from attending and testifying before the commission acting under the provisions of this act; but such natural person, having claimed said privilege and having been required nevertheless to testify, shall not be prosecuted or subjected to a penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any action, matter, or thing, concerning which he may be required so to testify or produce evidence, except for perjury committed in such testimony (1925, c. 192, sec. 19; amended 1927, c. 66, sec. 11; amended 1933, c. 408, sec. 15)."

In connection with the statute just cited, the court should consider sections 3996–12, Mason's Minnesota Statutes, 1927, which is as follows:

"On all lawful orders of the commission, made without a hearing having been had on the matter thereby determined, or opportunity therefor afforded, the interested person shall have the right within 30 days from the date thereof to demand a hearing on such matter. On any such demand it shall be the duty of the commission to fix a date for a hearing not more than 30 days from the date of such demand. At the time set a hearing shall be had, after which the commission shall make such further order as the facts require and may either vacate, modify, or adhere to, the order theretofore made (1925, c. 192, sec. 12; amended 1927, c. 66, sec. 9)."

THE ORDER FOR INVESTIGATION

A copy of the order for investigation is exhibit "B", attached to the complaint herein. That this order was issued pursuant to the terms of the statute is manifest from the reading of the statute and the order. It naturally follows that if the statute is valid the order is valid.

SCOPE

The investigation is confined to Banco as a holding company. It is not an investigation of individual banks (p. 162).

I. THE HEARING

a. Plaintiff invited and consented to the hearing and submitted to the jurisdiction of the commission

The Banco, by its officers, employees, and attorneys, appeared before the commission pursuant to the order of investigation and subpenas issued for the attendance of the officers and the production of documents. The present complaint is in quite marked contrast to the statements, position, and conduct of plaintiff's officers at the hearing. Mr. Decker, used to doing things in a big way, a great deal like our friend Andy of radio fame, was most agreeable and willing during the hearing, until it appeared that the investigation was to be a real one, in which the real story of Banco was to be told. Then he changed his attitude. The change was gradual—evasions at first, then denials, then seeking refuge in this court from the whole matter.

Mr. Decker started out by saying that he and Banco welcomed this investigation. He was quite emphatic. On page 2 this is shown:

"Q. I notice, Mr. Decker, that you gave a statement to the press in connection with this investigation, that you and your institution welcomed an investigation of this matter in the sale of stock, and I take it that that is the attitude of yourself and your organization?

"A. Yes."

Plaintiff made no objection of any kind at any time in which the commission jurisdiction or right to proceed was challenged. It early indicated that it welcomed the investigation. Time and again it indicated that it had no objection, stipulated as to procedure, arranged for examination of its documents, asked for continuances (which were granted), participated in the proceedings and in all things submitted to and acquiesced in the commission's jurisdiction and its proceedings. At page 45, its counsel, Mr. Benson, in answer to a suggestion that a book be marked an exhibit, stated, "I don't see any objection." At page 43, he stipulated relative to substituting copies for the originals of certain exhibits. Mr. Decker, at page 48, indicated that the commission is "welcome" to books containing records of certain stock purchases.

That Mr. Decker and his attorneys did not regard this investigation as an invasion of their constitutional and legal rights is further evidenced by testimony given on page 50, when he said, being asked as to certain entries which he stated could be found only in his check book:

"I can have such a statement made from my check book and would be very glad to, if you want it."

Again, when asked about certain records which he apparently did not have with him, he said:

"You tell the attorneys what you want and they can get it for you" (p. 50).

In answer to whether he would produce certain records relative to a certain pool or syndicate formed for the purpose of dealing in Banco stock, he said:

"I would be glad to get it for you" (p. 51).

And on the same page that he would produce certain joint accounts which he kept.

Then, when his examination for the first day was drawing to a close, apparently satisfied so far, when told that he was about to be excused, he said:

"You can have me for another year if you want to" (p. 52).

In the same spirit, when certain correspondence was demanded of him, he said:

"Well, if you give a memoranda of it and the dates or anything to identify it, you are certainly welcome" (p. 54).

Mr. Decker was not alone in this. Mr. Albrecht and Banco's attorneys were just as willing to submit and did submit to the commission's jurisdiction. This is apparent from the evidence of the witness, Albrecht, a vice president of Banco, who testified that he failed to produce certain documents because council told him another witness would be examined relative thereto and expected to have them with him. Thereupon, when asked when the documents would be produced, counsel said:

"Whenever you are ready for them" (p. 92).

Then at pages 93 and 94 it was agreed that the commission could send its men to Banco, where they would be given a room to work in and an opportunity to pick out the documents and exhibits wanted. By this agreement, plaintiff consented to the examination of its papers in its offices, in lieu of subpenas, in order to facilitate the production of exhibits. This is the examination, referred to in the affidavit of Thomson, MacTavish, and Buelow, page 5, paragraph 10, thereof. This is what happened:

"* * * that thereafter arrangements were made by plaintiff's counsel with defendants to permit employees of defendants to come to plaintiff's offices and make an examination of the matters covered by items nos. 1, 2, and 3 in said exhibit A, and thereupon and thereafter beginning with the morning of January 12, defendants sent to plaintiff's offices certain of its employees who remained, except as hereinafter stated, at plaintiff's office in examining said documents throughout the working hours of each day (Sunday excepted) until the time of the filing of the bill of complaint herein and the issuance of the restraining order; that during said period of time there were always three employees of defendant engaged in plaintiff's offices in the examination of said records, some of the employees being relieved from time to time by other employees of defendants likewise engaged; that during said period said employees were engaged in making and did make and take with them from the offices of plaintiff extensive notes and excerpts from and copies of such records of plaintiff; * * *."

So far all was well. But as the testimony gradually and surely commenced to reveal the real financial condition of Banco and the fraud, the misrepresentation, the concealment of the true financial status, the facts making necessary Banco's financial reorganization and all the rest of it, Banco commenced to change its attitude. It did not want the investigation to go on. It asked for continuances, which the commission granted. Its attorneys took more part in the proceedings. The proceedings became a trial with the usual objections, stipulations, arguments, interruptions, explanations, and so on. Whole pages are filled with remarks of plaintiff's counsel. It would take too long to state what happened in detail. We call the court's attention to the record, where these matters other than those which we have mentioned are noted as indicated below:

Pages 93–94, Albrecht—arrangement was made for auditor to examine and go through books, through Watson, Skahen, and Attorney Benson.

Arrangements were made by Banco voluntarily for an examination of its books, papers, and records. This is referred to in the affidavit of Thomas, MacTavish, and Buelow, at pages 5 and 6 thereof, as follows:

"* * * that thereafter arrangements were made by plaintiff's counsel with defendants to permit employees of defendants to come to plaintiff's offices and make an examination of the matters covered by items numbered 1, 2, and 3, in said exhibit 'A', and thereupon and thereafter, beginning with the morning of January 12, defendants sent to plaintiff's offices certain of its employees who remained, except as hereinafter stated, at plaintiff's office in examining said documents throughout the working hours of each day (Sunday excepted) until the time of the filing of the bill of complaint herein and the issuance of the restraining order; that during said period of time there were always three employes of defendant engaged in plaintiff's offices in the examination of said records, some of the employees being relieved from time to time by other employees of defendants likewise engaged; that during said period said employees were engaged in making and did make and take with them from the offices of plaintiff extensive notes and excerpts from and copies of such records of plaintiff;

Pages 249–50, granted continuance and adjourned to January 19 upon understanding and agreement commission's men could examine books of Banco.

When it commenced to be definitely established that Banco's stock was and is fraudulent, that it was and is being sold in a fraudulent manner, and that the sale thereof has and will work a fraud on purchasers thereof, and that Banco was violating the blue-sky and other laws of Minnesota, and even of the United States, and that the frauds amounted to millions of dollars, Banco wanted to end the investigation. It became imperative for Banco to end it. It changed its attitude. No longer did it offer to cooperate. No longer was it willing to have its records examined. Decker was no longer willing to be witness for 1 year if wanted, nor was he willing to be a witness at all. The put-on bravado was gone. Banco ran for cover. Banco ran for the Federal court. Things which it agreed to and found no objection to it now called names and denounced as violations of its constitutional rights—deprivation of its rights without due process of law and other than by the laws of the land, unlawful search and seizure, and other heavy-sounding names. It comes to this court, too, without having demanded a hearing under section 3996–12 and without any objection at all before the commission.

So far we have told only about Banco's appearance and submission to the commission's jurisdiction and its attempt to run out of the jurisdiction of the commission into the protection of an injunction of this court. Now we will tell why Banco wants an injunction to stop this investigation. In doing this we must tell the facts about the organization of Banco, its stock selling, etc.

II. THE ORGANIZATION OF BANCO

a. Banco's birth and growth

The idea of organizing Banco "originated in 1928 with certain officers and directors of the Northwestern National Bank" and was discussed by them from time to time in the bank (p. 3). Mr. Decker stated (p. 4) that 60 or 90 days after the matter was first thought of and discussed it took definite shape in the form of perfecting an organization. This was in the latter part of 1928 and early in 1929 (pp. 11–12). The matter was first discussed among the officers as individuals, and later it was taken before the directors of the Northwestern National Bank:

"Q. And there it was discussed and laid before them?

"A. Yes.

"Q. With the idea, of course, predominating that such a company should be formed?

"A. Eventually, yes."

Banco was to be a holding company "which would hold the capital stocks of various financial institutions throughout the Northwest", not operating them directly but owning stocks in them, generally a controlling interest, as its own assets, managed by itself. Mr. Decker and others acted to formulate a definite plan to submit to the board of directors, but it is claimed that no corporate action was ever taken by the Northwestern National Bank (p. 8). The purpose of the corporation was "to absorb by ownership the capital stocks of the northwestern banks" and for no other purpose. Mr. Decker stated this in so many words (p. 10).

After the plan was conceived Mr. Decker and his associates immediately commenced to carry it into execution. In common with the individuals which brought it into being, Banco came into this world possessed of nothing. It had no assets and no liabilities; nor did it have any until after it had acquired the stock of the first group of banks. Mr. Decker so testified at page 97. It had nothing except its corporate stock; and this it had no right to issue except for value received in exchange. Possessed of nothing except its stock it proceeded to acquire assets by exchanging a portion of that stock for the stock of certain leading banks of the Northwest. The stockholders of the Northwestern National Bank, Minneapolis, First National Bank of La Crosse, Wis., First National Bank of Fargo, N.Dak., and First National Bank of Mason City, Iowa, transferred their stock to Banco in exchange for stock in Banco (p. 10). Mr. Decker testified that at that time Banco "had no assets and had no liabilities" (p. 11). He did not know whether qualifying shares for directors had been issued (p. 97). This exchange of stock was done pursuant to "A Plan and Deposit Agreement", dated January 8, 1929, commissioner's exhibit no. 1. It was agreed that Banco stock should be exchanged at its par value, $50 per share, and that the other stocks, for the purpose of this exchange, should be valued as follows:

Northwestern National Bank, Minneapolis	$400
First National Bank, Fargo, N.Dak	310
First National Bank, Mason City, Iowa	300
First National Bank, La Crosse, Wis

Banco gave $23,805,000 of its stock for the stock of four banks above named. These banks had tangible assets as follows:

Capital stock	$6,750,000
Surplus	4,305,000
Undivided profits	2,211,033
Total	13,266,033

The stock was issued by Banco as follows (pp. 24–27):

Northwestern National Bank	$20,000,000
First National Bank, Mason City	1,500,000
First National Bank, Fargo, N.Dak	930,000
National Bank of LaCrosse	1,375,000
Total	23,805,000

In this manner Banco was launched, encumbered with $10,539,000 of bonus, water, or goodwill, whatever you may choose to call it. Ten million five hundred and thirty-nine thousand dollars is the amount which Banco paid for the stocks of the affiliate banks over and above the value of their tangible assets. That deal made Banco stock worth $28.75 on a tangible-asset basis, though its par value was $50 per share. Mr. Decker said that the amount of the exchange basis over and above tangible value was in reality going-concern value or goodwill. However this may be, this amount was not shown on the books of the Banco as going-concern value or goodwill, but on the contrary it was included as assets in "stocks and bonds", and it was thus shown in statements which were furnished to the stockholders for their information and to the public as a basis for inducing it to buy Banco stock (pp. 35–37, 41–42). In short, Banco set up on its books as the cash value of the acquired stock what those stocks cost it in its own stock. In figuring this cost the par value of Banco stock, $50, was taken instead of its real value in terms of tangible assets, $28.75. Thus there was entered as assets stocks and bonds in the amount of $23,805,000 instead of $13,266,000, without a separate entry of $10,539,000 for goodwill, bonus, or water. As heretofore stated, no separate entry was made on Banco's books to show that there was nothing tangible behind these $10,539,000 (pp. 26, 28–29).

As early as January 28, 1929, within a few weeks after Banco was organized (pp. 60–67), it laid plans for a stock-selling campaign and the acquisition of still other banks. Without any assets or earnings out of which to declare dividends it declared a dividend of 45 cents per share on that day, on the condition that "the earnings of the company be sufficient therefor", which it referred to in its application for registration of securities filed with the State securities commission on February 14, 1929. Can there be any question but that this was for the purpose of making Banco stock attractive to purchasers? It registered for sale at that time 600,000 of its shares at the par value of $30,000,000. If Banco stock had an actual value of $28.75 as the testimony shows, according to Mr. Decker's testimony (p. 26), each of the purchasers paid $21.25 for bonus or water for each share of stock and in the aggregate the purchasers of this stock which was offered to the public brought $12,750,000 of bonus or water for which they received no value at all.

It is significant that Banco restricted the right of sale of Banco stock, exchanged for other stock, for a period of 6 months after the exchange so as to prevent the owners thereof from disposing of it in competition with stock sold by Banco (pp. 28–29). This was done in the case of all stocks that were issued in exchange for other stock. The purpose is obvious: To allow Banco to control prices while the big stock sale was on.

b. The acquisition of the Midland National Bank & Trust Co.

Operating along the lines indicated, prior to September 1929, Banco commenced negotiations for the acquisition of the stock of the Midland National Bank & Trust Co. of Minneapolis. That stock was acquired some time in September 1929. At that time Banco stock was quoted at about $100 per share. The Midland National Bank had tangible assets of $1,900,000, and its stock sold on a basis of about $190 at $100 par (pp. 56–65). Banco gave 50,000 shares of its stock of the then market value of $5,000,000 for the stock of the Midland National Bank & Trust Co. of the then market value of $1,900,000. In other words, a bonus of over $3,000,000 was paid for the Midland stock in a deal involving $5,000,000 (p. 65). The representatives of Banco did not tell the Midland people that a share of Banco stock at that time had less than $28.75 of tangible assets behind it. In fact, Mr. Decker, who represented Banco, said that Banco stock was going still higher, and used the ostensible market value of Banco as a bait to lure the Midland people on—that he was, in effect, giving them $5,000,000 for $1,900,000. This is shown by the testimony of Mr. Mills, a former president of Midland National Bank (pp. 66–67), as follows:

"Q. And as a matter of fact, Mr. Mills, isn't it true that the thing which induced you as the president of Midland National Bank to accept share for share of Northwest Banco stock was the fact that that stock had an ostensible market value at that time of what it was quoted at?

"A. Yes.

"Q. And that was accepted by you as being the worth and value of Northwest Bancorporation?

"A. Well, that is what it was selling at.

"Q. In obtaining the consent of your stockholders to this exchange, Mr. Mills, I will ask you if it isn't true that the then existing sale price of quotations of Northwest Banco stock was in effect the determining factor in getting them to exchange?

"A. Yes.

"Q. The fact that it was then selling and that they ostensibly were obtaining stock worth in round numbers $100 was the determining thing when making the exchange; is that not true?

"A. Yes."

Banco exacted from each of the stockholders of Midland an agreement in writing to withhold the Banco stock acquired in the exchange, from the market for a period of 6 months.

The record upon this subject has not been made up in full by reason of the restraining order which has been issued in this matter by this court, but certain significant facts have been developed which would indicate that other stocks were acquired on the same basis. We will show later in the statement of facts that it was necessary to reduce the capital and surplus of Banco from $39,000,000 to $29,000,000, of which $25,000,000 was capital, by reason of the presence in the capital of over $39,000,000 of admitted bonus or water valuations, together with something like $14,000,000 of losses which the company sustained in various ways. It seems to us that the Commerce Commission of Minnesota has an important duty to discharge in this for the most part unexplored field to find out how this water and bonus got into the capital structure of Banco; who the victims were; how they were victimized; what frauds were practiced on them; and what tricks, concealments, and misrepresentations had been made in order to sell this stock at these grossly excessive prices. These facts also reveal quite fully and the inference from them is irresistible that the sale of this stock was a fraud on the public and that this matter should not rest until the Commerce Commission of Minnesota has done its full duty with reference to it under the laws of the State.

III. THE PAYMENT OF DIVIDENDS

The story of the dividends declared and paid by Banco is on a par with that of the acquisition of the stock of the affiliate banks. Just as tens of millions of dollars of bonus or water were put into the corporate structure by the stock acquisition transactions of Banco, so too, millions of dollars of dividends were declared and paid when there were no earnings or very small earnings out of which they could properly or legally be paid. These dividends were paid out of capital. The fact that there were no earnings was concealed from the stockholders and the public. Not only this, but there were affirmative misrepresentations by Banco that its earnings were several times in excess of dividend requirements. One cannot read the record in this case without asking himself how long the officers of Banco hoped to operate on this basis without having a day of reckoning. What did they gamble on to save them from a fate that was absolutely certain?

One of the most significant transactions is the declaration of the dividend of April 1, 1929, at the directors' meeting on January 28, 1929. A dividend of 45 cents per share payable April 1 was declared. At that time the directors of Banco did not know on how many shares of stock the dividend would be payable because not one of the affiliate banks had then agreed to come in; nor did they know whether there would be $1 of income with which to make the payment. Banco did not know what banks would come in. It did not know what assets the company was going to have out of which to pay these dividends (p. 67). This authorization of a dividend at best was purely a hopeful guess, or perhaps far worse, a deliberate fraud to make the stock seem attractive. As a matter of fact the proposal to the affiliate banks to come in was not made until the next meeting of the board of directors, held on February 19, 1929 (exhibit 15, p. 86). The affiliate banks were actually taken in on March 19, 1929, and their stockholders were charged 35 cents per share as the amount of the accrued dividends on Banco stock issued to them. At that time, too, it is well to remember Mr. Decker's testimony that Banco had no assets except the stocks which it had acquired from the affiliates (p. 97). On April 1, 1929, when the first dividend was paid, the following facts appear from the books of Banco:

April 1, paid on 551,501 shares at 45 cents quarterly dividend	$248,175.45
Debtor balance	248,175.45

Well knowing that the hopeful anticipations of January 28, 1929, had failed to materialize by April 1 and that the April 1, 1929, dividend had to be paid entirely out of capital, Banco, at its June 1929 meeting, declared a dividend of 45 cents per share payable July 1, 1929. Its books show the following:

Interest received	$67,318.44
Profits—sale of stock	873.15
	68,191.59
Less expense	2,436.95
Total	65,754.64
Dividend on 551,501 shares, at 45 cents per share	248,175.45

This dividend was paid as follows: $65,754.64 out of money on hand and $182,420.81 out of capital.

At the directors' meeting of March 26, 1930, Banco declared a dividend of 45 cents per share, payable on April 1, 1930. The amount of the dividend voted was $742,000 and the earnings of the company were actually only $11,000 (pp. 106, 103–106, 106–108).

At the time when this dividend was declared the directors had before them an untrue letter from one of their officers representing that Banco was earning money.

The thought occurs, why did the officers and directors of Banco have a lying letter before them as the basis for declaring a dividend? They must have been advised of the true status of their corporate affairs. They could not deceive themselves. Was it the defense prepared in advance in case there was a criminal prosecution? Was it both the basis and justification for wrongdoing? What was the real reason? What possible excuse could there be for Thomson's writing such a letter and the officials of Banco acting on it?

In line with the accustomed and usual practice in Banco the directors on June 25, 1930, declared another dividend of 45 cents per share, payable on July 1, 1930. For that period, at that time, the expenses and dividends of Banco were $105,863 in excess of earnings (pp. 106–107). Mr. Decker, as a witness, was asked:

"Q. I call your particular attention to the last line of that report and ask that you read that to the commission?

"A. It shows expense and dividends in excess of collected earnings, $105,863.06.

"Q. So that at the time when this dividend of 45 cents per share was declared you had before you a report of your general manager showing that at that time expenses and dividends in excess of collected earnings had then been disbursed of $105,863.06, didn't you?

"A. Yes, sir."

Mr. Decker then stated that the dividend of July 1, which was at that time declared, amounted to $746,340.75 more (p. 107), which must have left a deficit of $852,203.81.

Pursuing the same course of practice, the directors of Banco on September 11, 1930, declared a dividend of 45 cents per share, payable on October 1, 1930. At that time, according to Mr. Decker's testimony, the expenses and dividends were $192,671.13 in excess of collected earnings. At that time (p. 108) the directors of Banco had before it a letter written by its president, J. C. Thomson, in which he stated that the earnings of Banco were $3.15 per share, or one and three fourths times the annual dividend requirement (pp. 108–110). That this letter was absolutely false is apparent from what we have stated. We will give this letter particular attention infra.

Pursuing the same practice, the board of directors of Banco on December 11, 1930, which was 26 days after the Thomson letter was written, declared a dividend of 45 cents per share, payable on January 1, 1931. At that time Banco's books showed a deficit of $235,513.45. The financial report of Banco is shown on exhibit 15, page 171. Mr. Decker was questioned relative to this as follows:

"Q. I call to your particular attention and ask that you read the statement therein contained as to whether or not at that time you had a deficit or a surplus from your earnings when you voted that dividend?

"A. Shows a deficit of $235,513.45.

"Q. And that was 26 days after this letter of Mr. Thomson's dated November 15, 1930, went out recommending this stock, was it not?

"A. Yes."

So, too, Banco at its directors' meeting on March 12, 1931, declared a dividend of 45 cents per share, payable April 1, 1931. At the time of the directors' meeting they had before them a statement, prepared 12 days previous, on February 28, 1931, showing a deficit of $15,087.15. The amount of the dividends declared was $754,515. Mr. Decker was questioned about this and testified:

"Q. So that at the time when you voted this dividend to be payable April 1, amounting to, I believe, $754,515, your company showed a deficit in earnings of $15,087.65, is that not true?

"A. Yes; I would say deficit on collected earnings.

"Q. On the statement of February 28 it shows a deficit, doesn't it. That is the way it is worded, is it not?

"A. Yes, sir."

On September 10, 1931, another dividend was declared of 45 cents per share, payable on October 1, 1931 (p. 112). The amount of this dividend was $1,491,103.35. There was a deficit at the time the dividend was declared of $192,306.75 (pp. 112–113).

There are some corporate practices of Banco in connection with the declaration of dividends that should be thoroughly investigated. Unless this is done no one will know what the actual financial situation of the company is. Prior to 1931 the practice had been for Banco to credit its dividends and incomes received without making any provisions for losses sustained. This is quite clearly shown by the audit of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., Commissioner's Exhibit 21. This was admitted, although he tried to evade it, by Mr. Decker in the following testimony:

"Q. Now then, Mr. Decker, according to that then, prior to December 31, 1930, your corporation had been crediting itself with the dividends received and making no provisions for the losses sustained by any of your operating units in your statement as to earnings according to this statement, that is correct, isn't it?

"A. I don't know.

"Q. I say that is in there, isn't it? That is in their statement?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Yes. Now, Mr. Decker, at that time you charged off to what was known as "an accrual basis"; that is, you took credit for all the earnings of the subsidiaries and charging off all the losses. That is the way it was set up from this point?

"A. You mean the books of the corporation or books of the individual banks?

"Q. On the books of the corporation you took credit for all subsidiary earnings and charged off losses, taking the net from that point on. That is what they say?

"A. I don't think the books of the corporation reflected charge-offs in the individual banks but only on their own affairs.

"Q. Well, let us read this and see: 'Prior to December 30 the income from the companies from investment in banks and other affiliated companies was restricted to dividends received therefrom and provision was not made for losses sustained by any of the units.' That is for losses sustained by your unit bank, isn't it?

"A. You mean on the books of the company?

"Q. They never had done that prior to 1931?

"A. I presume that is correct" (pp. 115–116).

Illuminating, too, are many of the other facts disclosed in the record relative to the condition of the company when dividends were declared. On April 1, 1930, Banco had outstanding 1,649,225 shares of stock. The auditor's report showed the net income, without any deductions for losses sustained, of $2,914,000. Mr. Thomson had gotten out a letter for Banco in which he stated the fact to be that the earnings were $3.83 per share after charge-offs and recoveries had been made. If this letter were true, the income of Banco for that year would have been in excess of $5,000,000, which is obviously not true. He misrepresented the income to be over $2,100,000 in excess of what it actually was. The earnings were approximately $2,100,000 less than claimed (p. 118).

The auditor of Banco, in his report of December 31, 1929, covering a period of Banco from its inception to that date, stated that the net income of Banco was $2,428,559.22. The annual report to the stockholders misstated and misrepresented the fact. It stated that the earnings of Banco were $4.50 per share. At that time there were outstanding 1,606,993 shares. If the report of Banco was correct the income for the year was $7,243,153.50. It was false and overstated the income in the amount of $4,814,494.28.

This statement was made in language which would deceive the most wary when off his guard. It appeared very innocent and matter of fact.

In 1930 the report of Banco to its stockholders contained the following:

"Net operating earnings of the group applicable to Northwest Bancorporation stock ownership were equal to $3.87 a share on 1,673,912 shares outstanding. This compared with $4.50 a share on 1,606,993 shares for 1929. Net earnings for 1930 after current charge-offs were equal to $3.20 a share. Dividends paid during the year amounted to $1.80 a share."

Banco's auditor reported net income for the year in the sum of $2,914,110.63. If the statements in the report to the stockholders were true, the income of Banco was $6,474,510. It is false and overstated in the sum of $3,560,399.38.

The directors of Banco were not content to falsely state the facts in their annual report as indicated, but they added to it their own very significant interpretation, which is as follows:

"A. Operating earnings applicable to stock of Northwest Bancorporation, after eliminating the proportion applicable to minority interests in affiliated institutions, were $5,741,625.70, or $3.43 per share, as compared with $3.87 per share in 1930. Dividends of $1.80 per share were paid during the year, amounting to $3,004,936.20. Considered from another viewpoint, these earnings were equal to 6.86 percent on the par value of the capital stock of Northwest Bancorporation outstanding, as compared with 7.74 percent for 1930. These figures clearly demonstrate the ability of the corporation to maintain a liberal margin over a reasonable dividend under normal business conditions. Officers of the corporation intend to maintain such policies as will insure sound institutions, and they will be guided as to the amount to be distributed in dividends during these abnormal times by a full regard for the ultimate good of the stockholders" (p. 125).

It appears from the testimony of Mr. Decker that instead of there being operating earnings, as claimed in the amount of $5,741,625.70, in 1930, there was an actual deficit of $4,461,029.72. The audit of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. refers to this, as follows:

"A. We believe consideration should also be given to the extent to which dividends have been paid out of capital surplus, as computed for income-tax purposes. The computation for this purpose would differ from that for corporate purposes. However, to the extent paid out of capital surplus, such dividends constitute a nontaxable distribution, and, in our opinion, should be reported to the Treasury Department in order that the liability of stockholders for surtax may be correctly determined" (p. 127).

This report points out that it is claimed that such payment of dividends out of capital may be authorized under the laws of the State of Delaware. It also points out that the capital surplus of the company includes an amount of $9,378,707.60, resulting from the valuation placed upon investments in banks and affiliated companies; that such payments may be correct from an accounting point of view, but doubtful from a legal point of view, and the auditors state, "We believe that consideration should be given to the question as to whether this sum is available for dividends under the Delaware law." The report shows that dividends paid out of capital credited to surplus amount to $9,378,707.60 (p. 128). Exhibit 14, which is the annual report sent out to the stockholders on March 1, 1932, contains a copy of the letter from the auditors and a copy of their balance sheet, without the comments and explanations, showing that dividends were paid out of capital. The effect of the exhibit is to lead one to believe that the auditors in all things approved the financial practices of Banco, whereas the truth is that they quite strictly disapproved them, and suggested to Banco that they have the advice of counsel as to the corporate practices indulged in by the company. As a result of the business practices of Banco it became more and more involved. It became necessary to charge off losses in the amount of $13,207,591.62, consisting of the following items (p. 130):

Net loss on loans	$6,100,759.90
Net add to reserves: $1,285,534.04, less $336,543.93	947,990.11
Total	7,049,750.01
Reserve for loss on loans	3,152,905.41
Dividends paid by Banco	3,004,936.20
Total charged off	13,207,591.62

In its report to its stockholders Banco reported earnings for that year of $5,741,000 but did not inform them that it had charged off these items in excess of $14,000,000. At page 131 Mr. Decker was interrogated about this, and the testimony is as follows:

"Q. What I am looking at, Mr. Decker, is whether the statement that you furnished to your stockholders give to them the true facts of your operations or deceives them?

"A. Well, it certainly wasn't intended to deceive them."

"Q. And so, while you included this portion of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.'s report showing $5,741,000 earnings, you neglected to include the other half of it, didn't you?

"A. Not if there were charge-offs. It certainly reflects in that net to the shareholders."

Mr. Decker further admitted on page 132 that Banco had not told the shareholders about the losses sustained. He admitted, however, that the reports of Banco to the stockholders had shown earnings as follows:

Earnings shown by reports:

1929	$7,450,000
1930	6,774,000
1931	6,014,168
Total	20,238,168

The company's auditor's figures show the deficit on this account for 1931 to be $4,461,000.

In the face of these figures it is significant that Mr. Decker did not admit that Thomson's letter had been written, stating that the earnings were $3.15 per share. We call the court's attention to the testimony of Mr. Decker on page 135 in which he did some very artful evading.

These irregularities made necessary a change in the financial structure of Banco by setting aside a reserve of $14,000,000 to cover losses. Nevertheless, after this $14,000,000 had been so set aside as a reserve for losses in 1932 the directors of Banco at its November meeting in 1932 declared another dividend of 45 cents per share, payable on January 1, 1933 (p. 146).

Why such a dividend was declared no one on the outside can know with certainty. It probably was to reassure the public as to the financial strength of Banco and thereby keep the price of its stock at a higher level.

Mr. Decker asserted that these practices were pursued on the advice of attorneys. He said:

"We got an opinion from all the attorneys."

We expect to discuss the law of Delaware relative to the matter and why it was necessary to get an opinion from all the attorneys. This is a matter that deserves separate and special treatment, and it shall have it.

What has been stated has been revealed in the short time that the investigation has been in progress in spite of the evasions and denials of Mr. Decker. It is reasonable to believe that if a restraining order had not been issued further disclosures might have been made. We believe that such disclosures would be for the benefit of the public. We believe that if the Minnesota Commerce Commission secures this information it can and will take many measures to protect the public in transactions growing out of Banco stock. There is a great field yet to be explored before all the facts are fully developed and disclosed. It is the duty of the commerce commission to pursue this investigation. It is for the legal protection of the public with reference to all matters of this character, and the public is entitled to receive that protection, unhampered by the restraining order of this court.

IV. THE REDUCTION OF BANCO'S CAPITAL STOCK AND THE SETTING UP OF A NEW FINANCIAL STRUCTURE OF BANCO

The day of reckoning for Banco's corporate irregularities and abuses finally came. It seems to us that it did not require the abilities of a prophet to foresee and to foretell what actually happened. Banco was a house built upon the sands. Into its very foundation went tens of millions of dollars of water and bonus values. A capital structure resting upon such a foundation could not stand. That it was bound to collapse was a certainty. The price paid by Banco for stocks which it acquired was $39,394,355.36 in excess of the net tangible assets represented by these stocks. Mr. Decker admitted this in so many words at page 136. His testimony is:

"Q. I call your particular attention in 'commission's exhibit 25, page 11, 'Purchase price in excess of net tangible assets, $39,394,355.36.' That is correct, isn't it?

"A. I presume so."

At that time Banco had on its books a capital of approximately $80,000,000 and a surplus of about 9 or 10 million dollars (p. 136).

In explanation Mr. Decker said:

"It was never claimed—never thought there was $80,000,000 of tangible assets" (p. 137).

He stated that the bonus or water was carried as an investment. While it is true that Mr. Decker at first refused to admit that the carrying of the $39,000,000 of bonus and water value was not "in conformity with conservative accounting methods" (pp. 138–139), he was compelled to admit that this was the fact later when the question was put to him point-blank, and he testified:

"Q. I take it also, then, Mr. Decker, that prior statements had not been in the interests of conservative accounting, had they?

"A. I wouldn't say so; no" (p. 144).

The carrying of over $39,000,000 of bonus or water value and the losses of approximately $14,000,000, together with the payment of dividends out of capital in an amount exceeding $9,000,000 (pp. 127–128) finally had to come out of the financial structure of Banco. This was necessary in order to make the actual value of Banco's stock approximate, in some degree, the actual value of its tangible net assets. It was necessary, however, in setting up this new financial structure, not only to wash out the sins and abuses of the past but also to conceal them from the stockholders of the company and the public. Public absolution would not do in a case of this kind. It had to be done in secret and covered up by misrepresenting the facts and by deceiving the stockholders and the public. The plan submitted to the stockholders was outlined in a letter written by Mr. Thomson, bearing date November 14, 1932. This letter was drawn so as to accomplish the purpose which Banco's officers and directors had in mind. Thomson had written other letters and had demonstrated an ability in the fine art of letter writing that was necessary to accomplish the purposes which were now needed in the setting up of this new financial structure of Banco. Mr. Thomson made a number of suggestions and statements in his letter, all of which were calculated to and did accomplish these purposes. They are:

1. The officers and executive committee of Banco "have discussed informally plans for making certain changes in the capital structure of the corporation. Particularly, at this time we had in mind making changes that would reflect more definitely in the corporation's statements the net tangible asset value of its stock" (p. 140).

2. He calls attention to the fact that it has been the "policy, as shown by the annual report of 1931, to give as full information as possible to our stockholders and to set up our financial statements so that they can be easily understood", and also that the proposed changes would effect certain savings in franchise taxes (p. 140).

3. That 2,000,000 shares of stock without par value be issued instead of the proposed 6,000,000 shares of the par value of $50. This proposed change, he says, would be more in keeping with the corporate requirements than the previous arrangement (p. 141).

4. "The purpose of this letter, therefore, is to set forth as clearly as possible all of the factors that were considered in the formulation of this plan" (p. 141).

5. "Upon examination of our various annual reports issued in the past, you will note that heretofore investments in capital stock of banks and other affiliated companies have been carried at a figure which includes goodwill. It now is proposed, in the interest of conservative accounting, to carry all such investment on a net tangible-asset basis and not to reflect the valuable goodwill resulting from the long-established business of constituent banks and other affiliated companies" (pp. 141–142).

6. That a value of $25,000,000 be placed upon the 2,000,000 shares of Banco in order to comply with the laws of the State of Delaware under which Banco was incorporated (p. 142).

7. To set aside a reserve of $14,000,000 "from the surplus" as "a reserve for contingencies" (p. 142).

8. "After giving effect to all of these proposals, that 1,614,531 shares of stock outstanding, after setting up the reserve for contingencies, will be represented by capital and surplus of $29,265,053.40 as of October 31, 1932."

9. That after giving effect to the proposed changes Banco's investment of capital stock of banks and other affiliated companies will be carried on a net tangible asset basis (pp. 142–143).

10. That the proposed change has for its primary purpose the setting up of the corporation's statement on a net tangible asset basis and effecting such other changes that are in accordance with sound accounting methods" (pp. 143–144).

11. That the stockholders keep the matter secret and confidential "until the directors have taken action, when it will be released for publication" (p. 144).

The $14,000,000 in losses referred to are covered by testimony of Mr. Decker at pages 147 to 149. These losses appear upon the minute books of Banco, exhibit 16, page 176. The testimony of Mr. Decker upon this point is as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. Decker, Mr. Benson raised the question—I am going to call your attention to it so there is no mistake about it; I don't want to mislead you—I am going to call your attention to the eighth page following page 176 in your minute books, being a letter addressed to Mr. Frank P. Heffelfinger, exhibit 16, containing a summary of the reports of your examiners of actual losses taken on which you predicated this $14,000,000 reserve, and will ask that you read that into the minutes.

"A. Which paragraph?

"Q. This paragraph right here.

"Mr. BROWN. What is the date of this letter?

"A. November 9, 1932: 'Mr. Hallenberg has submitted a written report giving his estimate of probable losses on loans and discounts and miscellaneous assets held by banks in the group as $14,566,503. Of this amount he states that in his opinion $8,750,235 represents losses which, while not recognized by the banks nor set up by the regular National and State supervising authorities, are very well determined at this time. The balance of $5,816,268 is based upon an estimated loss of 10 percent of all loans and discounts and miscellaneous assets classed by him as "slow", and 50 percent of all assets classed by him as "doubtful." The figure of 50 percent of the "doubtful" is higher than the percentage heretofore used, either by our own examining department or by the various examining authorities.'

"Q. So there was a very well determined loss, was there not?

"A. Oh, yes; no doubt."

By this reduction in the amount of capital stock of Banco the $39,000,000 of water, or bonus, or goodwill, as Mr. Decker chose to call it, also was eliminated from the financial structure of the company.

It is significant and illuminating, and it seems to be provocative of comment, that the letter of Mr. Thomson was written in terms ostensibly stating all the facts, and yet it concealed those that were most material. For instance, Mr. Thomson makes the apparently innocent statement (no. 1 supra) that the proposed changes would reflect more definitely in the corporation's statements the net tangible asset value of its stock. This statement is false and misleading because theretofore none of Banco's statements had ever in any degree reflected the net tangible value of its stock. The proposed change, therefore, could not reflect these facts "more" definitely because they had never been reflected at all. It was a false and misleading statement, which Banco from past experience knew its stockholders would swallow, and which they did swallow in this instance. Significant, too, is the failure of Thomson to mention the $14,000,000 of losses, the $9,000,000 of payments of dividends out of capital, and the $39,000,000 of water or bonus which was in the capital structure and had to come out and which they were then taking out to cover up the sins and abuses of the past. The letter was artfully written. Only a man of Thomson's consummate knowledge of Banco affairs and his letter-writing ability could have stated this as aptly as he did to accomplish the wrongful purpose which Banco and its officers had in mind.

In such manner did Banco wash out of its capital structure something like $62,000,000 "in accordance with sound accounting methods." It was a bitter pill to take, and it had to be sugar-coated. Accordingly, another dividend was declared. The stockholders and the public must not yet learn that losses were piling up on losses. The frauds and abuses of the past must be covered up by a dividend. Mr. Decker testified concerning this dividend as if it were an entirely proper and regular transaction. This appears at page 146:

"Q. Now, Mr. Decker, immediately after you reduced your capital and surplus and set up this reserve of $14,000,000 for losses, I will ask you if it isn't a fact that in the face of that $14,000,000 reserve for losses that you had found it necessary to take in 1932, you declared another dividend?"

"A. Yes, sir; I suppose so."

What, you may ask, would have happened if the full story had been told and the figures set down in Thomson's letter showing the $14,000,000 of actual losses, the $9,000,000 of payments out of capital, and the $39,000,000 of water or bonus? Would the stockholders have believed the statement that he made in his letter as to the purpose of the changes which he proposed, and would they have believed that the purpose of this change was to save certain corporation taxes, and the further statements that the changes were made simply in the interests of sound accounting?

The statement that it has been the policy of Banco, as shown by its annual report of 1931, to give as full information as possible to its stockholders was false. The record in this case so far made up shows that every possible trick, device, and concealment was resorted to for the purpose of keeping the stockholders and the public in ignorance of the true facts relative to Banco's affairs. Significant, too, is the change from stock having par value to stock having no par value. This device also was of assistance to the officers and directors of Banco in concealing the losses and abuses of the past. The whole letter is characterized by the omission of facts essential to an understanding of Banco's affairs. The misleading statements were calculated to induce the stockholders to accept them at their face value. The attitude of Banco and its officers is well reflected in the testimony of Mr. Decker relative to payments that were made out of capital. That there was any wrongdoing involved in this was not apparent to Mr. Decker, and he would not admit such to be the fact. This is shown by his testimony:

"Q. And Mr. Decker, I believe you told us that 11,000 people in the State of Minnesota had 998,000 shares of your stock distributed to them under these circumstances?

"A. That dinner cost each one quite a lot, didn't it?

"Q. And the dividends cost them more, didn't it?

"A. The dividends cost the stockholders more?

"Q. Yes, sir; out of capital?

"A. Well, they got the money on the dividends; didn't cost them anything" (pp. 151–152).

Significant, too, in this connection, is the fact that Banco made an application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a $23,000,000 loan on November 21, 1933, which, it is claimed, was necessary to supply needed capital for Banco and its affiliates (p. 157). The $23,000,000 is just about the equivalent of what Banco now has in its capital structure—$25,000,000 of non-par value stock. Is there any relation between the loan and the amount of stock without par value set up on Banco's books? That is a matter that might well be investigated, as well as the entire financial structure of Banco, to find out what value, if any, still remains. This should be a fruitful field of investigation for the commerce commission. Should it not be permitted to proceed without interference by this court?

V. TRADING AND DEALING IN BANCO STOCKS

The commerce commission desires to explore the question whether there has been fraudulent trading and dealing in Banco stock by plaintiff. This branch of the investigation was under way when this court issued its restraining order but had not yet been fully developed. However, even in the short time the hearing has been in progress some very significant facts have been developed. That there has been extensive dealing and trading in Banco stocks is evident.

THE STOCK SALES AND OFFERINGS TO THE PUBLIC

Early in 1929—February 14, 1929—Banco made application to the Commerce Commission of Minnesota for license to sell 600,000 shares of its stock at $50 per share (p. 14), by itself and through its subsidiary, the Minnesota Co. (exhibit 2, pp. 4–6), which company was later absorbed by another subsidiary known as Banco-

Northwest (p. 17). The license to sell stock was issued by the commission. Thereafter, on September 11, 1929, Banco had its stock listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange for the purpose of giving it an exempt status and thus placing Banco and its stock sales and operation beyond the control of the commission. At first this may have appeared to be an innocent act and in keeping with good intentions and honest purposes. What happened subsequently shows that the purpose of it was to enable Banco to operate without restraint, and thereby enable it to defraud and deceive its stockholders and the public in one of the wildest financial orgies of record. It is the continuation of that freedom from restraint which Banco seeks in this case before this court. He who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands. Are these hands clean?

Banco, according to Mr. Decker's testimony (p. 198), made the following public offerings of its stock:

1. In the early part of 1929, 100,000 shares at $50 per share.
2. Late in the summer of 1929, 97,000 shares at $62.50 per share.
3. Sales by a syndicate under agreement dated October 10, 1929, by which the syndicate, headed by A. G. Becker & Co., of Chicago, underwrote the sale of at least 150,000 and not more than 175,000 shares at $72.50 per share.

Banco had previously had a written agreement with A. G. Becker & Co., in which the price was fixed at $32.50 per share, but this was changed to $72.50 per share because the Becker Co. thought the first figure was too high (p. 201). Just prior to that time Banco was selling in the market at $100 per share (p. 200), and Mr. Decker testified in respect to this figure, "Well, it was more than we thought it was worth."

As early as 1930, Banco maintained a so-called "customer ownership department." There were extensive "over-the-counter" dealings in Banco stock, and these were of such proportions as to maintain what Mr. Decker characterized as an over-the-counter price of the stock. Later the stock was traded in on the Minneapolis Stock Exchange, where Banco had its "own agents or specialists placed" for the purpose of such dealing in Banco stock. In this way the price or market, whether over-the-counter or on the exchange, was controlled, to some extent at least, by Banco. This is apparent from the testimony of Mr. Decker beginning at the bottom of page 36 and on page 37, as follows:

"Q. Well, that price of your stock was an over-the-counter price maintained at that time, was it not?

"A. Well, it was until it was traded in on the Minneapolis Stock Exchange.

"Q. And it was traded on the Minneapolis Stock Exchange by one of your own agents or specialists placed there for that purpose?

"A. Yes.

"Q. So, relatively, the price or market, whether over-the-counter or exchange, was controlled to some extent, at least, by you people yourself?

"A. No, sir."

It is true that Mr. Decker (p. 38) claimed that no particular effort was made to sell Banco stock because it was oversubscribed by the various stock offerings. The underwriting contract with A. D. Becker & Co., the maintenance of the customer-ownership department, the over-the-counter trading, and the trading on the Minneapolis Stock Exchange belie the assertion of Mr. Decker and show that there was selling and trading in this stock in many ways on a very extensive scale. Both Mr. Decker and Mr. Wold bought some stock in the customer-ownership campaign (p. 51).

Mr. C. B. Mills, who at one time was the president of the Midland National Bank & Trust Co. and later an officer of Banco, testified that Banco maintained a regular customer ownership department (p. 72) and that in its regular set-up, as shown by the organization chart of Northwest Bancorporation, exhibit 9, which was dated March 1933, a customer-ownership department is shown and that this department is under the direction of Mr. Gardner B. Perry, vice president, and W. F. Brockman, assistant secretary (p. 72). This department appears to have existed as early as 1930 and was still operating in 1933.

This campaign to sell stock to customers of the banks was organized as one phase of the campaign to sell a vast amount of Banco stock to the public. The employees of the Northwestern National Bank, Midland National Bank & Trust Co., and of the other affiliate banks, were engaged in the sale of Banco stock and were paid small commissions for making sales. In order to stimulate interest in making sales various groups and clubs of officers and employees were organized to compete against one another. These were organized by Banco under the direction of Mr. Perry and Mr. Brockman. Banco maintained a department for publicity and directed the competitive effort of the various groups. A Mr. Burgess was in charge of this. This is shown quite fully on pages 73 to 76. Interesting in this connection is the chart published at page 13 of Banco's official publication, The Covered Wagon, of March 1932, exhibit 2. This chart is entitled, "People who have made 25 sales and over, as of February 29, 1931." We invite the court's attention to an examination of this chart and the names of the competing organizations. We respectfully submit that they must have had pronunciation practice at Banco in order to enable its officers and employees to properly pronounce the names of the various clubs, which are: Club Hecpendeka, Club Penheptakonta, Club Hexakonta, Club Pentakonta, Club Tetrakonta, Club Triakonta, Club Hecdeka, Club Heptakonta, Club Penpentakonta, Club Pentetrakonta, Club Pentriakonta, Club Penicosa.

These sales evidently were very extensive. We call the court's attention to exhibit 10, prepared by Mr. Mills, showing a list of stockholders of Banco holding 1,000 shares or more. Both Mr. Mills and Mr. Decker bought stock under this arrangement. The sales were so extensive, according to Mr. Decker's testimony, that on December 31, 1931, there were 11,039 persons in the State of Minnesota owning 998,875 shares of Banco stock of the value of $49,943,750 computed on the basis of the par value of the original issue (pp. 52–53, 96, 151–152). Undoubtedly much more than this was paid for this stock because up to that time the price ranged from fifty to one hundred dollars per share. The extent to which the purchasers were cheated and defrauded is not now fully known, and if this court shall grant plaintiff's prayer for an injunction, will never be known. The State commerce commission is the one body endowed with the power fully to uncover the facts of this infamous story. We cannot believe that a court of equity will stay its hands.

Not to be overlooked in this connection is the reference in Mr. Thomson's letter of November 14, 1932 (p. 143), in which he states that there had been transferred to the Union Investment Co. nonbankable assets including acquisition loans in the sum of $3,452,900, customer-ownership accounts in the amount of $8,654.77, and employees' stock-acquisition notes in the amount of $16,412.39. How can Banco explain the taking and ownership of these notes and the transfer of them to the Union Investment Co. as assets of Banco to be liquidated by it? Just what were these acquisition loans. How did there come to be $3,452,900 of nonbankable acquisition loans? Did the hand of fraud lie also upon this unexplored domain? We do not know, but the State of Minnesota has a right to ask and to receive an answer.

BANCO'S STOCK SYNDICATE OR POOL

The officers and directors of Banco formed a pool or syndicate for the purpose of dealing in Banco stock and controlling the market in such stock. The idea of a pool or syndicate was first mentioned at a meeting of some of the officers and directors of Banco in the Northwestern National Bank on December 27, 1929. Mr. Decker suggested it to Mr. John S. Pillsbury and others, and requested that Mr. Pillsbury consent to act as one of the managers of the syndicate (pp. 167–170). Mr. Decker was the manager and attended to the buying and selling of Banco's stock (p. 170). Mr. Pillsbury took no active part as a manager. The syndicate contract or agreement was signed on January 4 or 5, 1930, by John S. Pillsbury and probably at about the same time by David Williams, and F. W. Decker. These three men were to be the managers of the syndicate (pp. 170–174). The syndicate agreement is exhibit 28 and is found on pages 174 to 178. By its terms the syndicate or pool was to continue until December 31, 1930, but could be extended to December 31, 1931 (par. 5 of the agreement). By its terms the syndicate members agreed to purchase 75,000 shares of stock and not to dispose of the stock until after the syndicate agreement had been terminated. The letters of Mr. Pillsbury relative to his Banco stock transactions are marked exhibits 27–1 to 27–18 and are found in paragraphs 179–197.

We find that certain officers of Banco could not resist the use of deception even in its dealings with its own directors. With full knowledge of the shaky financial condition of Banco and the corporate abuses that had been indulged in, to which we have already called attention, Mr. Decker in writing to Mr. Pillsbury on March 29, 1930, in exhibit 27–17 (p. 196) said:

"We are very well satisfied with the condition of the syndicate and the market on the stock."

Mr. Decker was the active syndicate manager (p. 212) and the members of the pool were all notified of the quotas when their stock was purchased. Mr. Decker testified on page 227 that he had knowledge of purchases, but didn't recall O.K.ing each purchase. These purchases were made under Mr. Decker's direction, largely by Mr. West, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Wold, with whom Mr. Decker conferred relative to the pool, and whose advice he had from time to time (pp. 227, 229, 230, 231).

One of the most illuminating circumstances in connection with this matter is the fact that the stock was bought by Banco itself and not by the syndicate. The syndicate was formed to carry out Banco's purpose, and Banco's money was used to finance the operations of the syndicate. That this was an illegal and improper way of doing business, it seems to us, cannot be denied. Mr. Decker testified, at page 231, relative to these purchases of stock by the pool, as follows:

"Q. May I ask. You say you think the purchases were carried on in the name of the Northwest Bancorporation?

"A. It would appear so from those statements, that big pile of statements."

The commission claims, rightfully we think, that this pool or syndicate was an unlawful and fraudulent plan and conspiracy, as alleged in paragraph XXIII, beginning at the top of page 11 of the answer. The terms of the conspiracy are set out in that part of the answer, and we call the court's attention to the allegations on page 11. Mr. Decker's testimony indicates that these allegations are true. If so, then the commission should investigate this pool and syndicate until the last unlawful transaction has been revealed and discovered and the guilty parties brought to justice. Mr. Decker and Mr. Pillsbury testified relative to this pool and syndicate as though it were a matter of fact and proper and legal in every respect. Nevertheless, transactions of this kind have always been denounced by the courts, and especially by the Federal courts. The court's attention will be directed to these matters later in our argument upon the law. A restraining order should not be issued to prevent or hinder the commission from going to the very bottom of this entire matter. The commerce commission still has further questions to ask. Surely it has a legal right to ask them and to have them answered.

VI. THE ALLEGED AMOUNT OF WORK INVOLVED IN THE PRODUCTION OF PLAINTIFF'S BOOKS AND RECORDS BEFORE THE COMMISSION

The allegation that plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $3,000 by reason of being compelled to produce its books and records is false upon its face. We invite the court to carefully read the entire record and to say from its knowledge of business and affairs whether the expense could reach that figure. Mr. Albrecht testified that he had the chief clerk bundle records for him and he took them over with him (p. 90). Mr. Decker testified that he brought the pool correspondence with him. This correspondence could be carried by anybody in his pocket (p. 154). When asked about the records kept by the syndicate, Mr. Decker testified, "Well there was very little work connected with the syndicate", and he conveyed the impression that the records were few indeed. Earlier in the hearing Banco's attorneys did not think the production of these records would cause the expense or inflict the hardships complained of in the complaint. This is evident from what Mr. Faegre says at page 233:

"May I suggest that we take our adjournment at this point; our postponement be granted at this point. Let us see what we can accomplish in the way of identifying these records. I gather they have been produced from among the files of Northwest Bancorporation. I presume these files in the syndicate matter were built up and found their way in that record, and I think perhaps this whole thing might be expedited, and I make that suggestion for that reason."

At that time Mr. Faegre regarded the production of the records and the producing of the proper individuals from Banco to identify them as a fair suggestion (p. 234). Mr. Faegre's only concern seemed to be that a system be worked out to facilitate this matter. At that time he did not regard the work or expense as of paramount importance. Mr. Stinchfield, one of the plaintiff's counsel, expressed himself as being "entirely in accord" with the suggestions made by the commission and agreed to by Mr. Faegre relative to the production of records and witnesses (pp. 235–250). Pages 235 and up to 250 of the record contain a discussion before the Commission out of which an arrangement for cooperation by the Commission and Banco for the production and examination of the records and the production of witnesses from Banco who could identify them before the commission.

The records produced constitute only a small bundle and can almost be carried in a lawyer's brief case. To say that the expense of producing them is in the amount of $3,000 is preposterous.

VII. THE CLAIM THAT THE INVESTIGATION CAUSES LEGAL INJURY TO BANCO

This claim also is absurd. If calling attention to frauds practiced by plaintiff, misrepresentations, the obtaining of money by reason of fraud and misrepresentation, betrayal of stockholders and stock purchasers, the concealment of this wrongdoing, the payment of dividends out of capital, the setting up of something like $39,000,000 of water and bonus in the capital structure of Banco as assets, the maintenance of an unlawful pool and syndicate for the control of the stock of Banco, and the discovery of corporate wrongdoing by Banco causes it injury, then we plead guilty. We respectfully submit that the discovery and investigation of these matters is an imperative duty of the commission for the public good. The mere fact that a claim is made that such discovery and investigation causes Banco legal injury but emphasizes the brazen character of this organization.

The goal of Banco was the financial domination of the entire Northwest. The record in this case shows that Banco is used to having things its own way. It set up its financial structure to suit itself. It controlled audits. It wrote and released its own newspaper articles in which the affairs of Banco were discussed. It dominated the financial and business situation throughout the Northwest. If in its various activities, in the exercise of this power, Banco stayed within the bounds described by law, it has nothing to fear from investigation. If it did not, the commission and the great State which created it have a right to learn the facts. Banco calls this investigation by the commission a legal injury. We call it a clear public duty.

VIII. THE ANNA ENGLUND SUIT

The claim that the investigation before the commission is in the nature of a discovery in aid of the suit brought by Mrs. Englund against Banco, Mr. Decker, and the other officers of Banco, is preposterous. The facts in this case show that the investigation was conducted in the public interest to enforce the so-called "blue sky law" of Minnesota. We submit that no person can entertain any reasonable doubt upon that proposition. Furthermore, it conclusively appears that Mrs. Englund's attorneys were present before the commission and heard the testimony which Mr. Decker and the other officers of Banco gave and were thus informed without even making inquiry of the commission or any of its employees as to the matters revealed in this investigation.

The claim that the investigation is in aid of Mrs. Englund is as false as the reports and letters sent out by Banco to its stockholders. There is not one particle of evidence—one single fact—that can be referred to in the entire proceedings herein that justifies an assertion that the investigation has anything to do with Mrs. Englund's suit.

IX. DECKER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Decker resigned as an officer and director of Banco and of the Northwestern National Bank on January 10, 1934 (p. 246). Why did Decker resign? Was it that plaintiff might now claim that Mr. Decker was no longer an officer of Banco and therefore not subject to cross-examination in any investigation or trial involving the matters referred to under the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in the case of Snelling State Bank of St. Paul v. Clasen (132 Minn. 404, 157 N.W. 643)? Was it because he had been a party to schemes, frauds, and betrayals and had been an unfaithful officer and director of the bank and of Banco? The latter hardly seems to be true because the record in this case is the history of such things for years, of which those who owned and controlled Banco had knowledge and of which they evidently approved until this investigation began to let in the light. Was it necessary to have a victim or a "goat"? Was it for some other reason? Is it Decker's fault that he was exposed, not that he was guilty of wrongdoing, but that he was exposed? And that thereby Banco was exposed?

Whatever the reason may be the passing of Mr. Decker does not mark the passing of Banco's system. During its entire history Mr. Decker stood at the head of Banco as a representative of its owners. His stepping out simply puts another man at the head of it as the representative of the same owners. The system goes on. It uses men as long as they serve the system's purpose and then it drops them. Mr. Decker was simply the representative of the system. When he had served the system's purpose it dropped him just as it will drop others in the course of time. It is this system which the commission, among other things, is investigating. It is this system which caused the corporate abuses, frauds, and betrayals that have been mentioned. It is this system which should be changed to the end that we may have honest banking and a sense of trusteeship, not only of the funds intrusted to the bank, but also a larger trusteeship of the great public interests committed to its keeping. Literally, it was the prosperity and the happiness of this great Northwest, which was committed to the care of Banco. A thorough investigation of the abuses of this system by the commission should not be stopped by the restraining order of his court. We know only in part, but we know enough to indicate the crying need for a thorough-going examination and diagnosis.

There are cases in which major surgery is resorted to, and this appears to be such a case.

Argument for defendants

I. ANALYSIS OF THE MOST PERTINENT PROVISIONS OF THE STATE SECURITIES ACT.

Before going further into a consideration of the legal phases of this case we believe it may be helpful to make a short analysis of the more pertinent provisions of the Minnesota securities act.

Under section 3996–19, Mason's Minnesota Statutes, we find the following grant of powers to the commerce commission:

Whenever such commission, from information in its possession, has reasonable ground to believe that any person within 3 years has sold any securities or is about to sell any securities, the commission has the power to investigate, providing any of the following facts exist:

1. That said securities are or were fraudulent.

2. That said securities are about to be or were sold in a fraudulent manner.

3. That such person in such sale or attempted sale has worked or will work fraud on purchasers.

4. That such person has violated or is about to violate any provision of said act.

In any such case the commission shall have power to make examination and investigation, as follows:

1. To make an investigation of the books, records, papers, accounts, property, business, and affairs of such person.

2. To make or cause to be made an audit of the accounts, books, and records of such person.

3. To require such person to permit such examination, investigation, and audit to be made and to submit to the commission his books, papers, records, and accounts for the purpose of such investigation.

The foregoing authority applies not alone to the seller of securities but to the issuer thereof, if such securities were or are about to be sold for or on behalf of the issuer.

In case any person or issuer shall fail or refuse to obey any order of the commission which it is authorized to make under this act requiring such person to permit an investigation of his books, records, papers, or accounts, and to submit the same to the commission for such purpose, the district court, subject to the limitations of sections 7 and 10 of article 1 of the State constitution and of the fourth and fifth amendments to the Federal Constitution, is directed without notice to cause a search warrant to be issued commanding the sheriff to search and seize such books and records and deliver them to the commission for the purpose of such examination. Any books or records so seized may be held by the commission for a reasonable time for the purpose of making such investigation.

The commission is given power to take such steps as are necessary to cause the arrest and prosecution of all persons found guilty of violations of this law.

The commission by summons or subpena may require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers relating to any matter over which it has jurisdiction under this act. Any judge of the district court, upon application of the attorney general in behalf of the commission, may compel the attendance of witnesses and the giving of testimony before the commission in the same manner and to the same extent as before said court.

Full protection is given to witnesses who may be required to testify with reference to matters tending to incriminate themselves by providing that any such person, having claimed such privilege and having, nevertheless, been required to testify, shall not be prosecuted or subjected to a penalty or forfeiture on account of any matter concerning which he may have been required to testify or produce evidence except for perjury committed in the giving of such testimony.

Applying the foregoing analysis of the law with reference to the facts of the present case, we find that if the commission had reasonable ground to believe that within 3 years preceding the issuing of its order for investigation Banco sold any securities or is now about to sell any securities, or if during such period the stock in Banco was sold for or on behalf of Banco as issuer thereof, the commission had the right to institute an investigation providing:

1. That Banco stock is or was fraudulent.
2. That Banco stock is about to be or was sold in a fraudulent manner.
3. That such sale of Banco stock has worked or will work fraud on purchasers.
4. That Banco or anyone acting for Banco has violated or is about to violate any provision of the State securities act.

II. THE COMMISSION'S ORDER FOR INVESTIGATION

The commission's order for investigation in the main sets forth the following violations of the law on the part of plaintiff as the reason for the issuing of said order:

1. From information in the possession of said commission it alleges that it has reasonable ground to believe that plaintiff within 3 years prior to the issuing of said order had sold common stock of plaintiff within the State of Minnesota in a fraudulent manner.
2. That such sale has worked or will work a fraud on the purchasers thereof.
3. That in such sales plaintiff has violated the provisions of the statutes of Minnesota with respect to the sale of securities.
4. That plaintiff and other persons acting in its behalf and under its direction are selling and intending to sell stock of said plaintiff and that such future sales of said stock will work a fraud upon the purchasers thereof.
5. That plaintiff has listed said stock on the Chicago Stock Exchange for the purpose of giving it exempt status and thereby relieving plaintiff in part of supervision by the commerce commission as to such sale and caused said stock to be listed on the Minneapolis-St. Paul Stock Exchange for the purpose of establishing a fictitious market quotation upon which sales of said stock could and would be manipulated.
6. That plaintiff established and maintained a customer ownership campaign in connection with which said stock was sold in a fraudulent manner and that the sales made in connection with said campaign have worked and will work a fraud upon the purchasers of said stock.
7. That plaintiff has sold its capital stock in a manner contrary to the provisions of the State securities act by effecting sales thereof through officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, and other persons not duly qualified or authorized by law to sell or act as agents in the sale of stock.
8. That plaintiff pursuant to a fraudulent scheme misled purchasers of stock as to the bona fide market price of said stock. That said scheme was carried out in part by means of the organization of one or more pools which manipulated the ostensible market prices of said shares in such a manner as to mislead purchasers as to the public demand for said stock and as to the bona fide market quotation thereof and as to the true value thereof. That said scheme was that Northwest Bancorporation would furnish money to finance the operation of said pool or pools and that those to whom the money was furnished should not repay the same. That said scheme was further that plaintiff would continue to pay dividends representing that such dividends were paid out of earnings and profit when in truth and fact said plaintiff had no earnings. That said scheme was further that plaintiff would incorporate a trading company known as "BancNorthwest" for the purpose of trading in the stock of plaintiff theretofore sold to lead the public to believe that said stock was of greater value than it really was. That said scheme was further that in various ways said plaintiff and those acting with it should mislead purchasers of the stock in plaintiff as to the true value thereof.

An examination of the foregoing statement of reasons for the investigation must necessarily result in the conclusion that such reasons were stated with as much definiteness as the nature of the case made possible.

On the basis of the foregoing reasons for the investigation the commerce commission issued its order directing that an examination should be made of the sale and disposition of the common stock of plaintiff and in connection therewith of the books, records, papers, accounts, property, business, and affairs of the plaintiff for the purpose of ascertaining whether said stock has been sold and is being sold in a fraudulent manner by plaintiff or by any person or corporation acting in its behalf or under its direction or so as to work a fraud on the purchasers thereof and to determine whether plaintiff or persons acting for it have violated or are about to violate any of the provisions of the State securities act.

The commission further ordered that plaintiff or any person who has been or is engaged in the sale of said stock within the State should permit examination, investigation, and audit to be made of its books, papers, records, and accounts pertaining to the sale of said stock within the State.

The commission further authorized the commissioner of securities to conduct hearings, take testimony, serve subpenas for witnesses, books, and records in furtherance of said investigation.

The commission's order suspending exempt status of the common capital stock of plaintiff is less directly involved in this proceeding. We, accordingly, believe that it will not be necessary to present an analysis of said order but refer the court to a copy thereof contained in plaintiff's bill of complaint and designated exhibit C.

III. ISSUES

In our opinion the main issues involved in this proceeding are as follows:

1. Does this court have jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff has not exhausted its legal remedy in the State courts?
2. Is not injunction an improper remedy in this case, seeing that plaintiff has made no sufficient showing of irreparable injury?
3. Has plaintiff lost his right to challenge the right of the commerce commission to proceed with its investigation by reason of having voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of such commission?
4. Does the title of the Minnesota securities act conform with the requirement of section 27 of article 4 of the State constitution?
5. Does the securities act of the State of Minnesota conflict with the due-process clause or the equal-protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States or with similar provisions of the Minnesota constitution?
6. Does the securities act and the commission's orders thereunder constitute such an unreasonable search and seizure as to be in violation of the fourth amendment to the United States Constitution or section 10 of article 1 of the State constitution?
7. Does the securities act violate the provisions of the State constitution with reference to a threefold division of Government powers?
8. Has the commerce commission lost its legal right to investigate the sales of Banco stock by reason of the fact that such stock is no longer registered or by reason of the fact that Banco has offered to waive the exempt status of its stock?
9. Has there been such exhaustive valuations of corporate assets by plaintiff and such excessive valuations of stock sold on the basis of such excessive valuation of assets as to make the sales of Banco stock fraudulent?
10. Has the sale of Banco stock been fraudulent because dividends have been voted and paid notwithstanding the fact that there were no net profits from which to pay them?
11. Has the sale of Banco stock been fraudulent because plaintiff has directly misrepresented to the investing public the amount of its net earnings for the purpose of promoting the sale of its stock and advancing the price thereof?
12. Has the sale of Banco stock been fraudulent because plaintiff has maintained a pool contracted to keep huge blocks of stock off the market for 6-month periods and in various ways sought to alter the usual and natural currents of supply and demand for Banco stock for the purpose of raising the market price of Banco stocks above the natural market value?

IV. THIS COURT DOES NOT HAVE JURISDICTION TO ISSUE AN INJUNCTION IN THIS MATTER, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT EXHAUSTED ITS LEGAL REMEDY IN THE STATE COURTS

Section 27 of the State securities act provides as follows, Mason's Statutes, section 3996–27:

"The supreme court, upon petition of any person aggrieved, may review by certiorari any final order or determination of the commission. The issuance of the writ shall not, however, operate as a stay of proceedings unless specifically so ordered."

This clearly gives to the supreme court the power to stay proceedings in a proper case. In such a case, under the holding of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Porter v. Investors Syndicate (286 U.S. 461), the Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to restrain action by injunction until the remedy available in the State courts has been exhausted.

In the case mentioned the Investors Syndicate secured from the Federal district court for Montana an injunction restraining the State investment commissioner from revoking the company's license for failure to obey a rule regulating the substance and form of its certificates. The Supreme Court reversed the decree, saying:

"But we are told that the commissioner asserted his intention to enforce the order, and that the statute forbids the State court to afford interlocutory relief. Thus, says the appellee, though trial might result in a decision vacating the commissioner's order, in the interval irreparable harm would have been done by the revocation of the company's permit, and its officers and agents rendered liable to criminal prosecution. Such a state of the law, it is insisted, amounts to a denial of due process to which one confronted with the possible loss of property is not bound to submit but may at once, if there be the requisite diversity of citizenship and amount in controversy, apply to a Federal court for relief. Conceding the correctness of the premises, the conclusion is sound. Pacific Telephone Co. v. Kuykendall (265 U.S. 196). The appellant, however, denies the asserted statutory prohibition, and says that the plaintiff in an action attacking a decision by the commissioner may upon a proper showing obtain a stay of its operation."

V. INJUNCTION IS NOT THE PROPER REMEDY IN THIS CASE, BECAUSE THERE HAS BEEN NO SUFFICIENT SHOWING BY PLAINTIFF OF IRREPARABLE INJURY

Injunctions are never given for trivial reasons. Plaintiff in this case has shown no injury beyond slight inconvenience to its officers and directors and personnel by reason of being required to be present at hearings and being required to produce books and papers.

The case of Fenner v. Boykin (271 U.S. 240) involved the granting of an injunction to restrain State officers from enforcing a criminal law against dealings in agreements for purchase or sale of cotton for future delivery. The application was denied, the court saying:

"Ex parte Young (209 U.S. 123) and following cases have established the doctrine that when absolutely necessary for protection of constitutional rights courts of the United States have power to enjoin State officers from instituting criminal actions. But this may not be done except under extraordinary circumstances where the danger of irreparable loss is both great and immediate. Ordinarily, there should be no interference with such officers; primarily, they are charged with the duty of prosecuting offenders against the laws of the State and must decide when and how this is to be done. The accused should first set up and rely upon his defense in the State courts, even though this involves a challenge of the validity of some statute, unless it plainly appears that this course would not afford adequate protection. The Judicial Code provides ample opportunity for ultimate review here in respect of Federal questions. An intolerable condition would arise if, whenever about to be charged with violating a State law, one were permitted freely to contest its validity by an original proceeding in some Federal court. Hygrade Provision Co. v. Sherman (266 U.S. 497, 500)."

VI. PLAINTIFF HAVING CONSENTED TO AND INVITED THE INVESTIGATION AND EXAMINATION OF ITS BOOKS AND RECORDS CANNOT NOW CLAIM THEY CONSTITUTE AN UNREASONABLE SEARCH AND SEIZURE

The constitutional immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures, being a personal privilege, may be waived, as by a voluntary invitation or consent to a search or seizure (58 C.J. 1178). An invited search is neither illegal nor unreasonable (56 C.J. 1178), and note 25a citing the cases of Paramore v. State (129 S.E. 772 (G.A.)) and People v. Broas (215 N.W. 420 (Mich.)). Plaintiff welcomed and invited the examination of its books and records. It requested and accepted continuances on condition that plaintiff permit defendant's agents to continue the examination of plaintiff's books and papers. It not only consented but aided defendant's agents in their examination by providing the latter with space in its premises and suggesting and urging that said agents continue their examination on plaintiff's premises.

We think that these facts make out an even stronger case of waiver and consent than do the facts in the case of State of Minnesota v. Borgstrom reported in 69 Minn. 508, 72 N.W. 799, 975. In this case the court said:

"It is also assigned as error that the court erred in admitting in evidence an account book designated in the records as 'Exhibit 101', claiming that such book was the personal account book of the defendant, and in no sense a public record. One of the grounds urged against its admission is that it was a flagrant and high-handed transgression of defendant's constitutional rights, as guaranteed by both the Federal and State Constitutions, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, and that the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated. We are relieved from entering into a discussion of the rights of the defendant arising under these constitutional provisions by the conduct and admissions of the defendant himself and by the other facts in the record. * * * There was no wrongful seizure of the book containing exhibit 101. On the trial in the presence of the court, jury, defendant, and his counsel, the prosecuting attorney requested the witness Loe (then deputy register of deeds) to go to the register's office and bring the book into court, which he did without objections from the defendant. As we have previously stated, defendant had already voluntarily handed the book to the deputy to take before the grand jury to be used in the investigation of this very charge, and at no time did he object to the prosecution having possession of the book, or claim that such possession was wrongful, or that there was any wrongful seizure thereof. The objection was not based upon any wrongful, surreptitious, or forcible seizure of the book but that it was a private book or memoranda. Having peaceable possession of the book, the prosecution had a right to offer the same in evidence, as against the objection made."

VII. THE JURISDICTION OF THE FEDERAL COURTS DOES NOT EXTEND TO RESTRAINING THE ENFORCEMENT OF A STATE LAW ON ANY GROUND OTHER THAN THE UNCONSTITUTIONALITY OF SUCH LAW UNDER THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

This proposition we do not need to discuss further than to point out that if this court shall find the Minnesota securities act is valid under the Federal Constitution it has no further jurisdiction in this matter.

In support of the correctness of the legal proposition stated above we refer to the case of Ex parte Young (209 U.S. 123).

VIII. THE TITLE OF THE STATE SECURITIES ACT CONFORMS WITH THE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 27 OF ARTICLE 4 OF THE STATE CONSTITUTION

Section 27 of article 4 of the State constitution provides:

"No law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title."

The title of the Minnesota securities act has been upheld as conforming to these requirements by the supreme court of the State: In State v. Evans (154 Minn. 95, 191 N.W. 425) against the contention that the title is not broad enough to cover investment contracts, and in Kerst v. Nelson (171 Minn. 213 N.W. 904) for a similar reason. The rule with reference to the sufficiency of a title is clearly set forth in State v. Evans, supra, as follows (pp. 100–101):

"The title of the act of 1917 is 'An act to prevent fraud in the sale and disposition of stocks, bonds, or other securities * * *.'

"Defendants contend that this title is not broad enough to cover legislation affecting an investment contract such as this, and that, insofar as it covers such contracts, it violates the constitutional provision which requires that the subject of the act 'shall be expressed in its title.' (Sec. 27, art. 4, State constitution.)

"Clearly the subject matter of a statute must be confined within the limits of the subject expressed in the title. Yet the title was never intended to be an index to the law. All that is required is that the act shall not include legislation which, by fair intendment, cannot be considered germane to the one subject expressed in the title. The main object of the constitutional provision is to apprise the members of the legislature of the contents of the act, to the end that they may not vote unwarily. If the title is such as to fairly apprise them of the general character of the enactment, it is sufficient. The generality of the title is no objection, provided only it is sufficient to give notice of the general subject of the proposed legislation and of the interests to be affected."

These Minnesota decisions, however, have upheld the title only with reference to its being sufficiently inclusive to cover certain particular matters. The Supreme Court of Georgia, however, in State v. Skinner (20 Ga. Ap. 204), upheld a very similar title of a similar securities act in general language, which we believe covers every possible objection to the title.

In holding valid the title of the Illinois securities act, which in scope is similar to that of Minnesota, the Supreme Court of Illinois said:

"The constitutional provision that no act shall embrace more than one subject does not mean that it shall contain only one provision. Its purpose is to prevent the joining in one act of incongruous and unrelated matters, and an act may contain any number of provisions which tend to further its purpose."

We need not present extensive authority in support of our contention that the title of the Minnesota act is sufficient. We merely call to the attention of the court the fact that the Supreme Court of Minnesota has never ruled an act unconstitutional on this ground except in very clear cases of violation of the requirements of the constitution.

IX. THE SECURITIES ACT OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH THE DUE-PROCESS CLAUSE OR THE EQUAL-PROTECTION CLAUSE OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, NOR WITH SIMILAR PROVISIONS OF THE MINNESOTA CONSTITUTION

Whatever question there may have been as to the constitutionality of State securities laws when these were first enacted was completely set at rest by the three leading cases in 242 U.S.: Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co. (242 U.S. 539; 67 L.ed. 480; 37 S.Ct. 217; L.R.A. 1917 F. 514); Caldwell v. Sioux Falls Stock Yards Co. (1917) (242 U.S. 559; 61 L.ed. 493; 37 S.Ct. 224); and Merrick v. N. W. Halsey & Co. (1917) (242 U.S. 568; 61 L.ed. 498; 37 S.Ct. 227).

We believe we can most effectively answer plaintiff's contention that the Minnesota securities act and the action taken by defendants in pursuance of said act is a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution by quoting somewhat extensively from the opinion of Justice McKenna in the case of Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., supra. The court first considers the proposition that the State in the exercise of this power is exercising its police power and that this power is only to a very limited extent subjected to restriction by the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

The Court says:

"The primary postulate of the State is that the law under review is an exercise of the police power of the State, and that power, we have said, is the least limitable of the exercises of government (Sligh v. Kirkwood, 237 U.S. 52, 59 L.Ed. 835, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501). We get no accurate idea of its limitations by opposing to it the declarations of the fourteenth amendment that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denied the equal protection of the laws (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U.S. 104, 110; 55 L.ed. 112, 116; 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062; 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487). A stricter inquiry is necessary, and we must consider what it is of life, liberty, and property that the Constitution protects."

Pursuing the inquiry what it is of life, of liberty, and of property which the fourteenth amendment protects, the court comes to the conclusion that the Ohio securities law, the scope of which is very similar to that of the Minnesota law, does not infringe upon this amendment.

The Court remarked:

"The reason and extent of the law we have indicated and the control to which individual transactions are subjected, and we think both, are within the competency of the State."

The Court continues:

"Inconvenience may be caused and supervision and surveillance, but this must yield to the public welfare; and against counsel's alarm of consequences we set the judgment of the State."

The Court considered next the question whether the securities law under review denied to any person the equal protection of the law. More than a score of possible inequalities were referred to. Without giving separate attention to each of these the Court expressed this opinion (557):

"We cannot give separate attention to the asserted discriminations. It is enough to say that they are within the power of classification which a State has. A State 'may direct its law against what it deems the evil as it actually exists without covering the whole field of possible abuses, and it may do so none the less that the forbidden act does (557) not differ in kind from those that are allowed. * * * If a class is deemed to present a conspicuous example of what the legislature seeks to prevent, the fourteenth amendment allows it to be dealt with although otherwise and merely logically not distinguishable from others not embraced in the law' (Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U.S. 157, 160; 57 L.ed. 164, 169; 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66). The cases were cited from which those propositions were deduced. To the same effect is Armour & Co. v. North Dakota (240 U.S. 517; 60 L.ed. 776; 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Ann. Cas. 1916D, 548)."

At about the same time as the foregoing case was heard before the Supreme Court of the United States there came to that Court on appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of South Dakota an appeal from a decree of that court enjoining the enforcement of the securities act of South Dakota. The contention was made that the South Dakota act violated the fourteenth amendment. But the Supreme Court found no merit in this contention and reversed the injunction decree of the lower court.

In the case of Merrick v. N. W. Halsey & Co., supra, the validity of the securities act of the State of Michigan came before the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan to review a decree enjoining the enforcement of said act. The injunction issued by the lower court was reversed by the Supreme Court. In this case the validity of the Michigan act was attacked in a manner which bears a striking resemblance to plaintiff's attack on the validity of the Minnesota act. It was claimed that the requirements of the act were unreasonable; that they were impossible of performance; that it exacted from private parties matters of confidence; that it invaded and destroyed property rights; that it curtailed freedom of contract; that it seriously interfered with plaintiff's business and property; that it violated a section of the constitution of Michigan which provided that no law shall embrace more than one subject which shall be expressed in its title; that it violated the fourteenth amendment, particularly by permitting exceptions which resulted in a violation of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by that amendment; and that it imposed an illegal burden upon interstate commerce.

In the main, the Supreme Court supports its opinion in this case by referring back to what was said in the case of Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., supra. The new material in this decision to which we would call attention is the proposition that, granted that the general field is within the State's police power, it is for the State to choose the means by which it will exercise that power and that the Federal courts will not inquire into the wisdom of the State's choice of means.

The court said: "Besides, it is for the State to judge in such circumstances, and the judgment and its execution would have to be palpably arbitrary to justify the interference of the courts."

The court continues: "Upon this difference in views we are not called upon to express an opinion, for, as we have said, the judgment is for the State to make, and in the belief of evils and the necessity for their remedy and the manner of their remedy the State has determined that the business of dealing in securities shall have administrative supervision, and 26 States have expressed like judgments."

Answering the contention that the Securities Act took away the right to carry on business the court said (p. 588): "To the latter we say the right to do business is not taken away; the other we have already answered and need only add that we cannot, upon such considerations, limit the power of the State. The State must adapt its legislation to evils as they appear, and is not helpless because of their forms."

Replying to the argument that there might be arbitrary and unreasonable action on the part of the Securities Commission the court said (p. 590): "The contentions based on the exemption and provision are a part of that which accuses the law of conferring arbitrary discretion upon the commission, and committing to its will the existence or extinction of the business. The accusation is formidable in words, but it is the same that has been made many times. It is answered by the comment and the cases cited in the opinion in the other cases. Besides, we repeat, there is a presumption against wanton action by the commission, and if there should be such disregard of duty, a remedy in the courts is explicitly given, and if it were not given it would necessarily be implied."

Finally, the court brushed aside the objection that the title of the act did not indicate its provisions and thereby violated the constitution of Michigan with the remark: "The objection is untenable and does not call for particular notice."

In our opinion the three foregoing cases have settled the question whether the securities act of Minnesota violates the due-process clause or the equal-protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, the general scope of the Minnesota law being the same as that of the corresponding laws of Ohio, Michigan, and South Dakota.

It likewise follows that if the Minnesota law does not run counter to these provisions of the Federal Constitution neither does it violate the corresponding provisions of the State constitution.

It is, however, proper to point out that the constitutionality of the Minnesota act has been attacked again and again before the Minnesota Supreme Court and found valid. Thus in State v. Nordstrom (169 Minn. 214, 210 N. W. 1001), the act was held constitutional with reference to the following matters: It is not class legislation. It does not interfere with the right of contract. In the case of State v. The Gopher Tire and Rubber Co., the law was held valid as a proper exercise of the police power. As such, the court said, it must not be given a narrow construction. In State ex rel. Hardstone Brick Co. v. Department of Commerce (174 Minn. 200, 219 N. W. 81) the court upheld a hearing before the Commerce Commission as due process.

Before leaving this field of inquiry we wish to refer to the opinion of the court in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U.S. 447, 473), which gives an excellent analysis of the power of public administrative bodies to investigate private business, examine witnesses, and to require the production of books and records. The court said:

"It was clearly competent for Congress, to that end, to invest the Commission with authority to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter legally committeed to that body for investigation. We do not understand that any of these propositions are disputed in this case.

"Interpreting the Interstate Commerce Act as applicable, and as intended to apply, only to matters involved in the regulation of commerce, and which Congress may rightfully subject to investigation by a commission established for the purpose of enforcing that act, we are unable to say that its provisions are not appropriate and plainly adapted to the protection of interstate commerce from burdens that are or may be, directly and indirectly, imposed upon it by means of unjust and unreasonable discriminations, charges, and preferences. Congress is not limited in its employment of means to those that are absolutely essential to the accomplishment of objects within the scope of the powers granted to it. It is a settled principle of constitutional law that 'the government which has a right to do an act, and has imposed on it the duty of performing that act, must, according to the dictates of reason, be allowed to select the means; and those who contend that it may not select any appropriate means, that one particular mode of effecting the object is excepted, take upon themselves the burden of establishing that exception.'"

We fail to find any difference in principle between the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and records as a basis for rate-making and the exercise of corresponding powers by the State commerce commission as part of its duties to supervise the sale of securities.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has passed upon the constitutionality of the State securities act of that State in the case of Halsey, Stuart & Co. v. Public Service Commission (248 N.W. 458). Upholding the act as a proper exercise of the State's police power the court said:

"The regulations governing securities and security brokers constitute an exercise of the police power and to the extent that there are 'reasonable regulations affecting dealings in such products, for the prevention of fraud and in promotion of public health, safety, and general welfare', they are clearly valid" (Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 204, N.W. 595, 603).

The court even went so far as to hold that there might be a suspension of broker's license without a hearing without a violation of due process. Before leaving this branch of the case, we wish to call attention to the recent case of People of the State of New York v. Pecot, 188 N.E. 119. In this case it appears that Pecot was convicted of violating the general business law of the State of New York in failing to appear and produce certain records before the Attorney General as directed by a subpena. On appeal, without an opinion the Court of Appeals of New York affirmed the judgment of the lower court. The matter was taken by certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States and that court refused to grant a review on the ground that no substantial Federal question was involved. (See U.S. Supreme Court Law ed. Advance Opinions, vol. 78–27, p. 538.) One of the leading cases on the question whether a provision in a securities act requiring the production of books and records and authorizing the examination of witnesses in connection with an investigation conducted under the State securities act is a violation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment is the case of Dunham v. Ottinger (243 N.Y. 423).

The New York law authorizes the attorney general to issue injunctions restraining persons from engaging in fraudulent practices in connection with the sale of securities whenever he has reason to believe from evidence satisfactory to him that such persons have engaged in such practices. It also authorizes the bringing of criminal action in proper cases but gives the usual immunity to witnesses who have testified. In this case, plaintiff, a stock broker, brought an action to restrain the attorney general of the State from examining him and his books upon a subpena and order issued under the State Securities Act. The objection was raised that this action ran counter to the constitution because it is carried on without any knowledge of guilt on the part of the investigator. With reference to this matter the court very properly pointed out that if the person investigated was innocent such investigation might be to his advantage by freeing him from the burden of an unjust prosecution.

So we say here that if Banco is innocent the investigation now being conducted by the commerce commission will free it from the necessity for standing prosecution. Such an investigation cannot be held to be either a violation of due process or an unlawful search and seizure.

With reference to the question whether the authority given was a violation of constitutional rights because it authorized the attorney general to conduct a general investigation without any positive knowledge of guilt the court had this to say:

"The statute does not commission the attorney general to embark upon any roving course for the purpose of generally prying into the affairs of any person. Having authorized him to institute proceedings to prevent or punish violations of the statute, it authorizes him to acquire information, make investigations, and conduct examinations 'as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the subject matter which he believes it is to the public interest to investigate.' Or again, to examine witnesses under oath and require the production of any books or papers 'which he deems relevant or material to the inquiry.' This all is the end of enabling the attorney general to determine whether a situation exists which calls upon him for action under the provisions of the statute, and it is to be assumed that he will proceed in good faith and with knowledge of any regard for the principles which govern relevancy of evidence."

Even as the New York court said that it must be assumed that the attorney general will proceed in good faith and with knowledge of and regard for the principles which govern relevancy of evidence, so we say that the State commerce commission must be assumed to be proceeding in good faith in connection with their investigation of Banco.

The New York court goes on to point out that if through ignorance or intention the attorney general transgresses these principles, the victim of his oppressive action may appeal to the courts for protection. The same course is open to Banco and its officers under the law of Minnesota.

Specifically considering the due-process clause, the court said:

"It would be tedious and is unnecessary to consider at length the meaning of the due-process clauses of the Federal and State Constitutions as they are invoked against the statute. Certainly, before they can be successfully appealed to, it must appear that some substantial right of the person invoking them is about to be violated by an exercise of governmental powers which run counter to the spirit of our institutions and processes as they have been established by custom and settled maxims of law. It is impossible to find any basis for the claim that this statute proposes such a violation.

"The power to investigate and examine witnesses to the end of a better discharge of their duties has been conferred upon administrative boards and officials without successful challenge by so many statutes that it is undesirable to refer to them all."

X. THE STATE SECURITIES ACT AND THE COMMISSION'S ORDERS THEREUNDER DO NOT CONSTITUTE SUCH AN UNREASONABLE SEARCH AND SEIZURE AS TO BE IN VIOLATION OF THE FOURTH AMENDMENT OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION OR SECTION 10 OF ARTICLE 1 OF THE STATE CONSTITUTION

The contention is made on the part of plaintiff that the State securities law as applied in this case amounts to an unreasonable search and seizure in violation of the State and Federal Constitutions. In this connection, let us remember the English historical background which brought the fourth amendment into the Constitution of the United States and similar provisions into State constitutions. Let us remember the centuries of searches and seizures under general warrants and writs of assistance issued in behalf of the Tudors and the Stuarts and the kings and queens of Hanover, monarchs with autocratic power, to further their own selfish ends. It is a far cry from searches and seizures of this autocratic character to the beneficent purposes of our State securities act, the object of which is to protect the innocent and the weak against the machinations of the unscrupulous and the strong. How carefully the courts should proceed in bringing official action within the ban of constitutional provisions like those of the fourth amendment is well expressed by the opinion in the case of People v. Milone (119 N.Y.Misc. 22, 24):

"The evil which our enactment was designed to combat was, therefore, concrete rather than theoretical. The statute must be interpreted in that light. It must not be permitted to afford a haven of protection for crime, by embarrassing legitimate functioning of the police power. The danger in stating in theory a remedy for a concrete condition is that the theory is apt to run wild and outstrip the sound purpose which gave it life. The welfare and protection of law-abiding people should be neither sacrificed nor impaired by maudlin construction of a statute designed to benefit rather than to work against the best interests of organized society."

And so we argue here that this court should be very slow to extend the shield of section 10, article 1, of the State constitution to protect an institution which for years appears to have been guilty of deceit and concealment and fraud in connection with the sale of nearly $100,000,000 of stock.

In the case of Standard Home Co. v. David (217 Fed. 904, 916), the validity of the securities act of Arkansas was attacked because it authorized the bank commissioner to examine the business of investment companies. The court said:

"The act is also attacked upon the ground that it authorizes the bank commissioner, his clerks, accountants, and examiners, to examine the business of such investment company, and may require it to divulge any and all facts in connection with said business, whether or not the same relates in any way to securities proposed to be sold in Arkansas. The plaintiff is a corporation, and it is now well settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the right to inquire into the condition of corporations exists, and, if necessary for the purpose of enforcing a law, to compel the production of all books, letters, and other records, without violating the provisions of the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States." (Hale v. Henkel (201 U.S. 43, 74, 75; 26 Sup. Ct. 370; 50 L.ed. 652); Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont (207 U.S. 541; 28 Sup. Ct. 178; 52 L.ed. 327; 12 Ann. Cas. 658); Hammond Packing Co. v. State of Arkansas (212 U.S. 322, 348, 349; 29 Sup. Ct. 370; 53 L.ed. 530; 15 Ann. Cas. 645); Wilson v. United States (221 U.S. 361, 383; 31 Sup. Ct. 538; 55 L.ed. 771; Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558)).

It is claimed by plaintiff that the commission's orders fail to describe with sufficient particularity, as required by section 10 of article 1 of the State constitution, the papers to be produced by plaintiff. In this connection we need only point out that the very nature of the investigation conducted makes impossible that absolute definiteness of designation which may be possible in other cases, and that the commission's orders were as definite as the nature of the case permitted. To require greater definiteness would be tantamount to prohibiting investigation.

As for all claims made with reference to the fourth amendment we need only point out that this amendment is applicable only to the action of Federal officers. In Lloyd v. Dollison (194 U.S. 445), the Supreme Court said:

"It is well established that the first eight articles of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States have reference to powers exercised by the Government of the United States and not those of the States. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth Colony (134 U.S. 31)."

Significant, also, is the holding of the Supreme Court of Minnesota in State v. Pluth (157 Minn. 145, 153), to the same effect.

"In State v. Stofjels (89 Minn. 205, 94 N.W. 675), this court held that incriminating articles (in that case intoxicating liquors) seized under a search warrant were admissible in evidence. Whether such articles were seized under a warrant or without a warrant could make no difference in determining whether using them as evidence would compel the defendant to be a witness against himself in the meaning of the constitution."

The proposition that the investigation of the books and records of a private corporation by an administrative body is not an illegal search or seizure in violation of the State constitution is very clearly shown by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of State ex rel. City of Minneapolis v. Minneapolis Street Ry. Co. et al. (154 Minn. 401, 413). In that case the city filed a petition in the district court praying for a writ of mandamus commanding the Minneapolis Street Railway Co., the Twin City Rapid Transit Co. and the St. Paul City Railway Co., to permit the city to examine and inspect their books, records, accounts, documents, and other data of transportation companies affiliated with them to enable the city to prepare for a rate hearing before the Minnesota Railroad & Warehouse Commission. It will be noted that this was a request for an order for leave to investigate more sweeping in its language than the order of the commission in the present case and that as in the present case it was the order of an administrative body. In its decision with reference to this issue the court said:

"An inspection of its stock books will not subject the transit company to an unreasonable search or seizure in violation of rights guaranteed by the State and Federal Constitutions. It is too plain for argument that there is no invasion of the right to be secure in the possession of private papers and effects, when a public-service corporation is required to submit its stock books to the inspection of the representatives of the public, charged with the duty of ascertaining the value of the property of the corporation."

XI. THE SECURITIES ACT DOES NOT VIOLATE THE PROVISION OF THE STATE CONSTITUTION WITH REFERENCE TO A THREEFOLD DIVISION OF GOVERNMENT POWERS

In support of this proposition we refer to the case of Porter, Auditor, v. Investors Syndicate (287 U.S. 346), in which the court said:

"The statute plainly affords a remedy which, though in certain respects judicial, is in others administrative. The courts of Montana have not passed upon its constitutionality as affected by the quoted section of the fundamental law of the State. Such expressions of the Supreme Court as have been brought to our attention indicate that article IV, section 1, does not forbid the conference on the State district courts of administrative powers in connection with and ancillary to their judicial functions. O'Neill v. Yellowstone Irrigation Dist. (44 Mont. 492; 121 Pac. 283; State v. Johnson, 75 Mont. 240, 249; 243 Pac. 1073. Compare

State ex rel. Kellogg v. District Court, 13 Mont. 370; 34 Pac. 298; Hillis v. Sullivan, 48 Mont. 320; 137 Pac. 392.)

"An adjudication of the question by the State supreme court would bind us. (Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dennis, 224 U.S. 503.) In the absence of such decision we are reluctant to construe a State constitution (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U.S. 298), but as our decision requires that the alleged conflict of State statute and State constitution be resolved we must pass upon it (Southern Ry. Co. v. Watts, 260 U.S. 519, 522). In view of the Montana cases, to which reference has been made, we are not convinced that the statute is offensive to the Montana Constitution, and adhere to the judgment heretofore entered."

XII. THE COMMERCE COMMISSION HAS NOT LOST ITS LEGAL RIGHT TO INVESTIGATE THE SALES OF BANCO STOCK BY REASON OF THE FACT THAT SUCH STOCK IS NO LONGER REGISTERED NOR BY REASON OF THE FACT THAT BANCO HAS OFFERED TO WAIVE THE EXEMPT STATUS OF ITS STOCK.

The case of State ex rel. Veigel v. Hardstone Brick Co. (172 Minn. 328), which plaintiff may rely upon, differs very materially from the present case. In that case it appears that the commerce commission suspended the right of the Hardstone Brick Co. to sell stock on August 24, 1926 and ordered respondents to show cause on September 14, 1926, why the registration should not be canceled; that on September 1, 1926, the company requested the commission to cancel the registration; and that no stock was sold after the order for suspension of sale, August 24, 1926. The commission refrained from canceling the registration.

The commission asked for a financial statement on August 27, 1926, which was not provided. The company also refused to permit an audit of its books. In order to compel respondents to produce its books and records for examination and audit, a writ of mandamus was applied for. Relators demurred to respondents' return and their demurrer was overruled. The lower court was sustained by the supreme court. As this is a case of great importance in connection with the present matter we quote from the opinion at some length. On the question whether in a proper case the commission may issue subpenas and require the production of witnesses the court said:

"Section 19 empowers the commission to investigation and determine whether any securities, including securities exempted from registration, are fraudulent or being sold in a fraudulent manner, or whether any provisions of the act are being violated, and to take steps to prosecute those guilty of violations. The commission may issue subpenas and require the attendance of witnesses, and the production of books and papers. A natural person thus compelled to testify has immunity against any prosecution, except for perjury in giving such testimony.

"The power given the commission is drastic, but so long as it is exercised to protect the public against fraudulent securities it should not be hampered."

This shows that in a proper case the court may issue subpenas and require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers.

The commission considers next the case where the securities are withdrawn from sale and a request submitted for cancelation of registration. Then, the court says, there is no longer any occasion to protect the public against their sale. The court continues: "Then there remains only the meting out of punishment, if to obtain registration or while it was in force any person connected with such securities violated the law." It was on this point that the court found the relator's pleading insufficient, because he failed to charge any specific violation of the law.

But let us note well that this is not the present case, for two reasons: First, the commission's order for investigation in the present case sets forth specific charges of violation of the law and defendants' answer sets forth with considerable definiteness specific charges of violations. Defendants are not embarked on a "fishing expedition."

There is also another fundamental distinction in the two cases. The stock sold by Banco during most of the time after its organization was an exempted security by reason of the fact that it was listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange. With reference to such a stock the commission had and has continuous power to guard against fraudulent sales. We emphasize this point. There is no cessation of power on the part of the commission over such stock for that of registration is withdrawn. On this point we quote from the decision two clearly-worded paragraphs (p. 331):

"The commission argues that, since it has power under section 19 to require an issuer or seller of securities exempted from the registration and license provisions of the act to submit to an examination of the books and records of the business, there is more reason to hold that it has power to compel the issuer or seller of registered securities to produce books and records for examination, even though the registration has been suspended and the party who obtained the same has requested its cancelation. When the purpose of the law is kept in view, namely, to prevent the sale of fraudulent securities and the fraudulent sale of securities, there seems to us to be a marked distinction between the two classes of securities.

"In the case of securities exempted from registration the duty of the commission is continuous to guard against fraudulent sales thereof, but as to those required to be registered the commission is to investigate their character before registration to ascertain whether inherently they are honest and not fraudulent, so that the public in buying them receive the value they purport to represent; and so long as the sale is permitted the power to investigate and to demand the production of books and records undoubtedly continues. But when the right of sale is suspended and the one who obtained the registration and license demands the cancelation and revocation thereof, there is no longer any occasion to resort to an examination of books and papers in order to protect the public against either a fraudulent sale of such securities or a sale thereof, whether they be good or bad."

Summarizing, we conclude that in the present case the Commission may exercise its power to issue subpenas and require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers because:

First, it has alleged definite violations of the law by plaintiff.

Second, it is dealing with a security exempt from registration with reference to which it has a continuous duty to guard against fraudulent sales.

It is our understanding that a detailed provision of a law is to be so interpreted as to give it effect in accordance with the main purpose of the act of which it is a part. The main purpose of the State securities act is to afford to the public a greater degree of safety in purchasing securities by reason of the fact that the State commerce commission is authorized to make a comprehensive investigation of such securities before they are registered and to make investigations at any time to determine whether any securities, including securities exempted by section 2 of the act, are fraudulent or are being sold in a fraudulent manner. Stock of Banco, being listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange, is such an exempted stock. Now it is true, when the commerce commission's investigation had reached the point where it sought to learn about the stock pool operated by Banco, Banco rushed to the commission with a paper purporting to waive its exempt status. The act does not give to a company having exempt status power to waive that exempt status. Nor does it give to the commission the power to permit it to do so. Exempt status is a question of fact. Section 2, subdivision 5 of the act gives to securities listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange exempt status. Banco is so listed. That is a fact. Banco cannot waive the existence of this fact by saying it does so any more than one of its officers can waive his existence as a human being by saying he waives that fact.

It lies very close to ask: Why did Banco so precipitately seek to waive the exempt status of its stock? Why, if not in the hope of escaping further investigation? It would be an extraordinary interpretation of the securities law to hold that the commission may investigate to determine whether exempted securities are fraudulent and then to hold that, when the commission is on the threshold of finding damaging evidence, the door to further investigation must be closed providing the investigated company shall say: "Stop, stop! We waive our exempt status."

In further support of our contention we refer to the case of Motor Finance & Guarantee Corporation v. Georgia Securities Commission et al. (158 Georgia 75) in which the facts were as follows:

The license of plaintiff corporation to sell its stock in Georgia would have expired December 31, 1923. It returned its license and surrendered all rights to do business in Georgia as of January 1, 1923. Thereafter the Securities Commission investigated certain dealings of said corporation and decided that there were irregularities in the sale of stock to a certain person. Thereupon, on June 23, 1923, it issued its order directing said corporation to return to said person her promissory note given for said stock. It also suspended plaintiff's license until a financial statement called for had been submitted.

Upon receipt of these notices plaintiff filed a petition in court praying that the commission "be enjoined and restrained from taking any action whatsoever in the affairs of petitioner, and from making any official or other entry of cancelation or revocation of any alleged license of petitioner to do business in the State of Georgia, since no such license exists or has existed since June 30, 1923"; also, "that defendants be enjoined generally from interfering with the conduct of petitioner's business."

The request for injunction was refused in the lower court and the court's action was sustained by the Supreme Court.

XIII. DURING THE 3 YEARS PRECEDING THE ISSUANCE OF THE COMMISSION'S ORDERS THE SALE OF BANCO STOCK WAS FRAUDULENT BECAUSE THERE WAS EXCESSIVE VALUATION OF STOCK SOLD ON THE BASIS OF SUCH EXCESSIVE VALUATION OF ASSETS

Excessive valuation of corporate property makes a stock issue based on such valuation fraudulent as to buyers of stock. Insufficient consideration in sale of corporate stock makes the sale fraudulent as to corporation creditors.

The case of Jose v. Utley, District Attorney (185 Calif. 656, 199 Pac. 1037), gives us an excellent illustration of these two rules of law, namely, that excessive valuation of corporate property makes a stock issue based on such valuation fraudulent as to stockholders and that insufficient consideration in sale of corporate stock makes sale fraudulent as to creditors.

In this case action was brought to enjoin Utley, as district attorney, from prosecuting Truax for violating the securities act of California by sale of stock in an oil company.

The Imperial Pacific (etc.) Oil Co., an Arizona corporation, had acquired certain rights to drill for oil on four sections, 2,560 acres of land, in California in exchange for 2,496,000 one-dollar shares of its capital stock. Margaret Truax was engaged in selling 1,000,000 shares of this stock without a permit from the commissioner of securities of California. Dollar shares of stock were being sold at 15 cents. Even this price was predicated upon a total value of corporate property of $375,000, which was far beyond its true value. This action was brought to enjoin Utley, as district attorney, from prosecuting Truax for violating the State securities act.

The first question at issue was whether the manner in which this stock was issued and was being sold was fraudulent for the reason that there was not sufficient consideration in the original exchange of stock for drilling rights and too great a consideration in the sale by Truax. The court said:

"The respondent contends that the method of sale adopted, if stock is offered at 15 cents per share, was a representation to the public that the property of the corporation was worth at least $375,000—that is, 2,500,000 times 15 cents—and that it was in fact valueless. It is sufficient for us to say that it is manifest from the complaint that the issuance of the capital stock of the corporation was fraudulent as against creditors and stockholders, because of the excessive valuation placed upon the property acquired by the corporation, which brings the transaction under the rule announced first in Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez Granite Co. (135 Calif. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L.R.A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143) and adhered to through a long line of cases, the last of which is Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., supra, holding such a transfer of corporate stock to be fraudulent as to future creditors, and that the representation upon the face of the stock was a false statement of the fact, calculated to deceive both future creditors and stockholders."

Having established the fraudulent character of the stock issue and the stock sale, the court considered next the question whether a court of equity could come to the aid of a party to the fraud and said:

"In view of the fraudulent nature of the transaction sought to be carried out, equity will not aid the plaintiffs by an injunction, even if it be conceded the law attacked is unconstitutional, and the threatened action of the district attorney is therefore erroneous. I is sufficient on this point to cite a decision of the United States district court in National Mercantile Co. v. Keating ((D.C.) 218 Fed. 477), wherein the constitutionality of the blue-sky law of Montana was attacked by a plaintiff who sought to enjoin the enforcement of the law; but as the plaintiff came into court with unclean hands, that court refused relief."

Let us apply these rules of law to the case of Banco. In the first big group of exchanges of stock Banco paid more than $10,000,000 more for the stock of a group of banks than the tangible asset value of such stocks. This price seems to have been an excessive allowance for good will. If it was, it was a fraud upon the creditors of Banco. Nevertheless, on such a structure of water, it proceeded to offer its stock at 50 and 62.50 and 72.50 and even tried to get 82.50, stock which apparently did not have tangible assets behind it at any time in excess of 37. That was a fraud upon the public that bought that stock.

Here was a double fraud; a fraud upon the stockholders in paying too much for corporate assets, and a fraud upon investors in stock in selling the stock at too high a price without revealing the presence of water or good will in the capital structure. The State of Minnesota has a right to ask questions about these fraudulent valuations and these fraudulent sales.

XIV. THE SALE OF BANCO STOCK WAS FRAUDULENT BECAUSE, DURING THE 3 YEARS PRECEDING THE ISSUANCE OF THE COMMISSION'S ORDERS, DIVIDENDS WERE VOTED AND PAID NOTWITHSTANDING THE FACT THAT THERE WERE NO NET PROFITS AND THAT THERE WERE LOSSES RUNNING INTO MILLIONS OF DOLLARS, AND BECAUSE THE PURPOSE AND EFFECT OF SUCH ILLEGAL DECLARATION AND PAYMENT OF DIVIDENDS WAS TO ENHANCE THE DEMAND FOR BANCO STOCK AND TO RAISE THE PRICES OF BANCO STOCK ABOVE ITS TRUE VALUE

It is a well-established rule of corporate law that dividends may be paid only out of earnings unless in the very nature of the business, as in the operation of a mine, there must be depletion of capital. 14 Corpus Juris, section 1209, makes the following statement:

"With the exception of dividends in liquidation, dividends can be declared and paid out of net profits only, or, conversely stated, when the payment thereof does not impair the capital stock of the corporation. * * * . If the capital stock has been impaired by the payment of the dividend, it is, nevertheless, unlawful, although the corporation is solvent at the time."

Corpus Juris, in section 1210, states the reason for this rule to be that to allow impairment of capital by the payment of dividends would be a fraud upon creditors and also a fraud upon stockholders because each stockholder is entitled to have the capital stock preserved unimpaired for the purpose of better carrying out the object for which the corporation was formed.

14 Corpus Juris, in section 1213, continues:

"In this country the courts have made no distinction between fixed and circulating capital but have generally taken the view that a corporation must maintain its capital stock at its original value before any dividends may lawfully be paid."

With reference to the question, whether dividends may be declared from any source except surplus or net profit, section 1949 of the Revised Code of Delaware, 1915, has this to say:

"No corporation created under the provisions of this chapter, nor the directors thereof, shall make dividends except from the surplus or net profits arising from its business. Dividends may be paid in cash or capital stock at par, but otherwise the corporation shall not divide, withdraw, or in any way pay to the stockholders or any of them any part of its capital stock, or reduce its capital stock except according to this chapter, and in case of any willful or negligent violation of the provisions of this section the directors under whose administration the same may happen shall be jointly and severally liable in an action on the case at any time within 6 years after paying such dividend to the corporation and its creditors or any of them."

As Banco is a Delaware corporation, it would seem to follow, from what has been said, that the dividend payments by Banco during 1931 and 1932 were clearly in violation of law.

That this is a correct interpretation of the Delaware statutes is shown by the following quotation from the Court of Chancery of Delaware, in Kingston v. Home Life Insurance Co. of America (101 Atl. 898, 903):

"The prayer of the bill on the subject is for an injunction to prevent the officers of the insurance company from declaring or paying a dividend upon its stock except out of actual earnings. This may be granted without much consideration of the facts, because it would be but a declaration of the statute law of the State which permits dividends to be paid only out of surplus or net profits arising from the business of the company."

Said the Federal district court in the case of Corliss v. United States (7 Fed. (2d) 455):

"It was true, as the agents stated, that the company had paid dividends, and in their judgment would continue to do so. This, of course, fairly implied that the dividends were paid out of net profits."

We believe we have established that dividends running into many millions of dollars were paid by Banco during 1930, 1931, and 1932, and that, in the aggregate, there were losses during said years running into tens of millions of dollars. It follows that during these years, in paying such dividends, Banco was guilty of a tremendous fraud both upon its then stockholders, by depleting its capital, and upon the public, by imparting to its stock an excessive market value.

XV. THE SALE OF BANCO STOCK MAY HAVE BEEN FRAUDULENT BECAUSE BANCO MAINTAINED A POOL, CONTRACTED TO KEEP HUGE BLOCKS OF STOCK OFF THE MARKET FOR 6-MONTH PERIODS, AND IN VARIOUS WAYS SOUGHT TO ALTER THE USUAL AND NATURAL CURRENTS OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND FOR BANCO STOCK, ALL, APPARENTLY, FOR THE PURPOSE OF RAISING THE MARKET PRICES OF BANCO STOCKS ABOVE THEIR NATURAL MARKET VALUE

Another fraudulent practice of which Banco appears to have been guilty is that of manipulating prices to its own advantage, or to the advantage of a favored group, by means of pools.

The question whether such manipulation of prices by means of pools is fraudulent is ably discussed in the very recent case of United States v. Brown (vol. 5, no. 3, Fed. supp. 81). In that case it appears that Brown and others were indicted for conspiracy to form a pool artificially to manipulate the price of certain stock on the stock market "without regard to the real value of the stock", and for using mails in connection with said fraudulent scheme. The question at issue was whether the indictment was demurrable because the scheme described for the use of a pool to manipulate prices did not constitute fraud. The court said:

"The theory pressed on me for the defendant McCarthy, as I understand it, is substantially this: That if two or more persons, through the operation of what is known as a 'pool' agree to raise the price of a security listed on a stock exchange, they may proceed to achieve that objective without being guilty of any actionable fraud, vis-a-vis, a member of the public who purchases that security relying on the exchange market quotations, on the theory that the maxim of caveat emptor applies. But that maxim applies properly only to free and open markets.

"When an outsider, a member of the public, reads the price quotations of a stock listed on an exchange, he is justified in supposing that the quoted price is an appraisal of the value of that stock due to a series of actual sales between various persons dealing at arm's length in a free and open market on the exchange, and so represents a true chancering of the market value of that stock thereon under the process of attrition due to supply operating against demand.

"If, however, the market for the stock listed on an exchange is a manipulated or controlled market, in which a group of insiders, in order to enable themselves profitably to dispose of their holdings, are artificially raising the quoted price of the stock on the only market to which any man who wishes to purchase that stock would inevitably resort, and an outsider buys in that market he would obviously pay more—how much more perhaps cannot be estimated and, in any event, in a criminal case of this kind, is not material—than he would have paid in a free and open market, and hence is a victim of unfair dealing by insiders. But he is entitled to fair dealing and should get it.

"Judges have properly set their faces sternly against any practices by which the right of fair dealing between man and man is in any way infringed, and, whenever there is any false representation made by word or act in behalf of a pool for the purpose of inducing the public to come into the market and buy securities it is held to be a fraud, and contracts between the insiders are held to be illegal and against public policy.

"The doctrine stems back to the case of Rex v. DeBerenger, Maule and Selwyn's Reports 67, decided in 1814. In that case DeBerenger and seven others were tried on an indictment for a conspiracy to raise the price of British Government funds by circulating the then false report of the death of Napoleon Bonaparte, and predicting that, consequently, peace would soon be concluded between the British King and the people of France, with the purpose of increasing the price of government funds and other Government securities on the 21st day of February 1814, and thus injuring any person who should buy funds or securities on that day.

"The defendants were convicted, and a motion was made in arrest of judgment. On this motion the case came before the Court of King's Bench en banc, and the judges were unanimous in holding that the defendants were guilty of a conspiracy to defraud."

The State is not yet in possession of all the facts with reference to the pool operated by Banco in connection with the sale of its stock. We know Banco maintained such a pool within the 3-year period preceding the commission's orders. We know the pool involved at least 75,000 shares, or about $4,000,000, of its stock. We know the pool kept stock off the market. We know the pool was financed by Banco. Just how the pool was operated to accomplish these purposes we do not know because when the commission reached this phase of its inquiry its further investigation was halted by this court's restraining order.

Why is Banco afraid to have this branch of the inquiry pursued? What lies concealed within its records that must not be brought to light? We do not know. But in connection with the facts we do know about this pool and in connection with the other fraudulent dealing already brought to light, we cannot but come to the conclusion that the State has the legal right to go to the bottom of this matter.

XVI. DURING THE 3-YEAR PERIOD PRECEDING THE ISSUANCE OF THE COMMISSION'S ORDER PLAINTIFF DIRECTLY MISREPRESENTED TO THE INVESTING PUBLIC THE AMOUNT OF ITS NET EARNINGS FOR THE PURPOSE OF PROMOTING THE SALE OF ITS STOCK AND ADVANCING THE PRICE THEREOF

The facts being granted, and they have been fully presented, we believe it will be conceded that such misrepresentation in connection with the sale of stock is fraudulent and a violation of the State securities act.

XVII. A COMPARISON OF THE CASE OF FOSHAY v. UNITED STATES AND THE PRESENT CASE

Before we close we wish to make a comparison of certain phases of the cases of Foshay v. United States and Henley v. United States (opinion not yet available in printed form), with the present case, and to refer to the opinion therein rendered by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit. Foshay and Henley were convicted of having devised a scheme and artifice to defraud and to obtain money and property by means of fraud and of having used the mail to further such fraud.

The trial court in its instructions to the jury summarized that fraudulent scheme in this way:

"The heart of the fraudulent scheme charged is that the defendants schemed to and did falsely represent that, owing to the good management of the Foshay companies, they were earning and paying large dividends upon the stock of such corporations and that the stock furnished a safe and conservative investment, and that the companies were not earning dividends as represented, and were not earning any dividends, but were paying said dividends out of capital of the corporations for the purpose of inducing potential investors to purchase such stock."

The court found the facts to be that there were no net earnings and that the so-called "earnings" came from a write-up, or arbitrary increase in valuation, on the books of the company, of the value of its capital assets; that this, coupled with the fact that no word of explanation as to the true source of all these vast earnings was ever given to the public, was seriously fraudulent. The Court of Appeals said in its decision:

"It is significant that throughout the tons of company literature no word can be found to inform the public that the earnings were simply increases of valuations that Foshay and Henley were determining in their own minds and writing up on the books."

"Foshay and Henley solved the difficulty by their theory of creating values. When they acquired property and included it 'in their picture' (as their phrase was), a value was created. They determined for themselves how much the creation amounted to in dollars and cents and wrote it up on their books where it was carried into surplus. By calling such surplus 'earnings' as they did, the way was clear, and sixty millions of other people's money were brought into their control."

The court said further:

"They deliberately and intentionally, and with many crafty bookkeeping devices, covered up and concealed the real nature of their adventure; and falsely pretended that they were making money, earnings, net earnings, operating earnings, profits, and income. People bought Foshay securities because they believed the companies were making money and paying large dividends monthly out of the earnings."

The court very properly pointed out that fraud may consist, not merely in false statement, but also in concealment of fact. The court summarized a recent English case, as follows:

"In a recent conspicuous case in England the conviction of a company director was sustained, although his published prospectus did not contain any outright statement of fact found to be false. The statute denounced the publishing of any written statement known to be false in any material particular with intent to induce any person to become a shareholder. The prospectus reflected the payment of dividends over a period and although the dividends were in fact paid as indicated in the prospectus, they had been paid out of reserves accumulated in former years. The court held the jury justified in finding that the failure to disclose the source of the dividends amounted to concealment, on account of which the prospectus statement as a whole, was deceptive and false in a material particular. Rex v. Kylsant (101 K.B.Div., 1932 L.J.)"

The court expressed its view of the legal phase of this branch of the case as follows:

"It is well settled that the criteria of fraud evolved in civil cases are applicable to prosecutions under the mail fraud statute. Discussion of what amounts to fraud is found in greater volume in the reports of civil cases, but the principles are no different. To try to delimit fraud by definition would tend to reward subtle and ingenious circumvention and is not done. The particular facts determine its presence or absence on principles long settled by the courts in civil and criminal cases alike. Where company officers intentionally mislead prospective investors into the mistaken belief that their company is making money, by the false representation that it is currently in receipt of large net earnings, exceeding the current dividends when, in fact, there is not enough of current earnings to meet the expenses, an offense is presented under the statute (sec. 215) as soon as the mails are used" (United States v. Rowe, 56 Fed. (2d) 747).

When, in 1929, the Foshay Minnesota Corporation was changed to the Foshay Delaware Corporation there was set up on the books of the new corporation a bogus item of $1,434,000, variously designated "property, plant, and equipment" and "going-concern value." This fraudulent device for promoting sales of the new company's stock was severely denounced by the court.

This case emphasizes the following propositions:

1. That excessive valuation of corporate property, coupled with the sale of stock on the basis of such excessive valuation, constitutes fraud.

2. That a payment of dividends when there are no earnings and no true surplus, for the purpose of deceiving the investor as to the true value of the stock offered, constitutes fraud.

That concealment of facts in financial statements used in connection with the sale of stocks constitutes fraud.

Let us look at the present case in the light of the law and the facts presented in the Foshay case.

In this case, as in the Foshay case, there was deliberate overvaluation of corporate property. To cite only one instance, when the stock of the first group of banks was acquired by Banco they were paid for in stock of Banco exceeding by nearly $11,000,000 the tangible asset value behind the stock acquired by Banco. And this $11,000,000 of water or goodwill (we question whether there was one dollar of real value in it) this $11,000,000 of water was carried on Banco's books, and made the valuation basis of stock sale What was this but fraud, and deliberate fraud, on the investing public?

In this case, as in the Foshay case, there was payment of dividends, millions and millions of dividends out of capital, out of the very money which the investors in innocent trustfulness paid in. Millions and millions of dividends were paid out, year after year, in spite of losses running into tens of millions. Were these payments made without knowledge of the losses? Is it conceivable that the officers and directors of a corporation which in a period of 4 years was suffering a loss in the neighborhood of $50,000,000 could be ignorant of the losses? The motive is as plain as it was in the Foshay case, to broaden the demand for Banco stock, to push higher and still higher the price of Banco stock. Was such procedure fraudulent? The opinion in the Foshay case gives us an affirmative answer.

In this case, as in the Foshay case, there was artful concealment of the true financial condition; in both cases by concealing the fact that there were millions and millions of water in the capital structure.

In this case there were additional factors which may have the earmarks of fraud, particularly the great anxiety shown to keep the stock sold off the market by agreements in practically every exchange of stock to the effect that it must not be sold for 6 months and especially by the creation of a gigantic pool to trade in stock. Were the operations of that pool, also, fraudulent? Frankly, we are not sure. The strong hand of this court was laid upon the members of our commerce commission when they were about to reach that material, and therefore we do not know.

But that is the very reason why that commission should be authorized to proceed. Nearly 20,000 owners of stock, more than half of them in this State, have lost in the aggregate over $60,000,000. Why have they lost it? Who was responsible? They have a right to ask. The commerce commission, as their official representative, has a right to ask. That is one of the very purposes of section 19 of our act, to authorize investigation to determine whether any securities, including securities exempted by section 2 of the act, are fraudulent, or are being sold in a fraudulent manner. The act says "any securities." That certainly includes Banco stock.

XVIII. THE IMPORTANCE TO THE STATE OF HAVING THIS INVESTIGATION PROCEED FORTHWITH

It is of the utmost importance to the State to have this investigation proceed promptly. Three years is the period of limitations for criminal prosecutions in the State of Minnesota. If Banco can keep this case in court long enough, the statute of limitations will have run against all criminal proceedings, probably against a great many civil proceedings that should be instituted under the law against Banco and its officers. The court should not lend itself to thus shield Banco and its officers by the use of the process of the Federal court. If Banco and its officers are innocent of any wrongdoing, as they claim, then the investigation will not do them any legal injury. But if, on the other hand, they are guilty, the effect of granting the injunction may, in effect, be to give them immunity. To grant a stay of any kind and keep the proceedings tied up in court is to give them a temporary immunity which may possibly amount to a permanent one before all the facts can be discovered. It is therefore of the utmost importance to the State in the enforcement of its laws that the investigation before the commission proceed immediately.

XIX. IRRESPECTIVE OF ALL OTHER LEGAL RIGHTS, PLAINTIFF HAS NO STANDING IN A COURT OF EQUITY TO ASK FOR RELIEF, BECAUSE IT DOES NOT COME WITH CLEAN HANDS

Plaintiff is not entitled to equitable relief unless it comes with clean hands. We have in mind the old English case in which two highwaymen divided a certain heath near London for the conduct of their trade. One of them encroached on the other's territory, and the aggrieved bandit had the temerity to come into a court of equity for redress. Needless to say, his hands were not clean, and so he could have no relief in a court of conscience. We contend that plaintiff's hands are not sufficiently clean to justify this court in rendering assistance. It is true that we know only in part; but to us there seems to be enough revealed in the record, in excessive allowances for goodwill in the first exchanges of Banco stock for stock of leading banks of the Northwest; in placing the goodwill in the capital structure as having the actual value allowed in the exchanges; in failure to list this separately on financial statements; and thereby leading buyers to believe that Banco stock was worth face value or more; in declaring dividends running into millions of dollars in excess of net income, obviously for the purpose of deceiving the public as to the true value of Banco stock; in failing to state that such dividends were paid out of capital; in recommending stock as a good investment at constantly rising prices in spite of knowledge that losses were being sustained; in direct misrepresentation of amount of income; in entering into contracts restricting the sale of stock by the owners thereof, for the obvious purpose of maintaining an artificial and false price level; and in forming a pool to deal in vast amounts of Banco stock, apparently for the purpose of keeping up prices above true and fair price levels, we find fraud of so unmistakable a character that we cannot believe a court of conscience will condone it and grant relief.

We are considering a matter of the utmost importance to the people of this State and this Nation. Nearly 20,000 people hold Banco stock; nearly 11,000 men and women of Minnesota are among these stockholders. If there was no fraud, no write-up of values, no illegal concealment of material facts, no deliberate misstatement of material facts as to amount of income, no illegal payment of dividends out of capital, no illegal use of pools to raise prices of stock, the management of Banco can prove its innocence by showing the State its books and records. If there was fraud, the State, as the guardian of the rights of the investing public, is entitled to investigate. To begin with, Mr. Decker said Banco welcomed this investigation. Why has he changed his mind? Why has Banco changed its mind? Why this sudden discovery that the investigation may cause irreparable injury?

Within the last 4 weeks the cabinet of a great nation has fallen, and the streets of Paris have run red with blood in protest against frauds and losses of less magnitude than appear to lie concealed in the records of Banco. The people of this State are entitled to find out why and how. The commerce commission stands ready to continue this investigation. We have the utmost confidence that this court of equity will not stay its hands.

Respectfully submitted.

Attorneys for Defendants, 102 State Capitol, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution and the charges be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House made a special order granting to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] 1 hour in which to address the House on Monday morning. I have been advised that because of previous engagements it will be impossible for the Doctor to be here on Monday morning; and I now ask unanimous consent that the order be transferred to Tuesday, and that on Tuesday immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I merely desire to get some information from the majority leader. Today we have no business of importance, I presume, to take up. Would the majority leader bear with some of us while we make talks on subjects that we are interested in?

Mr. BYRNS. I shall be delighted to bear with the gentleman and also to listen to him, as I always am; but I may say to the gentleman that there are a couple of election contests which can be disposed of very quickly, and I hope the gentleman will not submit his request to address the House until those cases are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS IN THE NATIONAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks at this point on the question of subsistence homesteads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL RECOVERY PROGRAM—BACK TO THE LAND

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it is impossible for me, in the brief time permitted, to discuss more than one phase of the national-recovery program.

I will, therefore, confine myself to the discussion of that one in which all our States may cooperate.

This is the back-to-the-land movement.

At this point I wish to give proper credit for many of the facts and figures recited to a pamphlet called "Back to Earth", published by William Wallace Carey, of Los Angeles, Calif.

Between the years 1914 and 1930 more than 20,000,000 of our people migrated from rural America to the cities:

United States Census figures

1910 population in urban territory	42,166,120
1930 population in urban territory	68,954,823
	26,788,703

The movement of that many human beings in so short a time is probably without a parallel in history.

This great movement to urban centers started shortly after Europe went to war in 1914.

Orders for munitions and war supplies poured into the United States.

Our mines and factories speeded into action.

The need for labor in the cities was acute.

The price of labor was bid up.

Farm labor flocked to urban factories.

Farmers and their wives left their farms to enjoy the new high-priced market for their labor in the cities.

Tractors and improved farm machinery filled the void on the farm left by the trek of farm labor to the factories.

When the war was over, 4,000,000 young men were released from military service. Many of these came originally from rural districts, but few returned to the farms.

A building boom swept the country from coast to coast.

All this additional population crowded into the cities, required new homes.

That meant new subdivisions, extensions of streets and boulevards, the increase in public-service facilities, all requiring more and more city labor.

In the 10 years preceding the crash of 1929, the Nation spent a yearly average of almost $7,000,000,000 upon new construction work.

This building boom gave employment to millions who must today be rated as unemployed destitute and has left us with billions of dollars of frozen investments in empty, unprofitable buildings.

Following the war boom we had the automobile boom, the gasoline boom.

Gasoline was gold, and so started the stupendous petroleum boom.

Men flocked to the oil fields, many of them from farms, and were engaged in putting down wells, extending pipe lines, and building refineries.

The idea was widely accepted that as there was no limit to the market for automobiles there could be no limit to the demand for petroleum, for gasoline, and lubricants.

Development continued until there is now a potential production of finished products far in excess of the actual demand.

Then came the luxury boom. Salesmanship became a profession and the city and country workers mortgaged their future earnings to keep pace with their neighbors in the acquisition of luxuries.

Then came the greatest boom of all, the stock-market boom, the get-rich-quick craze, which swept the Nation and finally collapsed in 1929.

While all this was happening in the cities, farming had fallen upon evil days.

To meet the great wastage of the war, farming in this country had been pushed far beyond the bounds of normal consumption.

After the war, with no more wheat being sunk by submarines, with no more cotton being exploded in ammunition, with no more heavy orders for meat for combatant soldiers, a surplus began to pile up, and prices dropped.

Farmers turned to other crops than war staples.

They borrowed money and bought cows until butter and milk and cream followed beef and pork and wheat and corn downward to unprofitable price levels.

Then came the collapse; the disappearance of billions of dollars of supposed values. We had had a prosperity which was based upon an impermanent foundation, and that prosperity collapsed completely, utterly.

In the past 4 years the Nation has floundered, who can say that important progress has been made toward anything like general reemployment?

It is true that millions have been put to work on various public works, but this costly forced construction work is not a remedy; it is only a palliative, a temporary expedient.

Now we have all these people stranded in the cities—men, women, children—fellow Americans.

What have we done for them? What can we do for them?

This is the condition which confronts us: Millions of Americans who a few years ago considered themselves home owners and independent, now find themselves homeless and dependent upon public charity, living in cities where nature provides nothing but where every necessity of life—food, fuel, shelter, clothing—must be bought and paid for day by day with money.

Back in the boom days one of our most popular slogans was: "Own your own home", and 8,000,000 individual residences were built in the United States in those days to be sold to heads of families.

The owners now find themselves slaves to mortgages and taxes on property they can no longer afford to occupy.

Besides these homes, there stand in the cities which enjoyed great growth (and these are the cities in which there is the greatest unemployment), mile upon mile of apartment houses, flats, store and factory buildings which are unable to carry the fixed charges against them.

When we talk of reestablishing prosperity in the cities by renewing building operations, is it not time to ask who is going to finance the construction of more homes, office buildings, apartments, and so forth; who is going to live in them when they are completed; who is going to pay rent and taxes on them?

The lowest estimate that can be put upon the number of unemployed men in our cities today without the ability to pay rent and purchase food is 10,000,000.

Evidently something must be done to move these people from the urban centers back to the land from whence they came. The credit of the Nation cannot stand the load of providing a dole of approximately $4,000,000,000 annually to keep them in idleness, which would be the amount necessary to support these people at the minimum maintenance requirements.

Considered in family groups, the minimum estimate of maintenance per person is $12.50 per month. This estimate is described by the Red Cross as inadequate, and the estimate of that organization, varying in localities, runs about 50 percent higher.

While I am calling attention to the necessity of restoring national balance by returning millions of people from the cities to farm life, the subject of farm relief is paramount in all political discussions.

The question naturally arises if the farmers of the Nation are already in distress, why send more people back to the land to complicate further the problem of the farmer.

What this movement back to the land intends is a return to diversified, self-sustaining farming as distinguished from industrialized farming.

Such a return is also recommended for those already on the farms as a remedy for the conditions underlying their current distress.

The farmer must return again to the day when the farm was a place to live and bring up a family, not an industrial enterprise.

The farm should provide a comfortable living for the family that operates it.

It should provide a supply of food, clothing, fuel, and shelter, insofar as possible, from the land itself, and provide money for purchasing necessities and articles which the farm cannot produce, and to pay taxes from the sale of the relatively small surplus.

We must have fewer single-crop farms. The chances for financial success are too much against the single-crop farmer.

What he gets for his wheat is the Chicago quotation, minus the commission of the Chicago broker, minus the freight charge to Chicago, minus the local elevator man's profit, minus the cost of local handling and grading.

What he pays for the bacon he buys is the price for which the hog farmer sold the hog, plus the hog buyer's profit, plus the freight to the stockyards, plus yardage, plus the livestock broker's commission, plus the processing cost, plus the packer's profit, plus the freight to his local store, plus his local storekeeper's profit.

Mr. Speaker, there is, without question, acute distress among many farmers of the Middle West, and great efforts are being made to raise the prices in the United States of certain staples which have been greatly depressed in the world markets.

If, upon a 160-acre farm there was not one family—a renter or an owner with a staggering mortgage debt—but four families, each family owning its home, raising diversified crops, aiming at their own necessities, producing small but varied surpluses to sell for the cash with which to pay their cash expenses, the actual buying power of that quarter section of land for what American industry supplies would be a net amount greater than the buying power of the one family now which produces a few things, sells everything, and buys everything.

With such rural districts farm prices would be in better adjustment. It would not seem necessary to destroy growing crops.

The self-supporting farm is the objective of the back-to-the-land movement.

A small farm with a wood lot for fuel, a pasture for cows, an orchard with hives of bees, a dozen acres or so of plow land, and a garden for berries and annual vegetable crops.

There is always plenty on a farm such as this.

In winter a fat hog hangs in the smokehouse and from the cellar come jellies and jams and preserves, canned fruits, and dried vegetables. In the summer there is a succession of fresh fruits from the orchard and fresh vegetables from the garden.

There is always comfort on this farm.

The pure air, the deep silence of the night, the healthful outdoor work, all make for sound and restful sleep.

The house is tight against the wind and rain; wood fires keep it warm in winter, trees and vines shade it in summer. The furniture is not overstuffed, nor is it covered with tapestry, but it is made to be comfortable.

The living room is not without books, old friends and new. There are magazines and a weekly newspaper on the table.

This farm has neighbors, they stop, in passing, for a chat over the fence; they drop in evenings for longer visits. They are friendly and helpful neighbors, always ready to help in any hour of need, and when occasional farm tasks require a crew of men.

There is always time on this farm. Work begins early in the morning with cows to be milked and turned to pasture before breakfast, and there are still chores to be done after supper. But that does not mean continuous driving work from sun to sun. There is no hurry, no high pressure. Except for a few weeks in harvest time the farmer takes long "noonings." There is time to read. There is time to think. There is time to talk with neighbors as they pass along the road.

There is always employment on this farm. When there is not work with the stock or crops, there are fences to build, improvements and repairs around the house and yard, wood to be cut and brought up.

Our Nation's task is to use the human material now wasted in the cities and create a social class which has been largely abolished through the industrializing of the farm.

And the task for the States is to cooperate fully with the Nation.

To form such a farm unit anywhere in the United States, such as has been described; to provide buildings and equipment; to provide livestock and feed; to provide guidance and education, the actual cost in dollars and cents would be far less than it would cost to keep a family in an average American city for 3 years.

The Red Cross estimates the minimum cost of providing everything for a family of four at $600 per year.

The national plan contemplates organizing farming communities into industrial units so that in winter farmers may add to their cash incomes by working for wages in a central plant, put into operation to supply their need for clothes, furniture, tools, and so forth. That this is entirely practical is maintained by no less eminent an industrialist than Henry Ford, who is already planning to move industry from the city to the country.

The cooperation of the several States of the Union with the Federal Government can be taken for granted, because this is their problem as well as that of the Union.

Nearly all the States have insolvent land, or other State-owned land, upon their hands upon which they would welcome settlers.

The active cooperation of State agricultural colleges, each with a force of scientists especially versed in the crops and conditions of the State's area to provide guidance, may also be taken for granted.

The States, being closer to the problems of their own settlers, would naturally prefer arrangements by which the development and financing of each settlement would be left to the State in which the land is located.

Financing should be set up on a self-liquidating basis. These farms should not be a gift to the owners, but should be sold on a long-time partial-payment plan, in which the annual charge should not exceed $20 a month, or $240 a year.

Let us analyze the financial side. A farm consists of land, which has been cleared, plowed, prepared for cultivation; of improvements, which consist of materials and labor; of implements, seed and plants, and livestock—

Land	$1,000
Materials and labor	1,000
(This for the house, other buildings, fencing, etc. It is proposed to build farmhouses, not bungalows or villas.)
Implements and livestock	500
	2,500

The farm unit should consist of land from 5 to 40 acres, dependent upon its location and the character of the soil. A comfortable farmhouse with outbuildings and sheds, improvements, seed, and livestock, the total to cost approximately $2,500.

Unemployed men in the building trades should be organized into squads and put to work making the necessary improvements.

These units should be financed by the State and, where necessary, the State should be enabled to rediscount its financing with the Federal agencies.

Under a recent order of the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, a corporation was organized to be known as the "Federal Subsistence Homestead Corporation", chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware.

It will serve as a vehicle through which subsistence-homestead projects will be set up and administered under the National Recovery Act, which provided a fund of $25,000,000 as a revolving fund for initiating this program.

The Federal Subsistence Homestead Corporation has already allotted funds to over 20 subsistence-homestead projects.

These projects contain from 50 to 400 homestead units each, located in 15 different States, several in the bituminous-coal fields of West Virginia.

More than 2,000 separate applications for projects have already been made to this Corporation, and over $4,000,000,000 have been asked for by the authors of these projects.

The cooperation of every State in the Union is desired in connection with the establishment of these projects.

Corporations should be established under the laws of the State for each of these projects, whether the project contemplates 50 or 500 units.

The assistance and advice of the agricultural colleges of the States should be obtained in the examination and survey of the land to be acquired and in the subdivision of the land after acquisition.

The back-to-the-land movement is a necessary part of our national planning and a necessary part of the economic planning of every State in the Union. The cooperation of the authorities of our States in this great movement is most necessary to its success and to the solution of the problem of unemployment in every State.

In Oklahoma, the State which I have the honor to represent, we had last winter from 100,000 to 150,000 families on the Federal Emergency Relief Administration rolls, with a total of over 750,000 members receiving aid.

Many of those families would be glad of the opportunity to move onto a subsistence homestead farm.

In one county in my State over 5,000 families have already signed applications for subsistence homesteads, and made affidavits that their unemployment situation makes such a movement necessary and that they would engage to live upon them and pay for them over a period of 20 years.

Corporations could be organized in every one of our 77 counties immediately, to establish projects of from 500 to 5,000 units in each county.

Only leadership by our State authorities is needed to develop fully these projects.

It is such leadership and cooperation with our National Government in its back-to-the-land planning that I urge upon my State and all other States in the Union.

ELECTION CONTEST—CASEY v. TURPIN

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution in the matter of the election contest of John J. Casey v. C. Murray Turpin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 345

Resolved, That John J. Casey is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress from the Twelfth Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That C. Murray Turpin is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress from the Twelfth Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE VINSON BILL

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. On what subject?

Mr. BRITTEN. On a subject that is rather important and in which the gentleman is very much interested, the Vinson bill, and certain elements connected with it, the Navy bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, this morning while the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House was considering the aviation report, a British subject, in violation of the rules of the House and of the rules of the committee, attempted to talk to the committee and to the chairman with a view to influencing our judgment.

I think this is unpardonable. The gentleman's name—I have never seen him before—is Maj. Charles MacKenzie-Kennedy, a British subject, who says he is an expert on aviation. From authentic information received by two congressional committees this self-styled major is not an authority on aviation, but, on the contrary, is a man whose designs might be very dangerous to the best interests of aviation in the United States. Reports from England, as well as from this country, indicate quite clearly that MacKenzie-Kennedy is a man in whom no reliability or responsibility should be placed; and as far as I am concerned, I shall continue to object to his presence before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House.

This recalls to my mind the question of a British diplomat in the United States, a consul general at New York, who has been there for years. His name is Gerald Campbell. I am now calling upon the Secretary of State for his recall from the United States because of his personal opposition to legislation that was pending before the American Congress.

I will later refer to a number of instances in the past where foreign diplomats of our own as well as of other countries have been recalled when their usefulness, either to their own country or to the country to which they were sent, ceased.

Mr. Speaker, I waited until the Vinson bill had been signed by the President before calling to the attention of the House and to the Department of State, a letter from a New York friend together with a clipping from the New York Herald Tribune of Tuesday, February 20, 1934, which recounts the presence of several hundred men and women at the Town Hall Club, 123 West Forty-third Street, New York City, at a meeting of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, when a resolution was adopted opposing any further expenditures to increase the Navy. The Vinson bill was their target and among the speakers were the British Consul General Gerald Campbell and Miss Estelle Sternberger, executive director of the radical organization known as "World Peaceways."

To further the work of the Women's International League, another radical organization, $529.55 was collected from those present and the league immediately prepared for another meeting in Washington, D.C., to prevent the passage of the Vinson bill in the Senate and also to prevent its final approval by the President.

Organizations like the Women's International League, World Peaceways, National Council for the Prevention of War, American Civil Liberties Union, Foreign Policy Association and others, manage to keep within the law by not broadcasting the destruction of our Government, but they are always found on the borderline of socialism, bolshevism, and communism and while I would not take from any citizen the very broadest interpretation of free speech, I have always regarded these organizations as dangerous to the public welfare and inimical to a proper national defense.

When a foreign diplomat is granted the courtesies of our land, it is certainly expected that he will keep out of political entanglements within the borders of the United States and to do less than this, has in the past justified the immediate recall of a number of them.

Mr. Speaker, I will read into the RECORD an article from the New York Herald Tribune of Tuesday, February 20. February 20 was before the date of the passage of the Vinson Act as you will recall.

The article follows:

WOMEN FIGHT NAVY INCREASE—LEAGUE FOR PEACE OPPOSES FURTHER EXPENDITURES

Several hundred men and women gathered last night at the Town Hall Club, 123 West Forty-third Street, at a dinner meeting of the New York State branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, adopted a resolution opposing any further expenditures to increase the Navy. They also voted unanimously to endorse the resolution now in the Senate for an investigation into activities of the armaments, munitions, and shipbuilding industries.

Among the speakers were Heywood Broun, columnist for the New York World-Telegram; Gerald Campbell, British Consul General at New York, and Miss Dorothy Thompson, former newspaper correspondent in central Europe. To further its work the league obtained collections and pledges totaling $529.55 at the meeting.

I know that you gentlemen of the House will agree with me that the very broadest possible interpretation should always be placed upon the question of freedom of speech and freedom of the press for American subjects within the United States. We, of course, disagree in many directions with our constituencies and with other citizens of the country, and I have not the slightest objection to their difference of opinion with me on matters affecting the Navy, the national defense, the immigration, or what not, but I do object to a British Consul General making a speech opposing the Vinson bill and interfering with our proper national defense at a public meeting like this, and assisting in the collection of $529 in order to stifle legislation now pending before Congress. This kind of foreign propaganda must be stopped. It cannot be treated too roughly. It usually occurs at one of these so-called communistic or radical meetings.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DELANEY. As a matter of fact, it is not confined to these meetings. The gentleman knows from a report we received this morning in the Naval Affairs Committee that the commentators on the air of British origin are passing out this same sort of propaganda and that they have their agents in Washington working on the same problem.

Mr. BRITTEN. I know that was done in a national hookup before the Vinson bill was passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois knows that Great Britain is a good friend of the United States and we are their good friend. There are binding ties between us, notwithstanding certain men now in power have forgotten all gratitude, and are not now paying a debt of honor. Because some subject of whom the British Government knows nothing, Maj. Charles MacKenzie-Kennedy, attempts to talk to one of our committees, or because Gerald Campbell in New York attends some pink dinner or makes a speech, that does not have a thing to do with our action here in this Congress.

Mr. BRITTEN. It may.

Mr. BLANTON. Who would be influenced?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, there are many organizations that are influenced. The English Speaking Union, for instance, supposed to be composed of Americans wholly, is opposed to our adequate national defense and thoroughly pro-British.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us remember that the British Government is our friend and we are their friend.

Mr. BRITTEN. I hope they will indicate their friendship by paying their debts.

Mr. BLANTON. They have been paying them, and I believe they will pay them. They are being guided by unwise leaders just now, but eventually the thoroughly honest natural debt-paying instinct of the English will reassert itself. I believe they will be one of the governments that eventually will pay their debt to us in full. I have absolute confidence in the honesty and integrity of Great Britain.

Mr. BRITTEN. On yesterday morning the Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, occupying a position like our Secretary of the Treasury, took the floor and amid the glee of his audience he told them about the reduction of taxes, about the returning stability of the country and of the renewed prosperity of the country, and at the same time said, "We are not going to pay anything on our indebtedness to the United States."

Mr. BLANTON. That was a temporary aberration of one individual. That Chancellor of the Exchequer is not a true Englishman. Great Britain will repudiate him just as he attempts dishonestly to repudiate their just debt of honor due us.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am talking about a scene in the British Parliament.

Mr. BLANTON. Such a scene is unnatural there.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. May I ask if that glee was not shared by the Hearst newspapers?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; it was not. That would be very unnatural.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I judge so from their editorial this morning.

Mr. BRITTEN. It should not be shared by the Hearst newspapers or anyone else in the United States. We should be very seriously concerned about this refusal to pay us at a time when England is exuberant over a surplus of some $200,000,000 this year in their treasury.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I did not mean their refusal to pay. I refer to the glee of the Hearst newspapers which was over the fact that the Chancellor of the Exchequer over there announced a reduction in taxes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not think there is a more patriotic organization of newspapers in the United States than the Hearst papers.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that I think the height of demagoguery is reached by the Hearst papers when on the same editorial page they call on us to pay a billion dollars to bank depositors and then call everybody that wants to vote for taxes a demagogue. You cannot cut off all revenue and vote for every appropriation and come out even.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sure the gentleman will not condone the action of any foreign diplomat to this country when he interferes with legislation pending before this House.

Mr. BLANTON. But do not charge Great Britain with it. Let us just ignore those two fellows who could not influence anybody.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am talking about a foreign service representative of Great Britain. The gentleman from Texas persists in disregarding my position. He evidently does not wish to be enlightened.

Mr. Speaker, in the hope I may get 5 minutes' additional time to tell a story that is very apropos about an incident that occurred on the floor some years ago—

Our dear old friend Martin B. Madden was having quite a heated colloquy with Ben Johnson from Kentucky, an admirable man and a caustic debater. They were equally partisan.

They got into such a heated colloquy here that one would imagine they were going to strike each other and, finally, Mr. Johnson invited Mr. Madden outside, and Martin B. stood up—you all know he had a wooden leg—and he said: "I will say to the gentleman that in fisticuffs I have never been educated, but if the gentleman wishes I will match my wooden leg against his wooden head anytime." [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Admirable men and both bitter partisans, but gentlemen always.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. I agree with the gentleman. I do not object to partisanship on the floor every once in a while. I think it is a good thing.

One of the reasons I am objecting to the speech of this British diplomat is because of the place where it was made, more or less surrounded by radical propagandists.

Communism is finding its way into every channel of American life. Hardly a day passes but what some press association carries the announcement of a vote in some college or a condition at some university or some occurrence where men are assembled where the serpent of communism is grinding from beneath and from within where you cannot see it, with the view of destroying American institutions.

On April 1, just this month, there was a story carried by the Associated Press from San Pedro, Calif.:

ADMIRAL HEARS REDS TRY TO STIR SAILORS TO REBEL

SAN PEDRO, CALIF., April 1.—Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, chief of staff of the Battle Force, said tonight an investigation by naval officials of asserted efforts of communists to undermine the morale of the fleet had been ordered.

The investigation followed the arrest of four men on charges of illegally distributing a magazine entitled "Shipmate's Voice", which laid stress on an alleged mutiny in the British Atlantic fleet in 1931.

San Pedro police tonight arrested John C. Britton, 31, at a communist rendezvous and seized a large quantity of pamphlets, magazines, and books, all of which they said were seditious. One of the articles, the officers said, urged Hawaiian labor to organize against the oppression of Yankee imperialism and confiscate canneries, banks, plantations, and other commercial and industrial institutions.

This Associated Press story I just read is from the Chicago Tribune of April 2, and the following day the Universal Service, from Paris, to show you how closely these things are allied, quotes the famous communist newspaper L'Humanite from Paris, as follows:

Communist Party activities in the United States are bearing fruit.

Continuous maneuvers of the American Navy are accentuating the discontent among overworked sailors, who know they are being prepared for death in a Pacific war.

Communist literature is being distributed aboard American ships recalling the British Navy mutiny of 1931. Numerous communist sailors now have cells on the ships.

This proves that the fight against war and for antimilitary works is being carried out vigorously in the United States. It is an example to us.

There is a great danger in allowing an important man who represents a big country like Great Britain to express himself publicly in places like this against legislation that is pending before the American Congress. We do not do it in England, and they should not do it here.

The Chicago Tribune Press Service of March 30 prints a story that is most astounding. It refers to the colleges of the country, the big universities, where our best minds are supposed to be.

The news article says that inquiry among some of the larger universities and colleges of the country indicates that pacifism, socialism, and even communism is gaining considerable ground among the student corps and that the Ohio State University has recently expelled a group of students for refusing military instruction.

Mr. Speaker, at Harvard last week it was reported—at Harvard, the so-called "highbrow" university of America—that 229 students declared that they would refuse to bear arms in any war in which the United States might become involved; 515 stated that they would fight only in case of an attempted invasion by a foreign power.

In other words, they would not fight unless Mexico or Canada or some other country came over here and actually landed on American soil.

Mr. Speaker, 326 were willing to bear arms at any time on the call of Congress. It would appear from these figures that only one third of the Harvard students could be depended upon to show real patriotism in time of need and emergency. According to a statement of the National Council for the Prevention of War (an ultra-pacifist organization), a Nation-wide survey recently conducted by an intercollegiate pacifist organization showed that out of a total of 21,725 students voting, 8,415 took a definite and uncompromising stand against war and the conduct of arms, 7,221 asserted that they would fight only in case of invasion, while 6,889 were ready to bear arms whenever this country became involved in war. Again these figures indicate that but one third of the collegiate student corps can be depended upon in the event of an emergency. It is said that the Nation-wide poll included 65 institutions in 27 States.

I am now calling upon the Secretary of State to look into this meeting held last month and if a British diplomat assisted in the collection of funds to influence legislation pending in Congress, and he is listed in our Congressional Directory which you have before you as an important consul general—if he made a speech attempting to influence legislation and to destroy the American national defense he ought to be ordered out of this country before he is recalled.

That meeting was held for the sole purpose of defeating the Vinson Navy bill and if Consul General Campbell was present and addressed the audience at all, of course his recall should be instituted at once. Delay would but bring criticism upon our own Department of State. This would be too bad.

I am going to cite a few instances of recall in the past. It is not a new or an unusual thing to request the recall of a foreign representative.

Mr. Speaker, in April 1793, the newly appointed French Minister, Monsieur Edmond C. Genet, arrived at Charleston, and before proceeding to Philadelphia to present his credentials to President Washington, he began to fit out and commission privateers to prey on the commerce of Great Britain, in violation of the neutrality of the United States. When he was told that these irregularities should cease, he refused and expressed contempt for the opinion of the President, and questioned his authority. Governor Morris, the American representative in Paris, was instructed to ask for his recall which was immediately granted.

Mr. Speaker, in 1804, the Spanish Government asked for the recall of Charles Pinckney, the American Minister at Madrid. In a letter addressed to Cevallos, the Spanish Minister of State, he (Pinckney) threatened to inform American consuls of the critical state of the relations between the two countries, and direct them to notify American citizens to be ready to withdraw with their property. Our Government instructed Pinckney to come away on leave of absence.

Just see how unimportant this charge and yet he was recalled—

He was protecting American property in Spain and so he was requested to come home because his presence was distasteful to the Spanish Government.

In September 1804, the Marques de Casa Yrujo, Spanish Minister to the United States, proposed to the editor of an American newspaper to oppose certain measures and views of the Government, and advocate those of Spain. Our Government censored his action, as constituting a violation of an act of Congress known as the "Logan statute." He defended his conduct in a note, which he also caused to be published in the newspapers. On the ground of this attempt to tamper with the press, his recall was asked for, through the American Minister at Madrid. Yrujo had married a Pennsylvania lady and remained in the United States although he was substituted by a Chargé d'Affaires.

In October 1809 American Minister Pinkney at London was instructed to ask for the recall of Mr. F. J. Jackson, British Minister at Washington, because of an insinuating letter written by Jackson to the Secretary of State. Lord Wellesley, then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, maintained that Jackson did not appear to have committed any intentional offense against the United States Government, but he was recalled nevertheless.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I read last week in a local paper where our Ambassador to Germany made a speech in which he disagreed in effect with their theory of Nazi government, and the paper stated that it was well received.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not know to what the gentleman refers, but if our Ambassador to Germany made unpopular public statements contrary to the German Government as it now exists, he ought to be recalled.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. It was not exactly in that nature; he was addressing them on the conduct of government, and said that it was not his idea of government. Our Government raised no objection, neither has the German Government as far as anybody knows.

Mr. BRITTEN. The request for recall is usually by the country to which the Foreign Service officer is accredited.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman read a statement that a group of students had been expelled from the university for refusing to take up military training.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman know how many students there are in the University of Ohio?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

Mr. TRUAX. In the neighborhood of 14,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I wish the gentleman would allow me to proceed for a few moments.

Mr. BLANTON. I have to leave in a few moments to attend a conference on the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman doubtless remembers some years ago the Interparliamentary Union met in this Chamber.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And there were congressional representatives from all countries here on the floor. I want to ask him if he and every other red-blooded American citizen who attended that Congress was not proud of the British representation on the floor?

Mr. BRITTEN. What has that to do with the subject matter before the House?

Mr. BLANTON. They are our friends. The English are not bad. Our Government has not objected to anything this man Kennedy or this Consul Campbell has said. Leave it to our Government. When our Government objects, let us then raise the question.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I am a part of our Government, and I am objecting to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; the gentleman is not a part of this present Democratic Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. This present Democratic Government is run by——

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I know who it is run by.

Mr. BLANTON. The head and leader of this present Democratic Government is in the White House.

Mr. BRITTEN. We all know who runs it. Most of our important legislation is prepared in a little red house in Georgetown. That is where the college boys and even their superiors meet every night to discuss legislation and then prepare it for us.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it is run by an outstanding American down here in the White House, who has a friendly dependable Democratic Congress that backs him up in all of his economic plans for recovery.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; he takes a great part in it, but all his legislation is prepared for him by others.

Mr. BLANTON. And he does not need any suggestions from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me proceed now with my precedents. I have no quarrel with Great Britain excepting that Great Britain is occupying a rather unusual position today when she announces to the world that she has a surplus of $200,000,000 this year; when she announces that she is reducing personal taxes in that country; when she announces that her reemployment is going ahead in great strides; when she announces increases in the salaries of employees in Great Britain, and at the same time refuses in the same breath to acknowledge her debt to us, and indicates that she will not include a dime in her budget to pay interest she owes us coming due in June. Then I say that I have a quarrel with Great Britain, just as I would have one with Germany or Belgium or Italy or any other country that has the face to become gleeful over their prosperity and then refuses to pay their honorable debts.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, eventually, honest Great Britain will pay every cent she owes us, I predict.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman endorse her notes?

Mr. BLANTON. I will underwrite the honor of Great Britain.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the British debt interest will be paid in June of this year even if it has to be paid by the gentleman from Texas himself.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, let me get on with these precedents. I have only a few more.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Cannot the gentleman find some Frenchman who will underwrite the French debt? [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUAX. What method does the gentleman suggest of collecting these war debts?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not want to get into the question of the war debts.

Mr. TRUAX. But the gentleman has uttered criticism about it time and time again.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have on two occasions called upon the Secretary of the Treasury to go after France and England for an exchange of the papers which we hold. We now hold notes from Great Britain and France in billion-dollar denominations and under our funding agreement with France and England the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time call upon them for notes of smaller denominations which will compare with bonds outstanding against those nations which are on sale in every mart all over the world, and we could get these in $50, $100, $200, and $500 amounts, and with that paper, running into billions of dollars, we could back up our own finances the world over and be the strongest financial power on earth in every market in the world.

Mr. TRUAX. Has the gentleman offered such a measure in the House?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. It is not necessary to offer the measure. It is in the agreement between our Government and France and our Government and England, and all the Secretary of the Treasury has to do is to notify France that he takes advantage of that part of it and that he wants notes of the smaller denominations. The distinguished Secretary of the Treasury has never seen fit to answer my letter to him concerning this exchange of bonds, which was a personal letter—confidential—and which has never been given to the press. Now that the gentleman has more or less forced it out of me, Mr. Speaker, I will read the letter into the RECORD and I am sorry that it has become necessary to call to the attention of the House the discourtesy to which Secretary Morgenthau has treated my personal letter to him. I read:

PERSONAL

APRIL 2, 1934.

Hon. HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Treasury Department, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SECRETARY MORGENTHAU: I am enclosing herewith two pages from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—the first, January 22, page 1106, at which time I publicly called upon the Secretary of the Treasury to take advantage of the provision in the war debt funding acts by calling upon our debtor nations for an exchange of bonds of small denominations for those we now hold in connection with their so-called "war debts."

On March 23, page 5284, I again called the attention of the administration, and particularly the Democratic Members of the House, to take advantage of this apparent opportunity to improve our financial position with defaulting nations.

Will you be good enough to advise me if your predecessor or you have ever communicated with the debtor nations along the lines suggested and if so, what the results were?

I know that this matter has already been called to the attention of President Roosevelt, though not because of anything which I may have said in the past.

I will be glad to hear from you at your convenience, and with kind personal wishes, my dear Secretary Morgenthau, I am

Yours very cordially,

FRED A. BRITTEN,
Member of Congress.

Mr. TRUAX. Did the gentleman make a similar request of Andrew W. Mellon when he was Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not know that condition was in the treaty until I read it a short time ago.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman never knew it until this administration came into power?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not until a year after the present administration came into power.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is aware that I asked the House of Representatives to recall the British Ambassador a year ago, Sir Ronald Lindsay, because of his lobbying in connection with the reduction and nonpayment of the British debt.

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not recall that, but I am glad to have the information.

Mr. Speaker, in 1829 the United States Government had come to the conclusion that the prejudices entertained by a portion of the inhabitants of Mexico against our envoy, Mr. Poinsett, had greatly diminished his usefulness, and had decided to authorize his return home if it appeared to him expedient. But before instructions to this effect could be dispatched the Mexican Chargé d'Affaires presented a request for his recall, which was promptly granted, and a Chargé d'Affaires was appointed to Mexico in place of a minister.

Mr. Speaker, in 1846 Mr. Jewett, the United States Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, became involved in a dispute with the Peruvian Minister of Foreign Affairs, which in an exchange of letters was construed as a discourtesy to the Peruvian Foreign Minister, and Jewett's recall was requested. At that time the United States Secretary of State said:

If diplomatic agents render themselves so unacceptable as to produce a request for their recall from the government to which they are accredited, the instances must be rare indeed in which such a request ought not to be granted. To refuse it would be to defeat the very purpose for which they are sent abroad, that of cultivating friendly relations between independent nations. Perhaps no circumtances would justify a refusal unless the national honor were involved.

Jewett was recalled.

Mr. Speaker, in June 1871, Mr. Fish, the United States Secretary of State, instructed Mr. Curtin, American Minister at St. Petersburg, that the conduct of M. Catacazy, Russian Minister at Washington, both officially and personally, had for some time past been such as "materially to impair his usefulness to his own government and to render intercourse with him, for either business or social purposes, highly disagreeable"; that under these circumstances the President was of opinion that the interests of both countries would be promoted if the head of the Russian Legation were changed; after some little delay, this was done.

In February 1898, a translation of a private letter from Señor Enrique Dupuy de Lome, the Spanish Minister at Washington, to a Spanish journalist friend in Cuba, which had been abstracted from the mails at Habana, was published in a New York paper. The letter contained expressions concerning President McKinley which made it impossible for the Spanish Minister to remain longer in Washington. His recall was requested and accomplished.

While the recalling of a foreign diplomat is a very serious matter, it is not an unusual matter. When a Foreign Service officer goes out of his way to impede legislation, and particularly legislation of such high order, such high importance as our national defense, upon which the life of the Nation depends, I say that that man cannot reasonably stay in this country. His value to his own country is nil from now on; and his value to us, of course, is nil, because we do not want him here.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman now yield? Has he not now completed his precedents?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. To whom did the gentleman refer in his statement about the little red house in Georgetown?

Mr. BRITTEN. I referred to the little red house down in Georgetown occupied by Mr. Cohen, Mr. Corcoran, and Mr. Guthrie. Almost every night in the week men like Ferdinand Pecora, Frederick C. Howe, James McCauley Landis, and a number of others—not necessarily of the highest importance, not Cabinet officers, but the men who wrote the Fletcher-Rayburn bill—meet there. The men who rewrote the Fletcher-Rayburn bill are there frequently; the men who rewrote it the third time are constantly meeting there in serious consultation over the affairs of state. All important legislation is scrutinized and perfected to meet their radical ideals. The little red house in Georgetown is where are held the meetings which promote the communistic legislation we all talk about in the cloakrooms. It is the little red house in Georgetown where every night of the week from 10 to 18 young men of radical minds meet, so-called "young students"; they call them "Frankfurter's hot dogs."

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman prefer the little green house on K Street that owned and robbed the country for 12 years?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the little red house in Georgetown is going to stand out like the little green house on K Street stood out some years ago under a Republican administration.

Mr. TRUAX. The color of that house was green?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; it was as famous under President Harding as the little Georgetown house is bound to be under President Roosevelt.

Mr. Speaker, every night of the week Prof. Felix Frankfurter's hot dogs [laughter] meet there in this little red house; and they shape not all legislation, not all of certain pieces of legislation, but they shape the elements in the legislation that we refer to as radical or communistic; and the little red house is going to be made one of the historic show places of Washington. The birthplace of legislation that has shocked two continents.

Hundreds of thousands of personal letters and telegrams from every section of the United States to Members of the House and Senate protesting against the un-American provisions in the Fletcher-Rayburn bills for the control and regulation of securities exchanges has caused another complete breakdown in the Roosevelt administration forces, and these bills have been rewritten for the third time in order to appease the popular demand for Federal regulation of the stock exchanges without Federal control and strangulation of every industry in the United States whose securities may be on public sale.

Millions of investment-security holders in the United States expect the Government to enact further legislation for protective regulation and control of the stock exchanges under some form of commission which will understand the complicated intricacies and the inner workings of the stock markets and not by a political commission whose members have little or no first-hand knowledge concerning securities exchanges.

I hope that the administration forces will now agree upon a regulatory commission composed of representatives of the Federal Reserve System, the Department of Commerce, the Treasury Department, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Chicago Board of Trade and the New York Stock Exchange, with headquarters in Washington.

The bills now pending would authorize the Federal Government to regulate and control practically every large industry in the country, notwithstanding the direction of the Constitution of the United States to the contrary. As now drawn, they come very close to the Russian system of nationalizing all industry. It is but a short step to bolshevism.

Mr. Speaker, under the guise of stock-exchange regulation, the Federal Government could strangle any business with which it was not in complete sympathy, politically or otherwise. The Federal Trade Commission would become the most important department of the Government, and the daily value of the securities of practically every corporation in the United States would depend upon the whim of this Federal oligarchy.

The hundreds of thousands of letters and newspaper editorials which have deluged Members of Congress during the past 30 days have been the most constructive criticism of any legislation during my 22 years in Washington, and that is the reason for their success. Unless the Rayburn committee reports a reasonable bill to the House, it will be amended on the floor so as to meet the demand for legislation that will regulate the stock exchange and not destroy it completely.

In the Republican cloakroom of the House it is freely admitted that the Fletcher-Rayburn bills were written by Ferdinand Pecora; James McCauley Landis, Federal Trade Commissioner; Benjamin Victor Cohen, P.W.A.; and Thomas Corcoran, R.F.C.; all disciples of the Felix Frankfurter school of radical thought.

Mr. HENNEY. Is not the gentleman fearful that he is stealing Dr. Wirt's thunder?

Mr. BRITTEN. The name "Wirt" is pretty nearly like Wurtzberger. Wurtzberger and Frankfurter may go well together. We shall see.

ELECTION CONTEST, GORMLEY v. GOSS

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2, I call up a privileged resolution in the contested election case of Gormley v. Goss.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 346

Resolved, That Edward W. Goss was elected a Representative in the Seventy-third Congress from the Fifth Congressional District in the State of Connecticut and is entitled to a seat as such Representative.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, unless Members on the other side want a discussion of this case, I have no desire to use any time.

Mr. SNELL. Move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether there will be other business transacted this afternoon except speeches of gentlemen who desire to address the House?

Mr. BYRNS. There will be no further business to come before the House except requests to address the House. Inasmuch as we are in session we thought it would be a good thing to let those who wish to speak address the House for at least a reasonable time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has any program been determined upon for tomorrow or Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. There is nothing to come before the House tomorrow, that I know of. Monday will be District Day. Tuesday morning it is expected to take up the nationality bill, with which the gentleman is familiar.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. A while ago the gentleman from Tennessee secured permission for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] to address the House for an hour on Tuesday. The Dickstein bill was to have been brought up today, but for apparently good reason it was not brought up. For fear that it might come up sometime when my duties may call me from this Hall I wish to state that heretofore I have been one of the chief opponents of that bill. On several different occasions I have objected to and have made speeches with reference to the principle involved in this bill, and I have predicated my opposition upon the fact that the Secretary of State's office and the Secretary of Labor's office were opposed to the bill. I understand that they have receded from their position and that they are not in opposition to the bill at this time. I never had any personal opposition to it, but I felt that so long as the Department of State and the Department of Labor were opposed to it because of complications that might arise from its administration we should be slow to load these Departments with this unwelcome work. May the RECORD show that even if I am not here I, too, have withdrawn my opposition to it because of their withdrawal. So far as I am able to see I do not see any serious menace in this bill from the standpoint of letting in any additional immigration.

I have always opposed letting down the bars. If the Departments of State and Labor wish to have this bill enacted the responsibility is theirs.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is ready to follow the Democratic Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ANNUAL MEMORIAL SERVICES

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, the annual memorial services for deceased Members will be held on the 27th. I ask unanimous consent that such Members of the House as desire to contribute eulogies to the annual memorial book following the services may be allowed to extend their remarks without further application on their part. When the eulogies are ready may I request the Members of the individual States who have lost Members during the last year to see that the eulogies are handed to the official reporters in order that they may be promptly put in the book following the close of the services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. I stated a moment ago that there was no other business to be transacted this afternoon. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], who is chairman of the Elections Committee, informs me he is waiting for a report in the Chapman-Burnham case, and if that comes over he should like to call up the report. Further than that I know of no business that may come before the House.

LOSSES OF BANK DEPOSITORS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to discuss three proposals. One is the income-tax-publicity feature of the revenue bill. The other is the McLeod bill, and the third is the bill pending before the Banking and Currency Committee providing that after June 30 deposits in all banks will be insured up to $2,500 only and not for the full insurance provision, as now embodied in the law, which will be effective on June 30 if the law is not changed.

LITTLE RED HOUSE IN GEORGETOWN

First, I desire to refer briefly to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has just stated. He referred to a little red house over in Georgetown. His story sounds very much like another Dr. Wirt story. Just about as much to it. I presume that the gentleman was reminded of a little red house in Georgetown by his knowledge of what happened in a little green house on K Street during previous Republican administrations. It has been said, it is true, that this administration is tending toward helping the people too much, just the masses of the people, just the plain folks. The administration is even being accused of taking advice from people who are inclined toward socialism. Personally I much prefer that accusation being brought against the administration than having the charge made, as has been made during the 12 years preceding the present administration, that Wall Street and international bankers were absolutely controlling the administrations in power. That was a fact and was proven true in many instances. We all knew of the situation. Their activities were partly directed by a little group in the little green house on K Street. I do not know how many red houses may be found in Georgetown, but I do not believe they will find a clique, clan, or organization that is dictating the policies of the present President of the United States. Disclaiming the right to speak for the President, as I do not have the right to speak for him, I can give you my views.

NO "BRAIN TRUST" CONTROLLING PRESIDENT

There is no "brain trust" controlling the President of the United States. It is true that he seeks the advice and counsel of well-informed men in this Nation, which he should do, and after he gets their advice and counsel and the benefit of the information they have, he makes up his own mind. He goes against some of them every time he makes a decision. There is no "brain trust" that I know anything about, or that anyone else coming in contact with the administration has told me anything about, and which is controlling and dictating the policies of the present President of the United States. One thing is sure, no President has done more for the poor, the wage earners, the low-salaried people, and the farmers. He has upon more than one occasion taken the side of the plain people and hit Wall Street and international bankers squarely between the eyes. His policies have saved the homes of millions of people; refinanced, scaled down, and reduced the interest rates on home and farm mortgages; have given jobs to millions, fed and clothed the destitute, helpless, and unfortunate. He continues to go straight down the middle of the road for the people. He has reestablished and is putting into effect the old slogan of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." No other President has made a greater effort to carry out the intention of the framers of the Constitution than President Roosevelt. Our President's policies are in the interest of the people who produce the Nation's wealth, and I am glad he is not following the advice of the gang that has robbed and plundered this country.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

"BRAIN TRUST" BETTER THAN "BRAINLESS TRUST"

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Is it not a fact that whatever "brain trust" there is at the present time succeeds the "brainless trust" existing previously?

Mr. PATMAN. That is very true. Whatever "brain trust" the President has, as the gentleman suggests, succeeds the "brainless trust" heretofore existing.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

ADVICE OF HONEST REPUBLICANS WILL BE CONSIDERED

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the President is willing to take advice from any and every honest Republican whenever he can find one if they have the interests of the people at heart?

Mr. PATMAN. I am sure that is true. I have no right to speak for the President, but if he can find a Republican, as the gentleman says, who is honest and has the interests of the people at heart, I am sure the President of the United States will be very glad indeed to listen to him.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the gentleman believe that the people would feel better if he would take the advice of such men as Owen D. Young, Carter Glass, Newton Baker, Charles M. Schwab, and men of that caliber?

Mr. PATMAN. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. ALLEN. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. PATMAN. I think he has a right to select his own advisers and to take such advice as he desires to take and to exclude that which he does not desire to take. I understand that is what he does.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the gentleman feel that the people of the country as a whole would feel better if he would take advice from men of that type?

Mr. PATMAN. The people as a whole will be pleased with what the President does. It was just such policies as some of those men advocate that caused us to be in the condition we are in today.

Mr. ALLEN. Advice of men like Carter Glass and Owen D. Young.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not going to get into personalities, but I do not agree with the policies of all of the men that the gentleman has named; however, I am not going to get into personalities.

The people are now getting an honest deal along with the new deal. The little red house story is all imagination; it has been created in the fertile mind of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. He and others who desire to destroy a President who does not agree with them politically are compelled to seek something else to talk about, since their Wirt bubble has blown up.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois would want to include, I am sure, Andrew W. Mellon in his list.

MELLON'S FLIGHT TO ENGLAND

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. It was due to policies of such men as Andrew W. Mellon that caused the people of this country, the farmers and wage earners to be crushed. If Mellon had not fled under fire to England in order to get away from this country when his unlawful activities and criminal acts were being exposed, much crookedness and corruption would have been exposed a long time before it was. The Republican Party shielded and protected him. The leaders of that party assisted in getting him out of the country between suns. They denied me the right to turn on more light in the impeachment trial.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the gentleman feel the fact that those men are college professors sort of disqualifies them from offering suggestions?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think that enters into the matter. I know some mighty good college professors.

Mr. ALLEN. If they had taught school for a few months, that would qualify them.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think the question of their being college professors or not enters into the suitation, except insofar as it may qualify them for the positions they hold. If I were compelled to take the advice of college professors or bankers, including Mellon, Morgan, Mills, Myers, Wiggin, and others, I should prefer the professors'. They are not accused of trying to promote their own interests. We know the other group that had charge of the country prior to 1933 did promote their own interest to the detriment of the general welfare. No one accuses the professors of being selfish or greedy, and I think the President has gotten much better advice and information from them than he would have gotten from those representing the school of thought that brought this country to the brink of ruin and revolution. The principal objection that is being urged against President Roosevelt is that he has taken the Government out of the control of a few greedy bankers. I do not consider his action in this regard objectionable but highly commendable. As between unselfish professors and greedy bankers I am 100 percent for the professors.

M'LEOD BILL

Now, with reference to the banking situation and the McLeod bill in particular, there is some agitation in this country, a great deal of agitation, for our Nation's credit to be used in a more helpful way for the benefit of all the people. This can be done. A few of the larger banks of the country have used the credit of this Nation to very great advantage.

BANK PAYING 200-PERCENT DIVIDEND ANNUALLY

I do not know whether the gentleman is from Pittsburgh, Pa., or not, but there is a bank in Pittsburgh that is owned by Mr. Mellon that has been paying 200-percent dividends a year for many, many years, and in addition to this paying the president of the institution $175,000 a year on a capitalization of $1,500,000. Why? Because they were able to use the credit of this Nation free.

BLANKET MORTGAGE

Now, what is the credit of this Nation? Every bill—currency—that is issued represents a blanket mortgage upon all the property of all the people of this country and upon all the incomes of all the people of this country, and the people who are privileged to use this great credit and use it free of charge, not paying anything for it, have a great advantage over the other people.

The people of this country are beginning to find this out, and they object to it. They want some kind of change made, hence all these different proposals that are made for all the people to use a part of the Nation's credit.

IDIOTIC MONEY SYSTEM

Another thing that brings this about is that bonds are issued, tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds, by our Government and sold to certain banking institutions. Sixty percent of these bonds that are issued by the Government, I understand, are owned by the banks now. These bonds are issued and sold to the banks, the banks merely giving credit on their books for the bonds. They turn right around and put the same bonds up with the same Government that sold the bonds to them and get new money issued in return for these bonds, using these bonds as collateral security for the issuance of money, and at the same time they use this money they get interest on the bonds that are deposited; in other words, money issued on the Government debts. What the people cannot understand is why not issue the money direct and leave out the tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds. They cannot understand why we must give certain bankers a bonus or subsidy for the use of our own Government's credit.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. I noticed in the statement yesterday that I received from the Treasury Department, where the Treasury and the Reserve banks have seven and a half billion dollars or more of gold in the Treasury. With the 40-percent gold reserve we have had all the time under the gold standard we could issue now something like $10,000,000,000 in money. Would not the gentleman think that instead of selling interest-bearing bonds, the proper thing to do would be to issue the currency and meet the demands of the Nation without selling bonds?

FIFTEEN BILLION DOLLARS COULD BE ISSUED NOW ON GOLD SUPPLY

Mr. PATMAN. Since the revaluation of the gold dollar we have sufficient gold in the Treasury that belongs to the Federal Reserve bank and to the Treasury, jointly, that can be used as a 40-percent gold base for the issuance of an additional $15,000,000,000 at this time. This should satisfy the most reactionary gold advocates and most reactionary advocates of a metallic base for the issuance of money. This will not satisfy the gold advocates. It is not gold they are so much interested in; it is keeping the amount of money down to the minimum. With little money and much credit they can control the monetary situation. They cannot control if too much money is used to take the place of credit.

So the point is, Why should we pay interest on bonds to get money when we have a sufficient base to issue that money?

VOLUME AND VELOCITY OF MONEY

In this country in the last 2 or 3 years, or since 1929, there has been a deflation. Remember, our circulating medium is not only just money of about $5,000,000,000 or $5,500,000,000, but it is represented by what some prefer to call deposit currency, which is deposits in banks of the country, which are used daily by the issuance of checks. They enter into our circulating medium and serve the same function as money, and about 90 percent of our business formerly was done through the use of checks. Therefore, if you will take the figures for 1929 and add up the amount of deposits in banks that is used as currency and then you add to that the actual money in circulation, you will find that we had about $60,000,000,000, and that this $60,000,000,000 was turning over 22 times a year, and representing business transactions aggregating $1,300,000,000,000 a year. You can ascertain for yourself how much business it was doing. Every dollar was doing $22 worth of business a year. Now we have almost $20,000,000,000 less than that and it is turning over only 11 times a year, and doing less than $500,000,000,000 of business. Therefore, there has been a deflation in the actual use of money now as compared to 1929, of more than $800,000,000,000. It is not just the volume of money, it is the velocity as well, and you must have some way of getting this money and credit to turning over.

BILLION-DOLLAR FRANCHISE

We must make up for this great deflation in some way, the banks are not letting the people have money. Industry wants to borrow money, but it cannot borrow the money. Somehow or other they do not have the security to offer that the banks will accept, and as pointed out by my good friend, JEFF BUSBY, of Mississippi, many times, the banks of this country are not even under an obligation to furnish the people a sufficient circulating medium. They are not obligated to do this, although they have been given this great privilege, the greatest privilege on earth, a franchise that is worth billions and billions of dollars, but when we gave them this privilege we did not even obligate them to furnish this country sufficient circulating medium.

It has been farmed out to private individuals, this great privilege, which under the Constitution belongs to Congress. We turn it over to private corporations for their own benefit without any obligation to furnish the people with a circulation medium.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD TAKE OVER FEDERAL RESERVE

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman think in this period of deflation that we might extend that privilege to the Federal Reserve by setting up a new agency of the Government an institution that might take over the bonds?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; but I think the Government should take over the Federal Reserve first. There is no reason why the Federal Reserve banks, which are owned by private corporations, should be allowed to have the privilege of issuing currency in this Nation free of charge.

Mr. KENNEY. I wanted to ask the gentleman if it is necessary to do that?

Mr. PATMAN. I think the Government should take over the Federal Reserve, which is being used by private corporations.

DEPOSITORS' BILL

Now, when I first saw the McLeod bill and heard that it was an expansion measure, I thought I would give it a good deal of consideration. But I am not willing to endorse a bill simply because I believe it is an expansion measure. The McLeod bill is based on the assumption that the monetary system was wrong, and because it was wrong, wrong instructions were given to the bank examiners, and they gave these instructions to the officials of the banks, and those banks by reason of these instructions had to close their doors and the depositors lost money. Therefore the Government monetary policy is wrong, and we should make good those losses.

WHY STOP AT 1930; WHY NOT 1920?

If it could be shown that by reason of the negligence of an official of this Government a depositor lost his money, I would be willing to pay; but just to pay them on the general theory that the policies that were in effect at that time were wrong is going rather far; in fact, too far. Further, why say that you will pay depositors back to 1930? There is no argument for that that would not equally apply to depositors back in 1920.

WRONG MONETARY POLICY COMMENCED IN 1920

This wrong monetary policy commenced in 1920, when the other body passed a resolution calling upon the Federal Reserve Board to deflate the currency. The Federal Reserve Board ordered deflation policies to go into effect, and caused the price of cotton to go down from 40 cents a pound in May 1920, when the resolution was passed, to 7 cents, 4 months later, and wheat to go down from more than $3 a bushel to $1.40. Why should we not go back to the time this deflation started, that has caused all these banks to break? Why go back only to 1930?

CAN ANYONE BE FOUND WHO RELIED UPON WHAT MR. HOOVER SAID?

Some of our friends suggest that Mr. Hoover made some speeches and in those speeches he asked the people to bring their money back to the banks and not to hoard their funds, but to put their funds in the banks and let the money go again into channels of trade and production. They say that the people heeded that call and put their money back into the banks, and that the banks were closed and that they lost their money. It is possibly true that in some rare instances people did put their money back into the banks, but my best recollection is that when Mr. Hoover made those speeches they drew the money out rather than put the money back in. I do not think that you will find where the deposits increased by reason of any speeches made by Mr. Hoover against the hoarding of money.

In other words, the money went the other way. You will find where the postal-savings deposits increased, and increased tremendously, along about that time, but the deposits in banks did not increase by reason of any speeches made by Mr. Hoover; and if anybody should come to the American Congress and say that they listened to Mr. Hoover's speech and believed what he said was true, and, acting and relying upon that promise and believing it was true and that they intended to help the country they put their money back into the banks and lost it for that reason, then I would be willing to pay them; but I do not think you will find many like that.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

COST OF M'LEOD BILL

Mr. PIERCE. What will the McLeod bill cost us?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know what it will cost. I would not object to the cost if the principle were good. I should like to see two or three billion dollars or more than that put out in actual money. If it should cost even $5,000,000,000, and the principle were good, I would be for it. but it is not sustained by logic and reason. You cannot say that you are going to pay depositors of national banks because the monetary policy of our country is wrong, and not pay the depositors of State banks and of private banks, of Federal land banks, of building-and-loan associations, and joint-stock land banks, or the stockholders of the closed banks. If the Government is liable to the depositors, is it not also liable to the stockholders of the banking institutions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BEAM). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BANKHED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I should like to have 10 minutes after that.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I want to obtain a little time, although I do not want to interfere with these valuable discussions.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I should like to ask unanimous consent for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for 15 minutes?

There was no objection.

CAN GOVERNMENT PAY ALL LOSSES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the joint-stock land banks have been under Government supervision and the Federal land banks have been under Government supervision; and if you are going to pay everybody who lost money by reason of some concern that was under governmental supervision, directly or indirectly, it will soon lead you to pay for all of the losses of the American people—and who is going to do it? Mr. Insull will probably be happy to know that the Government is considering the adoption of such a policy. If you are going to pay all those concerns that I have mentioned, then it will be said that the monetary policy caused the stock-exchange collapse in 1929, and their theory will be supported by as much logic and reason; and if the monetary policy of this Government caused the banks to close down on the people who were borrowing money from them, and the brokers' loans went from billions and billions of dollars down to just a very small sum in a short time and caused the collapse of the stock market, do not you think that one who owns stock could say that the Government's monetary policy caused this and, therefore, the Government should pay him his losses? They would have the same reason to support their contention as you have in the McLeod bill.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman does not mean to put the depositors in banks in the same category as these persons who speculated in the stock market?

DID HOOVER'S SPEECHES CAUSE DEPOSITORS TO LEAVE MONEY IN BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. No, I do not, but I am talking about the principle. The depositors in banks, they claim, could have gotten their money out, and when Mr. Hoover made these speeches, although they did not bring any money back, yet some of them would have taken their money out if Mr. Hoover had not made those speeches. Let us analyze that statement. Let us see how much truth there is in that and how much reason there is to support it. In this country when Mr. Hoover made those speeches we had more than $45,000,000,000 in deposits in the banks of the Nation. Suppose those depositors had wanted their money and had gone to their respective banks and called on the bankers for that money, could they have gotten it? No; they could not. The banks would have been closed instantly. The banks had only $700,000,000 in the vaults of all of the banks of the country with which to pay that $45,000,000,000. They had less than $2 for every $100 that the banks owed the depositors of this country, so how can they claim, with any logic and reason to support their arguments, they would have drawn their money out had they not been led to believe by Mr. Hoover that it was against their interest and the country's interest to do so?

In other words, they could not have done something that was absolutely impossible for them to do under any circumstances. The banks did not have the money to pay the depositors, therefore they could not have drawn their deposit money out of the banks.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. If we proceed to pay off these people who lost their money in the banks, the next thing will be to pay off the people who bought Cities Service to the extent of $1,100,000,000, to pay off the people who bought Insull stock; and the Government never would get through paying off these people who have been defrauded and robbed during 12 years of the Republican regime.

BAD PRECEDENT

Mr. PATMAN. The same theory and the same principle that supports that argument will support the liquidation by the Government of practically all the debts which are owed by the American people; and who is going to do it? I should like to see these people get their money; I should like to see these banks open. We need banks, they are very necessary and highly essential institutions. I should like to see their doors open again; but if you are going to distribute money because people need money, there is a better way of doing it than by paying off the depositors of the banks.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Would not a good way to open these banks be to have the Government take their preferred stock as is being done by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and open these institutions, having the depositors waive a certain percentage of their deposits, making the balance available to them?

FAVOR HELPING THE BANKS OPEN

Mr. PATMAN. It would be well to do this: Let the Government appraise the assets of every closed bank and be liberal and generous in the appraisals. Then let the Government take over those assets dollar for dollar and put up that money for preferred stock or new capital in order to reopen the banking institutions. Then do not let the depositors come there and collect 100 cents on the dollar, 25 cents on the dollar, or any other amount on the dollar, except when the bank can safely pay the depositors but let that bank continue to function and collect its obligations, and as it does that to pay off their depositors. To handle the situation in this way would be doing the depositors a favor and would not result in any great loss to the Government of the United States.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Practically that very thing is being done today in the West—in Oregon at least.

Mr. PATMAN. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has a right to do that.

Mr. PIERCE. That has been done in hundreds of cases.

UNLIMITED APPROPRIATION TO UNKNOWN SOURCE

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman realizes that we should not issue blanket authority to take one or more billions of dollars from the country's Treasury to pay off depositors in closed banks.

In the past when we have had under consideration an appropriation bill for public works, it has always been the custom to allot the money so we would know exactly how it was going to be spent. That is one of the best ways on earth to expend public funds. It would be a very unreasonable thing for us to authorize the issuance of $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 just to pay the depositors in closed banks.

What are you going to say to your constituents when they ask you what banks the money went to? All you can say is: "I do not know; we are just paying them off." Some banks' assets are worth 90 cents on the dollar; some banks' assets are worth 5 cents on the dollar; some banks' assets are absolutely worthless where the officials of the bank had stolen the money, confessed, and been sent to the penitentiary for their crime. Under this plan we would be paying them off and when they got out of the penitentiary they would even get their own deposits paid by the Government of the United States. There is no logic or reason to support any such argument as that. There is no logic to back up the argument that is made that the Government of the United States should stand those losses back to 1930. We should reappraise those assets and further help them out as the R.F.C. is doing. The McLeod bill would cause more tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds to be issued to pay these losses.

FARMERS LOST $20,000,000,000 BY DEFLATION

If you insist on paying losses now, do not stop at 1930; go back to 1920, when this thing started. We have lost 10,000 banks since 1920. It is not right to pay them off for the period back in 1930; go back and pay them off back to 1929, 1928, 1925, 1922, or 1921; go back to the time this thing started; in 1920.

And remember that the farmers came in for a loss. The value of their property prior to this deflation was $77,000,000,000. Immediately after the deflation it was only $57,000,000,000. The farmers have lost their lands; the farmers have lost their homes; and if you are going to pay losses, do not forget to pay them, because the monetary policy which caused losses to the banks is the policy which caused losses to the farmers.

Do not forget the cotton farmer who had on hand cotton worth 40 cents a pound, which, by reason of this monetary policy which caused losses to depositors in banks, depreciated in value to 5 cents a pound. Other producers will have similar claims.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Why stop at 1920? Why not go back to 1900, to 1890, to 1885? Once you start this policy of paying losses is there any logical place to stop?

Mr. PATMAN. You will find that from 1913, from the time President Wilson came in until he went out, there were very few banks closed.

You will find for the 10 years after that that more than 10,000 banking institutions in this country closed.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Banks closed in 1890 and 1885. We have claims of various kinds coming here all the time from away back there.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman may contend that we should should go back to 1800 or 1789. If the McLeod bill passes it will be a precedent for bills aggregating inconceivable amounts to pay losses.

INSURANCE CLAIMS

Mr. BLANTON. Why not pay all the insurance debt claims which in the last 10 years people have been forced to settle for as low as 5 cents on the dollar if we are going to start in to pay losses? Many of them have been settled on that basis. Our people have lost millions and millions of dollars on claims settled on that basis.

Mr. PATMAN. They claim it is this monetary policy that caused that condition to arise. They claim that their banking institutions went broke, which broke them, therefore they are broke and cannot pay the people who have claims against the insurance companies. So if you are going to pay the depositors, why not pay the policyholders that have just as good claims? Whenever you pay people on a broad principle through just a blanket appropriation bill, just to pay somebody, it is not very good judgment, as I view the matter. You should know where the money is going, to whom and why, before paying out funds of the United States Government.

The claim is made that by reason of the contraction and deflation of credit and currency, banks were destroyed and the banks being destroyed, the investors were destroyed. If you pay one, pay all of them.

WILL TAKE $200,000,000,000 TO PAY ALL LOSSES

Mr. ARNOLD. Applying the principles of the McLeod bill in other lines, has the gentleman any idea, or can he give us any information as to the probable amount of money it would take in order to pay off all of these losses that have been suffered?

Mr. PATMAN. I would estimate roughly a couple of hundred billion dollars. That is a rough estimate. That includes all the farmers' losses, the losses on the stock exchange, and the national banks, State banks, private banks, building-and-loan companies, Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, and all other losses of the people. I presume the aggregate would be at least $200,000,000,000. The national wealth, of course, is not as large as it used to be.

Mr. HASTINGS. What argument is advanced in support of the date, January 1, 1931, as indicated in the bill?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know. If anyone knows why that date is in there, I wish they would tell us. Mr. McLEOD, the author of the bill, is here, and I will yield to the gentleman to tell us why the date, January 1, 1931, was put in there.

Mr. McLEOD. I did not put the date in there.

Mr. PATMAN. What date is the gentleman in favor of?

Mr. McLEOD. My theory is all banks in receivership today.

Mr. PATMAN. What about the closed banks that are not in receivership? Why discriminate against them? They have the same kind of claims. They lost their money in the same way by reason of the same kind of policy's being put into effect by our Government.

Mr. McLEOD. I am just answering the gentleman's question. I thought the question was what did we provide? I said we provided for banks in receivership today. I understand there will be amendments offered suggesting a date.

Mr. PATMAN. There is one thing you cannot escape. If we are going to pay these losses on the theory claimed here, we cannot start in 1930. We will have to go back at least to 1920. We would be discriminating against depositors in other banks if we did not do that. We could not confine it just to national banks. We would have to include all these other financial institutions. I am informed that many of them were under the same kind of governmental supervision that the national banks were. Of course, when you do that you might just as well not consider the matter further.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman always wants to be fair. The McLeod bill only applies to national banks now in active receivership. I understand that under the figures that have been given only about $1,800,000,000 would be required.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not object to the $1,800,000,000. I should like to put twice that much money in circulation in the country, but I am not going to ask to put it out on any such theory as that, and I am not in favor of issuing tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds in order to get the money. If you want to distribute money, there are better ways of distributing it than paying it to these depositors.

THE M'LEOD BILL

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, relative to the McLeod bill, I was one of the Members who signed the petition to bring the McLeod measure out on the floor and to discharge the committee. The reason for my doing so was that I felt a great many people would be benefited by this particular piece of legislation.

However, upon going into the McLeod bill and analyzing it throughout, I find it takes care of only those who were fortunate enough to deposit their money in national banks or banks of the Federal Reserve System and it does not take care of those institutions which were State controlled or privately owned.

Since the McLeod bill was introduced another measure has been designed and introduced by Representative BROWN of Michigan. This bill is known as the "Brown pay-off bill." Each measure is of tremendous interest to my people and myself; however, I am more interested in the Brown bill because of its more far-reaching scope to include all banks. Without the least bit of reflection on the worthy purpose of the McLeod measure, I feel that from the standpoint of service to the people the Brown bill is the most honest, and fairest and most equitable measure introduced thus far; a bill which should receive the support of every Member of this Congress.

I am for the Brown bill because it is designed to give relief to depositors of State and private banks and trust companies; whereas, the McLeod bill points only to national and Federal Reserve banks. In my district there were five State banks to every national or Federal Reserve institution. It is obvious, therefore, that to give relief to the majority of the people, depositors of State banks and trust companies must be included.

I do not represent a rich district; my people know the penalty of toil; they know the drudgery of long hours and small pay, and they know what it is to sacrifice in order to save for a rainy day. People of the great Calumet district are thrifty and all indications of their thrift could be seen in the millions upon millions of dollars that were put into saving deposits in the fifty-odd banking institutions prior to the depression.

But one day the depression struck and the people of my district felt, among the first, the full force of the depression; banks crashed on all sides, and men and women, old and young, found themselves penniless. They were not to blame, but were the innocent victims of laxity in government. That created a state, I am sorry to say, which has been endured by my people and your people for the last 4 years. Nothing has been done about this until this Congress, under the great leadership of our admirable President, has shown the way.

While I signed the petition asking for a vote on the McLeod measure, I sincerely feel the Brown bill is a measure designed for all the people of this Nation. And I can assure you that my people back home feel the same way as is attested by the hundreds of letters which I have received regarding it.

Supporters of the McLeod measure have advanced the theory the Government is responsible for losses by depositors. I feel that this theory is wrong. The directors and stockholders alone are responsible. There can be no question about it.

I do not think the McLeod bill goes far enough, because it only provides for a pay-off of depositors of Federal Reserve banks. It does not give any consideration to the thousands of depositors of State banks and trust companies and private institutions which abounded in my district and every district in the United States. The McLeod bill would pay off the big depositors who had large deposits in Federal Reserve banks and would completely ignore the little fellow—the depositor who today is feeling the pangs of starvation and want and cannot buy the necessities of life or the medicine for his baby because his savings are tied up in banks whose doors may be locked forever.

On the other hand, the Brown bill provides that all deposits up to $2,500 be paid in full in cash. It also provides the banks may borrow up to 85 percent of the present value of the remaining assets from the R.F.C. and pay it to the remaining depositors. Because the Brown bill comes within the liberal, progressive policy of the Roosevelt administration, I feel that we can support it whole-heartedly and unqualifiedly, as it is a bill which will render the maximum amount of relief to the greatest number of people everywhere who were prudent enough to trust banks but who are now suffering misery and misfortune everywhere.

Also, the Brown measure will cost only about one third to one half as much to administer as will the other bill; yet, at the same time, the Brown bill will pay off in full 96½ percent of the depositors in all the banks; that is, national and Federal Reserve banks, the State and private banks. It will bring relief which will be a Godsend to the majority of the people because it will pay off in full 19 out of every 20 depositors. This is true because of the fact that 96½ percent of the depositors have only 23 percent of all the money on deposit and 3½ percent of the depositors have 77 percent of the total deposits. Summing it all up, 3½ percent of the large depositors have over three fourths of all the money that was on deposit in all the banks.

I feel that now is the time to show the courage and resolution to crack the ice—to break with the past—and adopt this bill for the general welfare, not only of my people but for all people under this Government; for, obviously enough, people everywhere must have suffered some loss through bank closings.

This willingness on the part of our Government to help our people in this way is certainly above the anarchy and chaos of undisciplined individuals' interest. The prompt, vigorous, and intelligent administering of this measure will go farther towards helping the debtor, the creditor, the farmer, and worker and management than anything else at present. It will inspire people to save again; it will give our people a newer and higher confidence in mankind and our Government and it will certainly tend to make business relations and credit relations bigger and broader between our people.

There is no reason to fear that legislation of this kind will not have far-reaching beneficial effects. The new deal administration has enacted many changes in Government which have served as a great credit to our people; for example, cognizance has been taken of the ironical spectacle of the depression—which presented the paradox of surplus crops and industrial output and of bulging warehouses coexisting with an appalling ratio of unemployment and idle plant capacity. The new deal has made a real effort to solve the stupid enigma of human suffering amidst plenty.

The new deal has done much for our people. No one can say that the magnanimous leadership of our great President is not recognized everywhere. But there still is work to be done, and I feel that a great deal of this work lies in some solution to help the poor souls who lost their all in bank failures. And I do not mean the bank failures of the thirties, but the failures that occurred back in the twenties. These people who lost their money through no fault of their own should be given some consideration.

The reason I am so interested in this bill is that I feel that it will place the money in the hands of the people who most need it, the people who have suffered and been deprived of the necessities of life throughout this terrific depression. If this bill becomes a law, those people will be able to save their homes, pay their taxes again, now long past due, and will feel the spirit of renewed confidence in their Government.

Knowing the hardship of my people, knowing what they have gone through to save this money, knowing the self-denial of fathers and mothers knowing how they passed up the good things in life because they were saving for a rainy day—and I mean, in a great many instances, denied themselves the necessities of life, so that they would have this money in their declining years—only to have it wiped away during this terrific depression, I cannot but sympathize with them now and hope for some bank pay-off relief.

Many a father and mother, who had thought themselves safe from a dark and dreary future during 1927, 1928, and 1929, found in 1930 that they were on the road to the poorhouse; not through any fault of theirs but through the mismanagement and mishandling of funds by the banking institutions. They found it impossible to go to their children because their children too were without jobs and had lost their money also in closed institutions.

There is no question but that it is a sad picture I have painted here this afternoon, but if there ever was a time when the working people of the United States should unite, this is the time to see that justice is done.

Once and for all, get behind our great leader and help him in the program he has enacted so that we may all once again enjoy prosperity.

JUSTICE DEMANDS THAT CONGRESS ENACT OLD-AGE SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this Congress has already accomplished many needed reforms in the way of remedying social injustices, but much more remains to be done. We have traveled a long way from the path of rugged individualism, ruthless competition, and unregulated economic piracy which led us into a sorry swamp of financial panic from which this Nation was fortunate to escape without serious consequences.

But the fight is only beginning. Much more remains to be done. Nothing is more vital, in my judgment, to the fulfilling of the new deal in all of its phases than the passage of an adequate old-age pension law. We have enacted much so-called "emergency legislation." It is now time for us to give attention to a problem that demands some permanent legislation to protect our farmers and laborers in their old age.

We have provided funds through the Civil Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to make many needed civic improvements. City parks have been beautified, public buildings redecorated, schools repaired and painted. But the one thing, in my judgment, that would do more to make this great land of ours a more beautiful country would be to pass legislation that will close up forever every poorhouse in the country. And we can do that at an annual cost of a little more than the sum needed to build a first-class battleship.

We have gone a long way from the path of rugged individualism in the past year under the leadership of our great President. We are doing many things now that would have seemed highly improbable and virtually impossible even 2 years ago, before the tide of resentment had turned the old order out.

Two years ago, it would have been declared highly improbable that an old-age pension bill could have reached the calendar of this House for consideration in 1934. Yet that has been done. By a unanimous vote of the Committee on Labor there has been referred to this House for action the so-called "Dill-Connery bill."

That bill is not entirely satisfactory to me and I hope that it will be possible to amend it. I have prepared some amendments I hope will be made. In the first place, I want to see this plan made effective immediately in every State in the Union and my amendments will do that. Furthermore, I feel that it is no more than fair that the Federal Government should increase the amount of its participation with the States over the 30 percent provided in the proposed bill.

It must be remembered that there are now no old-age pension laws in 20 of our States. I submit that it is unfair to these States to require them to wait until their legislatures can enact adequate laws before they participate in these benefits. My plan proposes a way that this can be done and also proposes to permit the people to act on old-age pension legislation by the initiative petition route in those States which have this method of legislation. I have no quarrel to pick with those who wish to have State participation. Neither am I opposed to a plan whereby the Federal Government would pay the entire pension. All I am interested in is getting old-age pension legislation and getting it at this session. I am not in favor of adjourning, even though we stay here all summer, until some adequate old-age pension is put on the statute books.

The committee reporting out this bill has made a very interesting and convincing report. I wish that every Member of this House, whether or not he is now in favor of this legislation, would read that report. It will open the eyes of many as to the real need of this legislation and its fundamental justice.

But I do not think there is any use of discussing the question of whether or not this legislation is justified. I feel that this question is virtually settled in the minds of those who have given the matter any study.

I am reminded of what Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said in an address in this city not long ago, when she declared:

> We do not have to discuss the merits of old-age security. We have come a long way beyond that. We have accepted the fact that old people who have worked but who have not been able to provide for old age have a right to be cared for in the last years of their life.

Any of us can cite a few instances of people we know personally to see the justice of that. The economic crash of the last few years has taught us many things. It is well enough to inquire, Why did not they save for a rainy day? But what of the aged couple who invested their savings in bonds that now are worthless. What of those who invested in stocks that can be sold only for a fraction of their purchase price and which pay no dividends? What of those who invested their savings in a farm which has failed to make enough revenue to pay the taxes? What of those who placed their money in savings accounts, only to have the banks fail? The last 4 years has shown us that no form of investment was safe. More than that, what of the millions of men who have earned salaries of a few dollars a week and have attempted to give their families proper nourishment and clothing and to educate their children? Their meager earnings permitted no great savings.

I submit that we are facing a problem that society alone, through the government set up to protect the weak from the strong and to enable us to enjoy the fruits of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, can adequately meet.

I am no new convert to this theory. I have been advocating protection for our aged for many years, even during the era of rugged individualism, when this problem had not attracted the attention of the public and when it was opposed by many well-meaning persons.

The first speech I ever made on the floor of this House, nearly 8 years ago, was on the subject of pensions. At that time I was opposing a monstrous and unreasonable bill to pension rich Federal Reserve bank officials, many of whom were drawing princely salaries of as high as $50,000 a year.

On that day I stood on this floor and declared:

> We have almost countless aged, dependent, and deserving citizens whom the Congress might well aid rather than rich reserve bank officials.

At that time it was possible to bring on the floor of this House a bill to pension reserve bank officials, but there was not a chance in the world to get an old-age pension bill started in the committee, even. All we did that session on the subject was to discuss whether an old-age pension bill should go to the Pensions Committee or to the Judiciary Committee.

But since that day there have been many changes. More than half of the sovereign States have enacted old-age security legislation. Ten States passed such laws in 1933. Iowa only recently adopted an old-age pension law. States which have this legislation now are Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The committee has gathered some interesting information on this subject. Permit me to quote from the report concerning the experience of California:

> Two years' experience with a pension law in California, where over 10,000 people are receiving pensions, shows that the average pension during that period amounted to $22.93 per month. The average annual cost to the taxpayers during the first 2 years amounted to 25.8 cents per capita. It cost every California taxpayer only 17.1 cents per year for each $1,000 of assessed taxable wealth.
> The average cost of an almshouse inmate in California amounts to $44.74 per month in comparison with a pension cost in February 1932 of $23.03. In other words, by placing an aged person on a pension instead of sending him to a poorhouse, California is saving $21.66 per month, or $259.92 per year.
> The California law has already caused 500 old men and women to leave the county almshouses in the State and has prevented over 4,000 aged persons from entering the poorhouses in the last 2 years of depression. The California experience shows conclusively that if only half the present pensioners were cared for in almshouses the cost would be as great as the amount spent today to support twice that number through a system of self-respecting pensions.
> Practically all county boards in California administering the old-age pension law are enthusiastic in the praises of its workings. The following are a few typical comments:

Every State that has adopted an old-age pension law has found that it is much cheaper than the old poorhouse system. Public officials have been highly pleased with the results.

The welfare agent of the Colusa Board of Supervisors has this to say about the California law:

> We cannot find any fault with the law. Since getting old-age security many of these people are happier than for many years. Their health has improved greatly, as they are now getting enough to eat. It is much cheaper for the county to allow this "security." It costs at least $1 a day to keep these people in the county institution. Most of the men living alone are given $20 per month.

I submit that this is not charity but simply justice. There is no use to quibble about the cost. The committee estimates that if all of the States and Territories adopted this legislation, that there would be about 484,000 persons drawing pensions, and that the total cost would be $133,000,000 a year. The committee further states that this total cost of $133,000,000 is far less than the present cost of caring for these people and those who are in the workhouses combined. The sum this Nation expended on the World War alone would pay these pensions for more than 300 years.

But there are some who will ask, Where will Congress find the money to pay for such a program? There is no justification in protesting that this great and wealthy Government cannot find the necessary revenue for this. An increase of 11 percent in the present income-tax rates could provide the necessary funds. The United States Senate has just added a 10-percent increase to the revenue bill over the figures as passed by the House, which I sincerely hope the House will agree to. I would also materially increase the estate tax, gift tax, corporation tax, and surtax, or excess-profit tax. That would more than pay for an old-age pension or old-age-security plan.

Then, I would also pass my bill that his been pending here a long while to tax stock exchanges 1 percent of all sales made by those gambling in stocks. My bill would bring in over $300,000,000 a year, which alone would more than bring in the necessary revenue. So the argument falls flat that Congress cannot find the money.

Of course, ultimately Congress is going to do justice to our deserving and dependent old people. Public sentiment demands that justice be done them. Why not do so now?

GUARANTEE BANK DEPOSITS—FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—PERMANENT PROVISIONS OF THIS LAW SHOULD GO INTO EFFECT JULY 1, 1934

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak just a short time on a measure that will presently come before the House. A proposal to defer the permanent provisions of the bank guaranty law which, if not amended, will go fully into effect July 1, 1934.

During the last session of Congress we passed a law to guarantee bank deposits. Not exceeding $2,500 of deposits to any one account is guaranteed by the temporary provisions of the bill which is now in effect—and will remain in effect to July 1, 1934.

After July 1, 1934, when the permanent provisions go into effect deposits will be guaranteed 100 percent up to $10,000. Deposits from $10,000 to $50,000 will be guaranteed 75 percent of the amount of the deposits and from $50,000 and over they will be guaranteed 50 percent.

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION AGAINST THE LAW

There is a move on in this country to defer the effective date of the guaranty law and keep the temporary provisions in effect to limit the guaranty of deposits to $2,500 and no more until July 1, 1935. This move comes from the American Bankers Association. They have recently passed a resolution, in effect, demanding that the full application of the bank guaranty law be deferred until July 1, 1935.

LITTLE BANKS PAY; BIG ONES ESCAPE

There is a reason for this. Banks pay insurance only on the amount of the deposits guaranteed. If deposits of $2,500 and less are guaranteed, the small bank will pay a guarantee fee on practically all of its deposits, because its deposits are made of small accounts, but the larger institutions that have deposits of $50,000, $100,000, and $150,000 and more will pay on a very small part in proportion to the total amount of their deposits compared with the small banks.

This is the evil that results. We will suppose a town here of 10,000 people; the bank in that town has a factory owned by people who live away in the larger centers of the country. They keep their pay roll in the bank in the small town, they keep enough funds there to transact the business, $25,000 or $30,000; if these funds are not guaranteed, as they are not under the temporary provisions of the law, they will be pulled out of the small bank and carried to the larger center where they feel there is little chance of a bank failure. The result is that by continuing the temporary provisions we deprive the small banks of the deposits accounts that are more than $25,000, thereby contributing greatly to the closing of banks from which such larger uninsured deposits have been drawn.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. The larger banks will not receive any assurance of a guaranty in excess of $2,500 and I do not see how the conclusion that the gentleman draws would necessarily follow.

BIG ACCOUNTS MOVED TO BIG BANKS

Mr. BUSBY. It necessarily follows because we have been told in the committee that in many instances the manufacturing plant that had $15,000 or $20,000 in the small bank, even before the guaranty law went into effect, moved these deposits to a larger bank in New York City in order that they may be safe from a bank failure.

Mr. ARNOLD. But they do not have any insurance on their deposits when they move them to the large bank.

Mr. BUSBY. They certainly do not.

Mr. ARNOLD. It might cause a dissipation of such funds by scattering them among the smaller banks of the country or among the banks generally, but they certainly cannot gain any advantage by taking them out of a small bank and putting them in a large bank.

Mr. BUSBY. They do gain this advantage, they think, by putting them in the Chase National Bank of New York. They feel practically positive that there is not going to be a failure of that bank, but by leaving the large deposit in the small bank, which is not guaranteed above $2,500, they feel they are taking some chance, and therefore they rob the small banks of these large deposits and carry them to the larger centers.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I aimed to discuss that matter, but I did not have the time. I am sorry I find myself in disagreement with the gentleman about the matter. Does not the gentleman think that since the Government of the United States is paying about two thirds of the insurance premium in guaranteeing these deposits, whenever we guarantee all of them up to $2,500, that is enough and that we should not guarantee these $32,000,000 accounts?

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman had heard the witnesses testify, I think the gentleman would be more in accord with what I have suggested. They do not in any event guarantee them 100 percent above $10,000.

Mr. PATMAN. They guarantee a percentage, however.

Mr. BUSBY. Here is the error in the gentleman's conclusion. The banks are required to pay only on the amounts they have insured and since the larger banks of the country, which are not likely to fail, are not being called on for any insurance fund, they escape responsibility to the bank guaranty fund, thereby taxing the Government and the small bank disproportionately to maintain the guaranty fund.

Mr. PATMAN. They pay insurance or a premium on all the accounts up to $2,500?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Just like all other banks, so there cannot be any discrimination?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; because the accounts, as they run in the larger banks, on the average, are much larger than in the smaller banks.

Mr. PATMAN. But they do not pay on them.

Mr. BUSBY. That is where they escape responsibility.

Mr. PATMAN. They do not get the insurance either.

Mr. BUSBY. They do not want the insurance. They say, "We can take care of ourselves. If you will let us alone and not charge us this insurance we can take care of ourselves."

Mr. PATMAN. Why should we insist on giving them insurance at our expense? You know the Government is paying two thirds of the insurance premium and if they do not want this insurance, why should we make them take it at the expense of the people?

Mr. BUSBY. We require them to carry insurance for the protection of depositors, not for the banks. That is all I have to say about it.

TWELVE BANKS WITH $20,000,000,000 RESOURCES

I remember about 3 years ago a list of 12 banks was announced which had $20,000,000,000 of resources.

Now, not one of these 12 banks has failed, and all we get out of them is the insurance premium on $2,500 accounts. If we had the law in full force we would get a premium out of them on the deposits that make up the $20,000,000,000. These banks have not broken down, but they are the big fish that eat the little fish in your district and in mine; the big banks that consume the little ones. I want them to be responsible to the policy that makes the little banks fail. How do they make them fail? You remember in the bank investigation in the Senate that the South American bonds are not in the hands of these banks. They shunted the commercial paper off to the little banks and gathered in United States bonds and securities—a secondary money. For that reason we want them to come in and help pay the insurance to take care of the little banks should they break.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Government pays two thirds of the insurance premium.

Mr. BUSBY. I do not think that is true. Now, let me proceed. I want to call attention to another thing. I read from an editorial which appeared in this morning's Post, edited by Eugene Meyer, former Governor of the Federal Reserve System. He was at the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at one time, and played a prominent part in the last administration's financial policy.

He was quoting the president of the insurance set-up. I might say that the head of this insurance corporation this week made a speech before the American Bankers' Association at Hot Springs, W.Va., in which he urged strongly that the date of the bank guaranty be deferred until July 1, 1935. The editorial says:

It would be impossible, he says, to examine all the member banks between now and July with a view to determining their solvency, hence their eligibility for participation in the permanent plan. In addition, investigations have to be made into the condition of nonmember banks adhering to the guaranty system.

The basic defects of the deposit-guaranty plan make it highly desirable to defer the date of transition from the present temporary system to the permanent one. That will give Congress an opportunity to reconsider its hasty action in approving a guaranty plan that puts a premium upon irresponsible banking practices, and imposes unlimited liabilities upon insured institutions. There will also be time in which to devise legislation to correct those fundamental weaknesses of our uncoordinated dual banking system which have contributed largely to our bank failures.

In the absence of constructive legislation, the country cannot escape a recurrence of bank closings. Introduction of a system of deposit guaranty which invites relaxation of customary restraints upon bank managements would make future disturbances even more devastating than those that lie behind us.

If there are going to be more bank failures they want to avoid the plan that would take them into the general bank set-up of the country. If we are to have bank failures let us have them within the guaranty.

BIG BANKS WANT TO AVOID GUARANTEE LAW

They want to stay out of the permanent effect of this law, so that their millions of deposits, drawn away from the other sections of the country and placed in large banks for safety because of the size of the institution, will contribute nothing to this guaranty for large deposits fund; and if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is right, that the Government pays two thirds of it, they want the Government to continue to pay two thirds. They do not want to have any part in this affair which would make them responsible in a proportionate degree for the bank failures that the small banks are, failures of which in part, caused by their business policies.

In this House on May 22, 1933, we discussed the very act that I am now calling to your attention. At that time I said:

In order to guarantee anything, the thing you undertake to guarantee should be worthy of the guaranty. We ought to guarantee a banking set-up that is worthy of guaranty. I am going to support this proposition because later, after we pass the guaranty law, it will be up to the Government to see to it that we have a banking set-up that is worthy of the guaranty that we place upon it, regardless of what it costs.

Also:

But our banking system is the poorest one in the world from the standpoint of safety to the depositor.

And further:

Our bank deposits cannot be guaranteed and made safe by the little amount of funds that we are providing in this bill.

I still believe that. In closing, I said:

Yet I am going to vote for this bill because I think the Government will be forced to set up a banking system that the people can depend on after it gets behind the guaranty.

I do not believe that the banking system of this country is capable of coping with the problems that confront it. I know that whenever prices fall, when commodities go down and properties on which banks have mortgages depreciate in value, which they cannot sell and restore the credit they loaned on them, the banks must fail. The banks do not fail until the community around the banks fails.

I know that the system and the big banks of this country know that the system that we are called upon to guarantee here cannot stand in the face of adversity when falling prices set in in the manner that we have witnessed them in the last few years. But, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] quoted me a while ago as saying what I have often said, "this Government has never undertaken to meet its responsibility and furnish a dependable media of exchange for business, commerce, and industry." What has it done? It provides about one tenth of the amount necessary in currency. It then depends upon the commercial banking set-up, and the commercial banking set-up did not agree to furnish the other 0.9 in checking accounts, not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 1 minute more.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Do the hearings disclose whether any banks have failed since the 1st of January, since this bill went into effect; and, if so, how has the bill operated in the payment of deposits up to $2,500?

Mr. BUSBY. There has not been a single bank failure since the law went into operation, and there is no indication that there is any immediate danger of bank failures. Conditions seem to be getting better with the banks.

Mr. HASTINGS. That shows justification for the enactment of the legislation?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes, and on the other hand we have testimony to show that the same banks have increased 200 and 300 percent in deposits in communities where there is no especial reason except the fact that the people brought their funds in and put them into the banks, knowing that the Government was back of the funds that they were placing in the banks.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman means in the communities where the insurance law has gone into effect, it would affect those institutions?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. But not otherwise?

Mr. BUSBY. No. These may be sporadic instances, but they have been related. All deposits show an increase and banks in a healthier condition. No more runs on banks.

If the Government is going to depend upon this set-up in order to have a media of exchange—that is, check money so necessary with which to do business, and I want to say that I believe check money is the most practical type of money that we can use in this country, because every man who has property can issue check money against that property as it is appraised with the cooperation of the bank, and it will not cause any undue inflation—if the Government is going to depend on this banking set-up, it ought to make the banking set-up so substantial that the people can depend upon it also.

GOVERNMENT NEEDS FULL DEPOSIT GUARANTEE LAW

For that reason we must have a full bank guarantee law in this country for depositors who place their funds in these institutions. Otherwise we will have McLeod bills and all other kinds of legislation creating claims against the Government when the Government had not agreed to meet them.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman really believe that the only solution to this banking situation is for the Government to take over all the banks?

Mr. BUSBY. It certainly does look to that end.

UNCLE SAM MUST ACT IN SELF-DEFENSE

Now, whether it takes them over by guaranteeing the present bank set-up and so examining, inspecting, and appraising their assets and managing those assets as to make them usable and dependable to the people, or whether it does it in some other way, is the question that the future must solve; but we cannot go back to an unguaranteed, loose, badly managed, poorly supervised system of banking, into which the people are required to put their money and values in order that we may have a media-of-exchange machine.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Extending the principle of the McLeod bill ad infinitum, there are black lands down in Texas with rich soil running 15 feet deep—lands which will never need fertilizer—that were worth $250 an acre, but which by reason of the money situation and bank failures, have decreased in value to $40 or $50 per acre. Ought we not to restore the former value to this land if we pay bank losses?

Mr. BUSBY. I think the gentleman's question answers itself. I do not care to get into that; but certainly we must know that we cannot pay all bad bank claims any more than we can pay all bad land claims. If a bank fails and I have a claim against it, I am in no different situation than if the value of my farm falls and I find myself with a debt instead of a farm.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this going to be the last extension?

Mr. BUSBY. It will be the last one I shall accept; I promise the gentleman that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Just this one question, if the gentleman will permit: Take the case of a man who bought United States Steel at $265 a share in the days when business was good, and a Republican President was advising him to buy stocks, the value of which stock has now gone down to about $50 a share; what about paying such losses as that if we are to pay off bank losses?

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, that is a very fine question. Answering the gentleman, I may say that with all the light before us as to values and the continuation of those values throughout a period of many years men bought steel, they bought General Motors, they bought other stocks, and they bought property. In the light of what they could secure for the produce made on the land they purchased, and when prices failed, when the tumble in values came, they were not and could not be chargeable with any fault of not properly appraising the property. The fault lay with the system under which we were operating. That caused the destruction of our people financially; and that system will cause the destruction of people continuously until we change it, until the Government comes forward and by its act sets up a dependable machine which the people can use in transacting their business.

I am not talking about coining or printing currency, although that is the only thing the Government has done to meet its responsibility. It has put out a small amount of currency. Just now the amount is entirely too little.

THE BANK-CREDIT MACHINE BROKE DOWN

The Government's responsibility, then, is to come forward and furnish money to take the place of the checks that were used formerly, so that the people can go ahead with their business and not be absolutely stopped because the bank-credit machine broke down.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Of course, the gentleman differentiates between the person who deposits his funds in a bank and the person who speculates in land in Florida, or in stocks, or who bets on a horse race. The person who buys land, who buys stock, or who bets on a horse race, or anything else, is operating in the realm of speculation and expects to take his chance of a loss as well as of a win. Certainly the gentleman does not expect the person who puts his money in a bank to take the same kind of a chance; and certainly the gentleman does not put such a person in the same category with the speculator I have referred to.

BANK DEPOSITORS TAKE BIG CHANCE

Mr. BUSBY. To answer the gentleman's question literally, when we look around and see that since 1920 more than 15,000 banks have failed, when we see that the number of banks have declined from 30,000 in 1920 to less than 15,000 today, I think the gentleman will agree with me that the person who put his money in the bank was a bigger speculator than the man who bought land in Florida.

Mr. HEALEY. He should not be, though, should he?

Mr. BUSBY. No. I am coming to that. To answer the gentleman's question, let me explain that the bank depositor was a speculator not because he desired to speculate but because the Government of the United States has never furnished him a dependable situation where he could take care of himself. It is the fault of the system.

If we, as a Congress, go through this depression and do not enact some laws that will change this fundamental error that is thrown upon us every 7 or 8 years, we ought to be dubbed anything else but a bunch of thinkers.

Mr. DONDERO. Does not the gentleman think we can correct a part of that erroneous system by the passage of the McLeod bill, putting the people in a position where they will have some confidence in the Government?

Mr. BUSBY. I cannot see the principles of the McLeod bill, because it is not fair to the Treasury of the United States, which is supported by the taxpayers of the country. You are picking out national banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System and paying their depositors 100 percent, and other people who were depositors of State banks will not be considered.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. GOSS. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. McDUFFIE, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. HESS (at the request of Mr. HOLLISTER), indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

S.Con.Res. 13. To authorize the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the Special Committee Appointed to Investigate Air- and Ocean-Mail Contracts, was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 7483. An act to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2084. An act granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes; and

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Heavenly Father, establish Thou our ways to observe Thy statutes. Do Thou renew our wills each day and blend them with Thine. Arm us with jealous care and with that faith that works by love. O Son of Man, break through everywhere for Thou art the personal, the tender, and the last possible dream of our All-Father. Animate us to the cheerfulness of duty and service by giving us a joyful sense of our daily blessings. May we look upon the hopeful side of circumstances and maintain the spirit of contentment. We pray Thee that we may be so clothed with fortitude, and whatsoever may be our duty, O keep the music singing in our souls. We rejoice that there is guidance for each of us, and by lowly listening we shall be led aright. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2845. An act to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property.

THE RECORD

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the RECORD of yesterday wherein the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER] impeached Joseph W. Molyneaux, United States district judge of Minnesota.

I want first to commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER] because, at the request of the Speaker, he omitted from the RECORD a large number of pages of extraneous matter, and I want to thank the Speaker on behalf of the taxpayers of the country for causing him to omit this from the RECORD.

However, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota—and I am sorry he is not present just at this time—to the insertion in the RECORD of 16 pages of matter, including brief of defendant, statement of facts, court order, motion of the court, and argument of counsel, which I do not believe, from the information I can gather, was essential to be inserted in the RECORD in order to make his impeachment proceedings a proper record. It was not essential.

I feel that whenever a Member of the Congress, Senator or Representative, inserts in the RECORD 16 pages of bulk matter that is not necessary to the question which he wants to bring to the attention of the House in the RECORD—we send 35,000 copies of the RECORD all over the land—if it were so important to the Members of Congress the Printing Committee could print a small number of copies of such matter. If the Member were interested in economy, he could see the Printing Committee; they could have a thousand copies printed, and it would only cost the Government one thirty-fifth as much as it would if printed in the RECORD. I think the Membership of the House ought to give consideration to the fact that putting bulk matter in the RECORD costs the taxpayers of this country an enormous sum. They should always consider this fact in their desire to fill the RECORD with speeches and reprints from newspapers, and so forth.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Did the gentleman consider the number of pages one of the Members of the other body had inserted in this morning's RECORD, consisting of newspaper editorials and news items?

Mr. RICH. I do not care whether it is a Republican or a Democrat, Senator or Congressman, it is wrong, and anything that is wrong ought to be curbed.

Mr. PATMAN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but I think we should commence at the same time with the other body, which is the principal offender, and get an agreement out of them to stop putting this extraneous matter in the RECORD. Very few Members of the House are guilty. None of them should be guilty of this bad practice.

Mr. RICH. Because one body does a wrong is no good reason—two wrongs do not make a right.

I hope the Senators of our country have the same respect for the taxpayers' money as we Representatives, who are trying our best to conserve, by limiting a great amount of unnecessary printing in our daily proceeding.

Mr. TRUAX. And the gentleman is the sole judge of right and wrong, I presume.

Mr. RICH. I hope I would not be that egotistical.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi presented the following conference report on the bill, H.R. 8471, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,290,521"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$121,760,093"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$121,475,093"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,702,359"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", ambulances, fire trucks, and vehicles now in use by Reserve Officers' Training Corps units"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$219,789"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,278,859"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved May 15, 1928 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 33, sec. 702a), $29,000,000.";

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 6, 12, 32, 37, 40, and 43.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4: Provides for continuing the office of the Assistant Secretary of War for Air, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 5: Makes $2,500 available for the procurement of an automobile for the Secretary of War, as proposed by the House, instead of $4,000 for such purpose, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 7, 8, and 9, relating to the consolidated appropriation for travel of military and civil personnel: Excludes from the appropriation, as proposed by the Senate, funds for travel in connection with river and harbor and flood-control activities under the Corps of Engineers, and adopts the Senate's substitute phraseology for the House limitation on transportation rates, amended to apply to through rates or a combination of rates.

On amendments nos. 10, 11, and 13 to 20, inclusive, relating to "Pay, etc., of the Army": Appropriates $28,617,645 for pay of officers, as proposed by the House, instead of $30,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; confines the availability of the appropriation to the pay of not exceeding 11,750 commissioned officers commissioned prior to June 1, 1934, as proposed by the House, amended to make the effective date October 1, 1934; appropriates $1,579,410 for flight pay of officers, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,776,997, as proposed by the Senate; provides for active-duty pay of 5 retired officers, instead of 4, as proposed by the House, and 230, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriation of $26,750 proposed by the Senate for the pay of retired enlisted men on active duty; appropriates $5,386,786 for rental allowances instead of $5,386,397, as proposed by the House, and $5,653,077, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $5,290,521 for subsistence allowances instead of $5,290,066, as proposed by the House, and $5,412,786, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the proposal of the Senate to permit amounts specifically limited to be increased by transfer from appropriations under other titles.

On amendment no. 21, relating to the expense of courts-martial, etc.: Strike out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision excepting payments for contract stenographic services from any deduction in consequence of economy legislation.

On amendment no. 22: Appropriates $16,000,000 for subsistence of the Army, instead of $15,705,898, as proposed by the House, and $17,691,828, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 23: Appropriates $2,576,880 for regular supplies of the Army, as proposed by the House, instead of $3,092,663, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 24: Appropriates $4,207,112 for clothing and equipage, as proposed by the House, instead of $5,502,824, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 25 to 29, inclusive, relating to Army transportation: Limits expenditures for maintenance and repair of motor vehicles of not to exceed $461,812, as proposed by the House, instead of $562,065, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $7,702,359 for all objects of the appropriation, instead of $7,192,211, as proposed by the House, and $8,655,005, as proposed by the Senate; extends the exception of motor vehicles procured prior to January 1, 1920, to be maintained out of the appropriation, to include ambulances, fire trucks, and vehicles at present assigned to Reserve Officers' Training Corps units, and makes the effective date of the exception January 1, 1935, as proposed by the Senate, striking out, however, the Senate proposal to except tanks and their carriers, rebuilt trucks, and such other vehicles as can be operated economically; and strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision prohibiting expenditures incident to the operation of the Fort Benning Railroad.

On amendment no. 30: Appropriates $150,000 for the purchase of 1,000 horses, instead of $75,000 for the purchase of 500 horses, as proposed by the House, and $225,000 for the purchase of 1,500 horses, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 31: Appropriates $9,155,695 for barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $9,015,902, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 33: Appropriates $332,988 for "Engineer Service, Army", as proposed by the House, instead of $344,509, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 34 and 35: Provides for 48 drills for the National Guard and the Naval and Marine Corps reserve forces, as proposed by the Senate, instead of 42 drills, as proposed by the House, and appropriates for the National Guard for and by reason thereof $11,756,221, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $10,302,949, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 36: Appropriates $4,278,859 for the Officers' Reserve Corps instead of $3,986,859, as proposed by the House, and $6,500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 38 and 39, relating to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Appropriates $3,108,701, as proposed by the House, instead of $4,467,461, as proposed by the Senate, and restores the House provision prohibiting expenditures on account of students in Medical Corps, Dental Corps, and veterinary units not members of such units on May 5, 1932.

On amendment no. 41: Appropriates $1,000,000 for citizens' military training camps instead of $987,213, as proposed by the House, and $2,687,213, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 42: Appropriates $17,178 on account of quartermaster supplies and services for rifle ranges for civilian instruction, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,631, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 44: Appropriates $29,000,000 for flood-control work on the Mississippi River and tributaries, pursuant to supplemental estimates contained in House Document 309 of the present session, instead of $50,000,000 which the Senate proposed with the condition that it was to be reduced by such amount as might later be allotted from Federal relief and other emergency appropriations.

On amendment no. 45: Appropriates $341,291 for emergency fund for flood control on tributaries of the Mississippi River, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $318,114, as proposed by the House.

DISAGREEMENTS

The committee of conference have not agreed on the following amendments of the Senate:

On no. 6: Being the total of the appropriation "Contingent expenses, War Department."

On no. 12: Limiting the rate of flight pay for nonflying officers above the grade of captain.

On no. 32: Making an additional appropriation for the Army Air Corps.

On nos. 37 and 40: Providing for medical and hospital treatment of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and of persons attending citizens' military training camps who contract disease in line of duty.

On no. 43: Relating to the appropriation for rivers and harbors and an expenditure therefrom for conducting a survey of Governors Island, N.Y.

THOMAS L. BLANTON,
CHESTER C. BOLTON,
D. LANE POWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the conference report on the bill H.R. 8471, the War Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the statement.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 6: Page 5, line 19, strike out "$175,178" and insert in lieu thereof "$181,631."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$181,631, of which sum $8,000 shall be available exclusively for the several objects embraced by the appropriation contained in this act entitled 'Contingencies, Military Intelligence Division.'"

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 12: Page 11, line 18, after the word "captain", insert "at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "At a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers above the grade of captain."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 32: Page 36, after line 5, insert: "For an additional amount for the Air Corps, Army, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the President, for improvement, development, and augmentation of military aviation matériel, and for training of military aviation personnel, including the purchase and/or construction of buildings and other necessary military aviation facilities, and employment of civilian personnel, notwithstanding the limitations contained in any appropriations for Air Corps, Army, fiscal year 1935, to be immediately available, $10,000,000."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For an additional amount for the improvement, development, and augmentation of aviation matériel, and for the training of military aviation personnel, to be immediately available, $5,000,000, of which not less than $3,000,000 shall be expended for the procurement of airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories for the Regular Army and the National Guard; not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be expended for aviation fuel and oil and for the repair and maintenance of airplanes and their equipment and accessories for the training of military aviation pilots; and not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be available for expenditure, in the discretion and under the direction of the President, as follows: For airplane accessories for the Regular Army and National Guard; for the investigation and development of a national aviation program, including the employment of personal services without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and all other necessary expenses incident thereto; for the encouragement of development of types of airplanes, airplane engines, and aviation equipment, including the granting of awards; for compensation (not exceeding $10,000) for information to be obtained from an authoritative source in such form and manner as the President may desire as to geographic, meteorologic, and weather conditions in northern latitudes, and for such other purposes related to civil and military aviation as the President may deem proper."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 37: Page 56, line 9, after the word "injury", insert the words "or contract disease."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 40: Page 59, line 21, after the word "injury", insert the words "or disease contracted."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 43: Page 66, line 21, after the word "law", strike out all down to and including the figures "$23,966,645."

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 43: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$23,966,645, of which sum $50,000 shall be available, under the direction of the President, for conducting a survey of Governors Island, N.Y., to determine its usefulness and adaptability as an airport and the cost of accomplishing all work incidental to effecting the change."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, when this bill passed the House—and it was then quite generally proclaimed by military men as the best balanced Army appropriation measure approved by the Congress since the World War—it carried $279,441,890, or $3,190,169 less than the Budget estimates. The House approved the action of the committee in making certain reallocations of the Budget estimates so as to have expenditures made in directions that would assure a better measure of military preparedness.

The Senate placed 45 amendments on the bill, and in money added $75,339,999, of which $62,149,830 had no Budget support. Ten million dollars of the Senate increase was added pursuant to a supplemental estimate presented after the bill had passed the House.

As agreed to by the conference committee, the bill carries $316,228,991, and this sum, owing to the submission of a supplemental estimate of $29,000,000 for prosecuting flood-control work on the Mississippi River, is $5,403,068 below the Budget estimates, original and supplemental.

Of the items agreed upon, but three are of outstanding importance. These I shall refer to in their order.

AIR CORPS

After the bill passed the House a supplemental estimate of $10,000,000 was presented to the Senate for uses of a very general character, expenditures to be made in the discretion and under the direction of the President. Your conferees have agreed upon half of that amount and have apportioned all but $1,000,000 of it to very definite uses. Three million dollars have been set aside exclusively for the procurement of new airplanes, one third of the amount being intended for new airplanes for the National Guard. This amount is in addition to the $8,486,600 carried in the bill as it passed the House and Senate for the purchase of new airplanes, and the contract authorization of $3,000,000 also previously approved for new airplane procurements.

The bill, as passed by the House and Senate, carried $8,091,089 for aviation fuel and oil and for the maintenance and repair of airplanes. One million of the $5,000,000 agreed upon in conference, in effect, is in augmentation of such sum. Obviously, it will permit of a greater amount of flying.

The remaining $1,000,000 is made available for expenditure in the discretion and under the direction of the President for a number of well-defined purposes, principally the following:

First. For airplane accessories for the Regular Army and the National Guard.

Second. For the investigation and development of a national aviation program.

Third. For the encouragement and development of types of airplanes, airplane engines, and aviation equipment, including the granting of awards. Under this clause the Army will be enabled to participate in airplane speed competitions.

NATIONAL GUARD

As passed by the House, provision was made for 42 armory drills for members of the National Guard and of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve forces. The Budget, it will be recalled, carried funds for but 36 drills, which is the number to which the National Guard has been administratively limited the current fiscal year. Our committee was given to understand that 42 drills would be entirely acceptable to the National Guard Bureau and to the National Guard Association. This was the minimum number, however, we were advised necessary for the maintenance of a proper degree of efficiency. It was on the strength of this advice that we recommended to the House and the House approved 42 drills. The Senate, however, saw fit to increase the number to 48, and we have concurred in their action, and we have done so not because of any urging but because we are in favor, and I am sure the House is in favor, of doing everything possible that will further promote the efficiency of this organization, and also because in these times of depression every drill with pay means a great deal to a very large number of National Guardsmen all over the country. The added cost, so far as the National Guard is concerned, of $1,453,272, will be money well spent, in my judgment, and, I am sure, in the judgment of my colleagues on the conference committee.

FLOOD CONTROL

The Budget included no funds for continuing the flood-control project on the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The omission, we were given to understand, was because it was planned to finance this work out of Federal relief or emergency appropriations which are largely being used to defray the cost of current-year operations. The Senate, however, added $50,000,000 to the bill for this work, coupling with it a condition that the appropriation was to be reduced by such amount as might later be allotted of Federal relief or emergency appropriations. After the bill was sent to conference the administration concluded to ask for a specific appropriation for carrying on this work during the ensuing fiscal year of $29,000,000, to be substituted for the Senate provision, and your conferees have acquiesced in that arrangement. It is our understanding that this sum, in conjunction with unused and unallotted moneys now available, will make available for expenditure during 1935 not less than $48,000,000. Later, if need be, this amount may be augmented.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have accounted for the major changes in the House bill. The Senate receded wholly or very largely from its amendments adding to the appropriations proposed by the House for other objects.

The Senate added $1,985,930 to the House allowance for subsistence of the Army. We have agreed to $294,102 of that increase.

For Army transportation the Senate increased the House figure by $1,462,844. We have agreed to $510,148 of that increase, or $125,253 less than the sum the Department had urged the Senate to add to the House bill. While your conferees felt that no increase was justified, the Senate conferees felt otherwise, and would only agree to yield on the amount of $100,253, which it had added for repairs to motor vehicles, and $25,000, which it had added for the procurement of trucks to determine types most suited for the Army. The House has twice refused to provide funds for such purpose.

There is one other amendment in which there is considerable interest, to which I should refer, perhaps, before concluding. I have reference to horses. The House provided for the purchase of 500 horses. The Senate provided for the purchase of 1,500 horses. We split the difference, and have provided for the purchase of 1,000 horses.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Does the Army appropriation bill, as it now stands, contain an appropriation for a veterinary unit of the R.O.T.C.; and if not, why not?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. The agreement as to the R.O.T.C. carries the same amount as was carried in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. EDMISTON. Does the bill contain the appropriations and conform with the request of the Chief of Staff, General MacArthur, the American Legion, and the Reserve Officers' Association?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. In the sense I think the gentleman means, I say no. Let me add, though, that it is my understanding that the Legion is not advocating immediate provision for additional personnel for the Regular Army and the civil components. It has given its endorsement this year to the numbers advocated by the Chief of Staff as the ultimate goal to be realized. The Legion policy changes almost yearly.

The matter of making appropriations for the Military Establishment is a congressional responsibility. Congress is better able to decide this matter than outsiders; and while Congress always welcomes suggestions and advice, still we must constantly bear in mind that it is solely our duty to provide for the common defense.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on April 20, 1934, present to the President for his approval a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 7483. An act to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, 36 years ago today Congress declared war with Spain. As a consequence the youth of the North merged with the youth and the good people of the South, and as a result of the annealing comradeship of the Spanish-American War practically every vestige of sectionalism was removed from America. Out of respect to the officers and men who served during the Spanish-American War, I hope our floor leader will move that we adjourn out of respect to President McKinley and the officers, men, and nurses who lost their lives in that conflict.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure the House will approve of an early adjournment for the reasons expressed by the gentleman from California, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 23, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF THE MUNITIONS INDUSTRY: RESIGNATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which was read, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
April 20, 1934.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I appreciate very much the honor you accorded me in appointing me on the committee to investigate munitions, etc. However, my time is so completely taken up with Texas matters that it will not be practicable for me to serve, and I hereby tender my resignation.

With cordial good wishes, and renewed thanks, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

MORRIS SHEPPARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to fill the vacancy on the special committee.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the Senate of the State of New York, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN THE SENATE,
Albany, April 17, 1934.

By Mr. Berg

Whereas under the provisions of the National Recovery Act effort is being made to abolish industrial home work; and

Whereas a survey shows approximately 250,000 home workers are employed by the 4,500 manufacturers licensed by the New York State Department of Labor to give out home work; and

Whereas most of this work is done by hand, and a large percentage of it requires skill in needlework, and the majority of these workers are middle-aged men and women, invalids, and others, who by reason of home or physical conditions cannot engage in any work necessitating their leaving home; and

Whereas thousands of these men and women have been supporting themselves and their dependents for many years, many working for the same firms for 5, 10, and in many instances for 15 or more years; and

Whereas the consternation and anguish that the news that they may be deprived of the opportunity of supporting themselves in their old accustomed way, has brought to these workers, is most pathetic and heartbreaking; and

Whereas the abolishment of this form of employment would remove the earning power of this great army of people who could not secure an income in any other way, and who would be thrown upon relief agencies and forced to seek succor of parish and State; and

Whereas taking the right to do work from this class of workers would not materially increase the earning power of any other group of workers, but the said work will either be sent out of the State, as in the case of women's neckwear industry, in which one firm alone employing 1,100 home workers has negotiated to send the work out to the Philippines; some of the products will be imported as is planned in the lace industry, art linen work, artificial flowers and feathers, hankerchiefs, corsets, leather and woolen knit gloves, hand embroideries, powder-puff industry, crocheted berets, men's suspenders and belts, medium- and low-priced jewelry, greeting cards, etc.; and

Whereas the industries that will not be able to comply with this mandate to abolish home work and to do the work in factories, and cannot resort to the other expedient of sending the work to be done elsewhere, or of importing the products, will simply have to close their places of business. This result will surely not be fulfilling the purpose of the National Recovery Act which aims to encourage national industrial recovery; and

Whereas an opportunity is here presented and is at hand to wipe out the exploitation of the home workers, since through the agency of the National Recovery Act provision can be made for the payment of a minimum wage in the respective industries and for other regulations safeguarding the interests of the home workers and the public; and

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Legislature of the State of New York, known as the "Newsteen bill", assembly introductory 1532, print 1656, which bill relates to the industrial home worker and is sponsored by the New York State Department of Labor, and endorsed by the majority of manufacturers employing home workers. The provisions of this bill set up proper policing of home working and places the cost of such policing upon the manufacturers. It must readily be seen that if 4,500 manufacturers each pay $25 a year for a home-work license, a substantial fund will thus be raised to assure proper supervision, compliance with minimum-wage provisions, abolition of child labor, proper sanitary conditions, and many other regulations the State may impose; and

Whereas the abolition of home work will, in addition to the depriving of this vast army of workers of an opportunity to be self-sustaining, it will likewise encourage bootlegging in industrial home work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of New York hereby memorialize the President of the United States to urge upon those in charge of the administration of the National Recovery Act a safe and sane policy in connection with this form of industrial home work; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States lend his aid to the end that the codes adopted pursuant to the National Recovery Act make suitable provision for the retention of industrial home work and that, if necessary, a suitable committee be appointed to be composed of a representative of the Government of the United States, a representative of the manufacturers, a representative of the home workers, which should constitute an industrial home-work code authority charged with the duty of providing for a minimum wage for the home workers, the abolition of child labor in industrial home work, the licensing of manufacturers giving home work, the registration of home workers, inspection of premises where home work is done, and such other regulations as the public would prompt on request: And be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to His Excellency the Governor of the State of New York, the Administrator of the National Recovery Act, and to the secretary of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America.

By order of the senate.

[SEAL] MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the City Commissions of Pontiac and Royal Oak, Mich., favoring the passage of the so-called "McLeod bill", providing relief to depositors in closed banks, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Local Union No. 936, International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers, of Nashville, Tenn., favoring the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Charles Forney, of Norfolk, Va., praying for an investigation by the present Congress of the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Heyde-Pillow Post, No. 1301, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Marion, Ill., favoring the passage of House bill no. 1, providing payment of adjusted-service certificates (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Washoe County Bar Association, of Reno, Nev., protesting against the passage of legislation taking away the legal right of husband and wife to make separate income-tax returns, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the National Camp of the Patriotic Order of Americans, protesting against the passage of legislation to loosen immigration restrictions, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Washoe County Bar Association, of Reno, Nev., favoring the passage of legislation providing for the remonetization of silver, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics, New York City, N.Y., endorsing the principles embodied in Senate bill 2800, known as the "Federal food and drugs bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Provincial Board of Romblon, P.I., protesting against the imposition of an excise tax against Philippine oil and copra imported into the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Territorial Central Committee of the Democratic Party of Hawaii, Honolulu, T.H., favoring the granting of the same treatment to Hawaii in national legislative matters, and particularly in the allocation of agricultural or other products, as may be accorded to the Nation generally, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Elizabeth (N.J.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of legislation to abolish the Federal gasoline tax and to relinquish to the States the exclusive power of taxing such sales in the future, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a letter from Mr. Eusebio A. Godoy, supreme head of the Palihan ng Bayan, protesting against the imposition in pending legislation of an excise tax on coconut oil from the Philippines, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Byron Moser, president of the Mutual Bank & Trust Co., St. Louis, Mo., favoring the passage of the so-called "Lewis bill" in place of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards, introduced by Mr. JOHNSON and passed by the Senate on February 9, 1934, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, April 3, 1934.

By Mr. Fearon

Whereas the State of New York was allocated some $22,300,000 in funds for highway work as a result of the National Industrial Recovery Act in 1933; and

Whereas these funds were provided for the purpose of giving additional employment on highway work in the State of New York; and

Whereas practically all of this sum has been either expended or placed under contract; and

Whereas the New York State budget for the next fiscal year provides only the sum of $5,000,000 for construction and reconstruction work on highways in this State; and

Whereas most of this sum will be used by the State for maintenance of present highways and bridges; and

Whereas there will be practically no new State highway work undertaken during the year 1934; and

Whereas the highway program made possible through the Federal allotment of $22,300,000 last year will be completed during the summer months of 1934, thus releasing thousands of workers directly and indirectly employed as a result of this progress; and

Whereas the release of these thousands of workers from the highway industry will greatly intensify the unemployment situation in nearly all sections of the State unless additional Federal funds are made available with which to prosecute a continued program of highway employment during the current year: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York memorialize and respectfully petition the President and the Congress of the United States to enact during the present session such legislation as will provide an additional program of highway construction and improvement for 1934 of at least $500,000,000, to be allocated among the various States upon the same basis as was followed in connection with the apportionment made last year under the original $400,000,000 fund, the additional $500,000,000 fund to be administered under jurisdiction of the United States Bureau of Public Roads through the State highway department of the various States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the United States Senate, to the President of the United States, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY,
April 4, 1934.

Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

Murphy Association, Inc., of Brooklyn, and the Dobbs Ferry Italian-American Civic Association, of Dobbs Ferry, in the State of New York, protesting against the enactment of proposed legislation to regulate stock exchanges, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CONDITIONS AFFECTING SMALL PETROLEUM COMPANIES

Mr. BORAH. I desire to have printed in the RECORD certain telegrams from the small oil companies as to some action which has lately been taken upon the part of the major companies. I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] now, but later I shall discuss the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

There being no objection, the telgrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 21, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

The major companies reduced third grade and regular gasoline price in Chicago 1 cent, making total reduction of 2½ cents in the last 30 days, during which time our cost has increased 1 cent. Price outside Chicago is 4½ cents higher due to no competition with reduction of hours and increased pay roll. This condition will wreck every small independent in Chicago. We ask that some action be taken to correct this condition.

FRANK J. EHRENHEIM.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 20, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Major company reduced third grade and regular gasoline price Chicago 1 cent, making total reduction 2½ cents in last month.

and our cost has increased 1 cent. Prices outside Chicago due to no competition are 4½ cents higher. Independents living up to N.R.A. and increased pay roll will be ruined in Chicago by this condition. We, therefore, ask that some action be taken to correct this.

TANK CAR STATIONS, INC.,
4530 West Grand Avenue.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 20, 1934.

Senator W. E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Major companies have reduced third and regular grade gasoline prices in Chicago 1 cent, making total reduction of 2½ cents in last 30 days, during which time our cost has increased 1 cent. Prices outside Chicago 4½ cents higher due to no competition. With reduction of hours and increased pay roll this condition will wreck every small independent operator in Chicago, and we ask that some action be taken to correct same.

REFINERS TANK CAR STATION,
Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 20, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Major companies reduced third grade and regular gasoline price Chicago 1 cent, making total reduction of 2½ cents in last 30 days, during which time our costs have increased 1 cent. Prices outside Chicago 4½ cents higher due to no competition. With reduction of hours and increased pay roll this condition will wreck every small independent in Chicago, and we ask that some action be taken to correct this condition.

BULK SERVICE STATIONS, INC.,
2958 North Ashland Avenue.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 20, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH:

The major companies have reduced the retail price of gasoline, while the tank-car price has been raised. The differential between the wholesale buying price and the retail selling price is so small as to necessitate the closing down of the independent wholesaler and retailer, thereby causing an enormous loss of money and putting about 4,000 people out of employment in the petroleum industry.

NATIONAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION,
1147 North Central Park Avenue.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 21, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Standard Oil Co. of Indiana reduced price of third grade and regular gasoline, effective April 17, 1 cent per gallon, making total reduction since March 29, 2½ cents per gallon on these two grades, during which time wholesale price in tank cars has increased 1 cent per gallon, making difference to independent dealers 3½ cents. They did not reduce price of ethyl because they have monopoly on this grade and boycott the independent and refuse to sell him. Under present price structure they have places within a short distance where they are selling these grades at 4½ cents per gallon higher, using profits in these regions to crush independent and small dealers in different cities where they have reduced these prices. With these reductions we believe they are not only violating code by selling below cost but also violating antitrust laws for same reason. Major companies have not shown any desire to cooperate, and we question their sincerity in waiting to stabilize market. Independent and small dealers in Chicago have worked together very successfully to stabilize market and made considerable progress up to March 29, at which time markets were in better shape than they had been for many years. We had movement on foot to increase our price, making smaller differential, and before we could put this into effect they reduced price on all grades 1½ cents per gallon on March 29, notwithstanding we kept them advised of our action, which they ignored. With increase in pay roll and reduction in hours the independent cannot exist with this drastic cut in their retail price, and we ask that some action be taken immediately to correct this situation.

L. M. FOSTER,
President Chicago Individual Brand Petroleum Association, 360 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 21, 1934.

Senator BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Independent operators being wiped out by destructive action of Standard Oil Co. in Chicago; urge immediate investigation secret discounts of 1 to 2 cents given by stations supplied by major companies; make it impossible to hold our business and continue to comply with the code. Many affidavits of violations supplied code committee controlled by major representatives without results.

MARTINI OIL CO.

LONG- AND SHORT-HAUL CLAUSE OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram]

TUCSON, ARIZ., April 20, 1934.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senator, Washington, D.C.

Following resolution passed by Tri-State Meeting, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, assembled in eighth annual convention at Tucson, Ariz., April 18:

"Whereas we feel that section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act as now applied causes unfair competition between the railroads and the waterway; and

"Whereas this contributes to unemployment of railway employees: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Eighth Annual Southwestern Tri-State Union Meeting assembled, do go on record as favoring the modification or repeal of said section 4, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to our international president, Bro. D. B. Robertson, with the request that he communicate it to the national legislative representative and Senators and Congressmen from the Intermountain States and ask their support."

J. P. MORRIS,
Chairman Tri-State Meeting.
R. H. STINSON,
Chairman Arizona State Legislative.

A bill (S. 3430) granting a pension to Margaret Ledgerwood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3431) authorizing a preliminary examination of the lower Columbia River, with a view to the controlling of floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 3432) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior either to purchase certain privately owned lands or to exchange for such lands certain unappropriated and unreserved public lands; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 3433) granting a pension to Blanche T. Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3434) authorizing the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians, located in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, to sue in the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3435) providing for the refacing of the old post-office building at Logan, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ASHURST (by request):

A bill (S. 3436) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain proceedings against the Electro-Metallurgical Co., New-Kanawha Power Co., and the Carbon & Carbide Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 107) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 72 of chapter 23, Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895, relative to the allotment of public documents", approved March 18, 1924; to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3416) to provide for the establishment of the Richmond National Battlefield Park in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INTEREST PAYMENTS ON AMERICAN EMBASSY, IN DRAFTS (S.DOC. NO. 172)

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a message from the President of the United States under date of March 24, 1934, transmitting to Congress a report from the Secretary of State dealing with certain financial matters in connection with the American embassies in Petrograd and Constantinople.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 37 and 40 to the said bill, and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 12, 32, and 43 to the bill, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PAYMENT BY FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a clipping taken from the Washington Herald of April 22, 1934. My reason for making this request is to place before the Senate a truly great historical event. The statement quoted calls our attention to the fact that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will immediately assume its liability to repay depositors in a distressed bank. This is the first time since the establishment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation that that Corporation has found it necessary to come to the aid of a bank. This is significant in a number of ways. First, the historical one; second, the social and economic one; and third, the effect on the people and the banks themselves. Had the threatened closing of a bank been publicly announced a year ago it would have caused a run on practically every bank in the city where the distressed bank was established. There is apparently nothing of that kind today. Then, too, look how quickly action is taken in regard to alleged irregularities. This is undoubtedly due to the helpful influence which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has in our communities. Consider relief from worry which the depositors now enjoy. Consider the saving in anxiety, and consider, above all, the fact that a news announcement concerning a threatened closing of a bank in one of America's big cities is now deemed worthy of but a 4-inch story on an inside page.

Bankers in the city where the distressed bank is located must feel relief and must, I am sure, feel repentant over the fact that none of them could see the blessings of this new-deal legislation until they were made to experience it. Men are frightened of that which they have not experienced. How cheap is the relief from fear if it can be attained at the small cost which the banks have been put to in maintaining the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. It all conjures well for the future of this new-deal legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah to have printed in the RECORD the clipping referred to by him?

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Apr. 22, 1934]

UNITED STATES TO PAY OFF IF BANK CLOSES

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will immediately assume its liability to repay depositors of the Bank of America Trust Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., if it is closed, Chairman Leo T. Crowley said yesterday.

The bank was placed on a restricted basis Friday by Pennsylvania banking authorities in order that an audit and examination may be made. There have been irregularities, and the president has been arrested and indicted, according to reports of State banking authorities.

The bank is a non-Federal Reserve member one and is the first bank belonging to the insurance fund to be placed on a restricted basis.

INDUSTRIES OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY—ADDRESS BY DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a speech by David E. Lilienthal, a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority, entitled "The Future of Industry in the Tennessee Valley Region", delivered before the Tennessee Valley Institute of the University of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn., on April 21, 1934.

This is a splendid address and teems with concrete facts. It shows the wonderful progress that is being made by the Tennessee Valley Authority in the Tennessee Valley. Mr. Lilienthal is admirably equipped for the great work he is doing, and I hope every Senator will read the address in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is my firm conviction that the Tennessee Valley region is to be the scene of an expansion of industry which in the course of the coming decade will change the economic life of the South. If this industrial development is controlled in the interest of the entire community and fitted into a national program, it will stimulate and regenerate the industrial life of all America. We in the Tennesse Valley area, in a very real sense, face a new frontier—an industrial frontier. There lies before us an opportunity for industrial leadership, calling for the courage, the energy, and the self-discipline of the pioneers on the western frontier of a century ago.

It is my purpose this evening to lay before you and my other neighbors in the Tennessee Valley facts and reasons which have led me to the conclusion that we are about to witness in this area a period of industrial expansion unprecedented in its magnitude and opportunities.

I should like, first of all, to enumerate those factors in the economic situation of this great region, upon the foundation of which a period of industrial development will arise. I shall then discuss each of these factors more in detail.

First. We can have in this region low-cost electric power in almost unlimited quantities.

Second. This is an area of natural resources almost unequaled in their variety and richness, not the least of which is a climate most favorable to health and well-being and the successful pursuit of agriculture.

Third is the great potentiality of this area as to economical transportation—water, rail, and highway.

Fourth, and perhaps most important of all, in creating the Tennessee Valley Authority, the President and Congress have made it possible for this area to develop its natural resources, its power, and its transportation in accordance with an integrated and orderly plan. Under such a plan the short-sightedness and greed of individuals and single communities can be controlled, and the interests of the people as a whole kept paramount. Such an integrating and unifying force in the development of industrial resources is unique in our Nation's history.

I turn first to the reason which I have suggested as insuring a period of great industrial expansion for the South—the availability of cheap electric power.

The T.V.A. has under way, as you know, a comprehensive program for the development of the power resources of the Tennessee River and its tributaries. No more ambitious program of hydroelectric development has ever been actually undertaken in this country. Aided by an exhaustive survey prepared by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army under the direction of Col. Harold C. Fiske, the Authority is constructing what probably will be the most efficient system for the utilization of the water resources of a vast area.

As you know, we have started with the nucleus of Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals. Within 2 years two more great dams will be completed—one, the Norris Dam on the headwaters of the Clinch River, near Knoxville; the other, the Joe Wheeler Dam just above the Wilson Dam in northern Alabama. Four other major dams of various types will probably be approved for early construction. A large staff is now planning the dam-building program for the next decade.

Everything considered, the electricity produced in this vast public hydroelectric system will be as cheap as power can be produced in any part of the United States, and much cheaper than in many sections. One reason for this is the efficiency which arises from integrated control of an entire watershed under a single public ownership and administration. That ownership and control is one which is dominated by one purpose and one purpose only—service to the whole people to whom these streams belong. By the use of storage reservoirs and central control, all the vast economies of large-scale production will be utilized, and the Tennessee River and its tributaries will be made to yield their great potential wealth into the hands of the people of the Tennessee Valley. The presence of coal in great quantities for stand-by and auxiliary steam plants will tend to keep the cost of electricity below that possible in areas having favorable hydroelectric power but in which coal is costly.

Perhaps the most important factor in insuring a low cost for hydroelectric power in this region is the fact that the distribution of this power to the factories and homes and farms, for the most part, will be in the hands of public agencies. Industries seeking to use large blocks of hydroelectric power in the Tennessee Valley will not be forced to support dizzy towers of inflated capitalization. They will not have to pay for the financial misdeeds of the builders of utility pyramids. Under public distribution of power with centralized accounting, control, and supervision in the hands of a regional authority there will be the greatest incentive to economy and managerial efficiency. Each community will try to make its record better than that of its neighboring community.

Furthermore, since the operations are public operations, they will be subject to that constant stream of public criticism which, while at times unpleasant to those who are thin-skinned, will insure the most careful scrutiny of operations. This perennial scrutiny of the work of public servants will certainly do more to protect the consumer against inefficiency and excessive rates than the sympathetic wrist-tapping which goes under the name of public-utility regulation in so many States.

It is unnecessary to demonstrate to this audience the importance of low industrial power rates in the development of an industrial program. Since the first month of operations in Tupelo under the T.V.A. schedule of rates put into effect in that Mississippi municipality, we have made comparisons of bills paid by certain industries. These comparisons show in a striking way the results of low-cost power in bringing down operating expenses. I have here a statement of the Reed Bros., Inc., power bill for January 1934 and March 1934. The January billing was under the old rate; the March billing was under the new T.V.A. rate. This statement shows that Reed Bros. in January paid $210.25, while in March under the new schedule they paid $145.38. This meant a reduction of $64.87 in the power bill, or a reduction of 30.8 percent.

In January this company's consumption was 6,580 kilowatt-hours, while in March the consumption was 10,210 kilowatt-hours. In other words, while the amount paid was reduced 30.8 percent, the amount of power consumed increased 55.2 percent. I have here the billings of the McLeran Ice Cream Co. for January and March 1934 power. Under the old rate, this company's billing was $92.19, while under the new rate the billing was $56.23, or a reduction of $35.96, which amounted to 39 percent. In March the power consumption was 26.9 percent greater than the January consumption, yet the cash paid for the power was 39 percent less.

Perhaps the major industry in Tupelo is cotton milling. I have here a statement of the bills of the Tupelo Cotton Mill for January and for March this year. In January, under the old rate, the Tupelo Cotton Mill paid $3,181.33, while for the month of March, under the new Tennessee Valley Authority rate, the billing was $1,896.40, or a decrease of $1,284.93. While the bill for March power used by this mill was 40.4 percent less, the mill, in the same period, consumed 26 percent more power.

The significance of such figures in textile manufacturing is clear. According to the Textile World, the power costs in southern textile mills operating under code requirements range from about 10 to 15 percent of all manufacturing costs, including plant overhead, but excluding cost of raw materials, depreciation charges, and Federal taxes. With this in mind it is easily seen what an important cost factor power rates can be in the South.

It is true that in some other industries the cost of power represents a smaller portion of the total cost of operation, but there are many industries, including those especially adapted to the resources of the valley, such as electrochemical and light metal industries, in which power is a dominant cost factor. It is inevitable that industry will turn to this region as the Tennessee River yields to this program for the development of low-cost power.

Nor is this all. I am advised that there are many lines of industry which cannot now profitably operate because of high power rates; these will find that they can operate and successfully function in this area. To my desk at Knoxville there has come in recent months an impressive number of inquiries from industrialists in various fields requesting specific information concerning T.V.A. power rates and asking advice respecting locations for industrial enterprises requiring large quantities of power. As our program progresses and the country hears, not only of what you and I here in this region plan to do but what we are actually doing, these inquiries will increase and will be translated into actual operations and actual pay rolls.

I have mentioned the happy circumstance of the presence in the Tennessee Valley of great natural resources. I doubt if any other area is so blessed with mineral resources. A mere recitation of the list of these resources is impressive. In fuels we have coal, lignite, petroleum, and natural gas. Our heavy metals include iron ores, manganese, chromium, and nickel; and our light metals are aluminum, magnesium, and beryllium. There are other metals, such as zinc, lead, and tin. Of cement materials we produce limestone, shale, clay, gypsum, lime, and slag. Similarly, this area has stone, sand, gravel, chert, and asphalt. There is an abundance of fertilizers, including phosphate, potash, schists and shales, green sand, niter, gypsum, lime, byproduct ammonia and atmospheric nitrogen. There are the chemicals, salt, lime, alum, coal tar, and pyrite. For ceramics we have clay, shales, kaolin, and feldspar. Our pigments are ocher, metallic paint, pyrite, barite, carbon black, zinc white, coal-tar colors, and slate colors. Abrasives found here are bauxite, corundum, emery, garnet, and sand. Refractories and insulators include cyanite, asbestos, mica, fire clays, bauxite, olivine, and vermiculite. In addition to these materials there are the miscellaneous items of talc, graphite, Fuller's earth, glass sand, and bentonite. According to statistics compiled by the United States Bureau of Mines for the year 1929, the total mineral production of seven States which are in part included in the Tennessee Valley area amounted to something over $300,000,000. These resources will play a major role in the South's industrial expansion.

We have learned that unless agriculture is on a sound basis and the farming population prospers, the whole community suffers—not merely the farmers but those who depend on industry for a livelihood as well. It is, therefore, a matter of prime concern in the development of any industrial program that the agriculture of the region be regenerated and readjusted. This emphasis upon agriculture is being carried on largely through the labors of my associate and your neighbor, Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan. The Authority's fertilizer program under Dr. Morgan's charge has the most far-reaching implications in the establishment of a prosperous agriculture. His work to establish a companionship between agriculture and small-scale industry is another means to the same end. The Authority's rural electrification program leads in the same direction. In short, nowhere in the United States will there be such realistic concentration on the economic problems of agriculture as in the Tennessee Valley area in the coming decade. To a far-sighted industrialist this policy will be a compelling factor when he comes to consider the entry into industrial operations in this region.

Distribution costs in many industries determine whether the results of operation will be a profit or a red figure and unemployment for the workers of the industry. Transportation methods and costs are now being seriously studied by most intelligent industrialists. The Tennessee Valley area has advantages in the matter of transportation, some of them not adequately recognized. Obviously no integrated plan for regional development can be complete without an analysis of our transportation situation, and a preliminary study is under way.

To weave together all these favorable factors, to aid in charting the course of the development of this region in an orderly and effective manner was a major purpose of President Roosevelt in urging the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. It is the duty and the unique opportunity of the Authority to join with all the Valley's forces and those of the Nation in forwarding this great industrial expansion which can mean so much to the future well-being of the men and women of the South.

The ways in which the T.V.A. can function in carrying forward this program of industrial expansion are many. In some capacities it will act as a proprietor, such as in the case of its electric operations. In others it will furnish the disinterested technical advice of engineers, accountants, and business men. In still other capacities it will seek to smooth out those jealousies and rivalries between cities which lead to destructive animosities and prevent healthy industrial development. In stimulating and aiding the readjustment of agriculture the Authority will be exercising a function which will make for a sounder industrial future. Through the Nation-wide publicity given the Authority's operations, the advantages of the region will receive the widest attention of business men the country over.

I am very definitely of the opinion that it is the Authority's duty to encourage and stimulate the growth of large-scale industry in the Tennessee Valley area. We are making provision for one of the largest hydroelectric developments in the world, with a potential 3,000,000 horsepower available. We are expending and expect to expend millions upon millions of dollars in construction activities, all looking toward the development of more and more power. Although we are bending every effort to greatly increase the use of electricity in the home and on the farm, it is obvious that only a large-scale industrial expansion will absorb the great pool of power which is thus being created. As we lay our plans for developing this cheap power in great quantities, it seems to me to be mandatory that we also lay plans for utilizing it in an industrial expansion program.

There is nothing inconsistent in urging the development of large-scale industry and at the same time promoting, as we are, a program of small-scale industry in connection with agriculture. There is no conflict in these two aspects of a single program. The two develop side by side. This is not the appropriate occasion to discuss in detail the particular kinds of industry and the special types of operation which I believe should characterize this industrial expansion nor to indicate the hopeful prospects already near at hand for decentralization of great industrial operations. The point I should like to make now is to repeat my conviction that it is the Authority's duty as well as its privilege to encourage the growth of large-scale industry.

This program should be based squarely upon the obvious economic benefits which industry will enjoy in the area. It should be based upon the factors of cheap hydroelectric power and an abundance of mineral and other natural resources. It will be a sad day for southern industry if the presence of a new factory here means merely the creation of an industrial graveyard in New England or some other section. What I see for this area is an economically sound growth of commerce and manufacturing, which will fit itself into a national economy. It seems to me that it would be no less than fatal and destructive to the entire program if industry were to come to the valley on any other basis than the natural advantages of the region. The South has ample inducement to offer on strictly business merits of the advantages found here. I believe that we all recognize that the South today needs no false lures to win the industrial development which should naturally be here.

I view the whole question of proper exploitation of the mineral resources of the Tennessee Valley as pertinent to this new industrial program. Two phases of this matter deserve attention.

First, in the development of mineral resources during the past decade science has been giving increasingly greater attention to the chemical development of minerals as opposed to purely mechanical processes. As a result of this, we may, therefore, expect our own developments to lead us into the creation of new products and into the use of new raw materials.

Second, through the ability of the Tennessee Valley Authority to supply low-cost electric energy and the presence of low-cost energy from other sources, we are not merely supplying a cheaper source of mechanical power but we are making possible the development of electrochemical and electrometallurgical industries which heretofore have been impossible of profitable operation owing to the high cost of electric energy employed in the process.

These two considerations open up entirely new fields for the consideration of industrialists and chemists in the future development of the mineral resources of the valley.

In speaking of the industrial future of the South I should be less frank if I failed to point out that there is a serious question in the minds of many able men as to whether large-scale industry should be encouraged. There are many thoughtful and earnest observers of our economic life who are convinced, or nearly so, that the industrial system has forfeited its claim to supporters. These observers point to the evils of unemployment, of poverty, of insecurity, to the tragic fluctuations called "depressions." Struck with the cruelty of these things, they suggest that it might be better to go back to an ideal of a self-contained economy—an economy in which handcraft and small industry take the place of large-scale manufacturing operations and the interchange of goods. I do not share this foreboding, nor do I see an avenue of escape from our problems in the economic order they propose. It seems to me plain that our first duty must be in some way to increase the flow of goods, for it is only in terms of goods that we are hungry or well fed, are able to enjoy life's riches or have them denied. To say that we must turn our backs upon an industrial system which has given us potentially an abundance of goods greater than the world has ever known before seems to me the preaching of a philosophy of defeat. It is not the abundance of goods that makes men starve in the presence of plenty. A return to scarcity would not better the lot of all.

The evils of the industrial system are many. But the fact remains that there is only one way to raise the standard of living, and that is by an increase in the quantity of goods and their equitable distribution. The income of our people in terms of goods must be increased, or all our hopes must die. And large-scale industry, controlled in the interest of the community, can provide us that increased flow of goods.

I am particularly encouraged over the future of large-scale industry, because I believe an aroused public will demand that public control protect us against the industrial and financial excess which led to the economic collapse of 1929. Under leadership of the President of the United States this Nation is now in the process of developing practical ways and means of exerting upon industry a community control—a control exercised for the benefit of the entire community, including industry itself. That the President's program is beset with many difficulties is patent, but it has been notable that in the Tennessee Valley, by and large, the necessity has been accepted; what remains is the laborious and trying task of applying such a cooperative program to the infinite details of modern business.

The new industrial period which lies ahead for the Tennessee Valley has this great advantage: It is initiated at a time when business men everywhere have come to recognize that only by a wise and just distribution of the products of industry can mass production survive, and that only by wise and just control of industry can this stimulation of purchasing power be sustained.

To so aid in the reorganization of our community life that industry will become the servant of the community and not its master, to become the means to an end and not the end itself, is one of the most serious duties to which, in my judgment, the Tennessee Valley Authority must address itself.

"THE RUIN OF THE STATES"—EDITORIAL FROM RICHMOND NEWS LEADER

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Richmond News Leader, of Richmond, Va., entitled "The Ruin of the States."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Richmond News-Leader, Apr. 20, 1934]

THE RUIN OF THE STATES

"I see, as you do, and with the deepest affliction, the rapid strides with which the Federal branch of our Government is advancing toward the usurpation of all the rights reserved to the States, and, the consolidation in itself of all powers, foreign and domestic; and that, too, by constructions which, if legitimate, leave no limits to their power.

"Take together the decisions of the Federal court, the doctrines of the President, and the misconstructions of the constitutional compact acted on by the Legislature of the Federal branch, and it is but too evident, that the three ruling branches of that department are in combination to strip their colleagues, the State authorities, of the powers reserved by them, and to exercise themselves all functions, foreign and domestic.

"Under the power to regulate commerce, they assume indefinitely that also over agriculture and manufactures, and call it regulation to take the earnings of one of these branches of industry, and that, too, the most depressed, and put them into the pockets of the other, the most flourishing of all.

"Under the authority to establish post roads, they claim that of cutting down mountains for the construction of roads, of digging canals, and aided by a little sophistry on the words 'general welfare', a right to do, not only the acts to effect that, which are specifically enumerated and permitted, but whatsoever they shall think, or pretend will be for the general welfare."

This quotation is remarkable because it is applicable in every line to the situation that exists today. Yet the language is that of Thomas Jefferson, and the date of this extract, from a letter to Senator William B. Giles, is December 26, 1825.

No less remarkable is this quotation because the rights of the States, which Jefferson feared the Federal Government would soon extinguish, were preserved, in large part, for a century. The "Sage of Monticello" was alarmed when he wrote. He foresaw secession, though, in later paragraphs of the letter, he urged that the States exhaust every effort to preserve the Constitution before they quit the Union. Ahead of the country was nullification, the slavery agitation, the rise of the Republican Party, the conflict of the '60's, the reconstruction acts, the fuller development of the interstate-commerce clause, and the great accretions of Federal power from the war and industrial revolution. Through it all, States' rights somehow survived. It is only now, and oddly enough under a President of the party founded by Jefferson, that the final surrender by the States seems at hand.

How were the rights of the States kept alive? The answer, it seems to us, is that, for two generations, wise men heeded the advice Jefferson gave Giles. "The States", he said, "should be watchful to note every material usurpation of their rights; to denounce them as they occur in the most peremptory terms; to protest against them as wrongs to which our present submission shall be considered, not as acknowledgments or precedents of right but as a temporary yielding to the lesser evil * * *."

So long as that policy was maintained, the rights of the States, though reduced, were not destroyed. Even today the danger lies less in the vigorous assertion of the doctrine of centralization than in the unresisting acceptance of that doctrine by those who should resist it. Where in the entire Nation is there a Commonwealth that seeks to maintain its rights by the simplest, most effective method—that of discharging its duties? Subsidies have seduced States that violence could not overwhelm. Jefferson's own Virginia had formulated in 1799 the doctrine of States' rights in the famous resolutions of protest against the alien and sedition laws. This same Virginia now sees her Governor riding to Washington and waiting on a bureaucrat—not to say what Virginia will undertake for the protection of her needy but to ask how little she must do in order to have Federal agents dispense Federal funds.

The blind are leading the blind. Esau is selling his birthright for the pottage of F.E.R.A. To avoid a small temporary deficit, the Commonwealth of Virginia is surrendering essential rights at the same time that she is evading solemn duties.

Other States are making the same fatal error. They do not read the signs of the time. Nor do they perceive that when they accept the subsidies of the Federal Government and permit its agents to administer relief they are rendering as dire disservice to the Nation as to themselves.

Already one hears everywhere, in tones of apology, "We must wait on Washington", or, "We cannot get a decision from Washington." Everyone knows that the Federal administration is stalled in its own red tape. Congressmen are swamped with letters from constituents who find all their public business centering in Washington. The enforcement of N.I.R.A. is close to collapse because General Johnson has heretofore insisted on keeping all the reins in his own hands. In destroying the States, there is danger that we shall likewise destroy the efficiency of the Federal Government. The ruins of the States may be the graveyard of the Nation.

CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT—ARGUMENT BY WILLIAM D. GUTHRIE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very able argument by William D. Guthrie, Esq., of the New York bar, on the subject of the Federal child-labor amendment.

There being no objection, the argument was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FEDERAL CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

To the Legislature of the State of New York:

Reply to the recent review entitled "A Statement by Lawyers", published by the Non-Partisan Committee for Ratification of the Federal child-labor amendment and released to the press April 2, 1934, in which they state the reasons why they believe the amendment should be ratified, and discuss the opposition thereto which they declare "has been voiced by certain prominent lawyers and also by a vote of the American Bar Association."

This Statement by Lawyers is made under eight points, numbered I to VIII, and it will be discussed in like order.

I. As to the action of State legislatures since June 2, 1924

In point I of the Statement by Lawyers it is set forth that the amendment was proposed on June 2, 1924, and that it has been ratified to date by 20 States, but no mention whatever is made of the defeat of the amendment in 1924–25, or of the rejections during the 10 years since 1924. Hence, the statement is not complete, and is therefore possibly misleading, although unintentionally so. The whole truth has been repeatedly published and was readily ascertainable. Thus, the proposed amendment was ratified in 1924 by 1 State and rejected by 3 States; in 1925 it was ratified by 3 States and rejected by 32 States; in 1926 no State ratified, and it was rejected by 2 States; in 1927 it was ratified by 1 State and rejected by 1 State; in 1928, 1929, and 1930 there were no ratifications or rejections; in 1931 it was ratified by 1 State and rejected by none; in 1932 there were no ratifications or rejections; in 1933 it was ratified by 14 States, and although unsuccessfully reintroduced in 11 States, no action was taken or it was rejected by one house. In 1934, however, it has not been ratified by any State, and has been rejected by 7 States.

There is, furthermore, no reference in the Statement by Lawyers to the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Dillon v. Gloss (256 U.S. 368, 372, 374–375), to the effect that "the ratification [of a proposed amendment] must be within some reasonable time after the proposal"; nor any discussion or challenge of the opinion which had been expressed by lawyers that more than a reasonable time had elapsed since June 2, 1924, when in 1933 State legislatures attempted to resurrect the amendment and to ratify it, although in 1924 and 1925 it had been affirmatively rejected.

It should be again pointed out that the 21 amendments to the Constitution of the United States were all ratified within a reasonable time, the shortest periods being 8 months and 20 days as to the first 10 amendments and 9 months and 13 days as to the recent twenty-first amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment, and the longest period ever taken for ratification being 3 years and a half with respect to the sixteenth or income-tax amendment.

It should also be noted that when the attempted ratifications were obtained in 1933, which in most instances were reversals of prior due rejections, it had long been generally assumed that the amendment had been definitely and finally defeated. The opposition, which had so effectively defeated ratification in 1924 and 1925, was no longer actively functioning. However, as soon as it was realized that the amendment was being "ressurrected", to apply the term used by the Supreme Court in Dillon v. Gloss, the opposition was reorganized and full information as to the import of and objections to the amendment thereupon submitted to the State legislatures. The result has been that not a single State has ratified the amendment in 1934, although attempted in many States, and that when brought to a vote in seven States it has been defeated and rejected by one or both houses of the legislature, viz: Kentucky, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia.

The Statement by Lawyers declares that the proposed grant of power "to limit, regulate, and prohibit", is phrased in general terms and as such is similar to the grant of power in the Federal Constitution to borrow money on the credit of the United States, to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, to coin money, and to declare war. But it is not mentioned that it has long been the settled rule of construction that each of these express grants of power, although in general terms, may be exercised by Congress to its utmost extent and does not depend on the degree to which it may be exercised. Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1, 196), and Brown v. Maryland (12 Wheat., 419, 439). This is the real point voiced by certain prominent lawyers and also by a vote of the American Bar Association.

II. As to the difference in form between the eighteenth amendment and the proposed child-labor amendment

It is quite true that the proposed Federal child-labor amendment is different in form from the eighteenth amendment; but this only intensifies its objectionable character. The amendment now proposed would constitute an unlimited grant of power in general terms, whilst the eighteenth amendment was expressly limited to the prohibition of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and purported to grant to Congress only a concurrent power of enforcement. Nevertheless, these plain limitations upon the grant of power to Congress were wholly disregarded and nullified by Congress and all limitations repudiated by it, and the Supreme Court could not give any relief or exercise any restraint because, as stated in one of the cases brought before it for relief, "this would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread upon legislative ground." (Unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court in Everard's Breweries v. Day, 265 U.S. 545, 559. See also The National Prohibition cases, 253 U.S. 350, and Lambert v. Yellowley, 272 U.S. 581.)

It should follow that the proposed Federal child-labor amendment, phrased in general terms and granting unlimited power to Congress, is exercisable to its utmost extent and at the will of those in whose hands it is placed, and is in a form much more objectionable and dangerous than the eighteenth amendment, and, therefore, avoids none of the difficulties which were inherent in the eighteenth amendment.

The plea that we can safely and unconcernedly transfer to Congress the unlimited power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age and grant it control over the labor of children and youths in all the families of the United States and put our trust and only reliance in the reasonableness and restraint of the present and future Congresses, ought surely to be sufficiently refuted by the example of the Volstead Act and its amendments, which unreasonably and oppressively fixed upon all the States a reign of oppression and terrorism which Governor Smith has truly characterized as a curse.

An amendment which in form prohibited children from being employed or permitted to work in hazardous or unhealthful occupations was proposed and rejected. Yet it would have been infinitely preferable and safer than the present proposed grant of unlimited power over the labor of all persons under the age of 18 years. Under the census of 1930 these persons number approximately more than one third of the continental population of the United States, of which 4,663,137 were listed as then 16 and under 18 years of age, 4,678,084 as 14 and under 16, 4,802,450 as 12 and under 14, and 26,681,241 as under 12.

The figures of the 1930 census for the State of New York were 420,052 between 16 and 18, 421,279 between 14 and 16, 438,138 between 12 and 14, and 2,502,631 under 12.

III. State governmental power over minors

The Statement by Lawyers then declares (1) that the "governmental power with respect to child labor is not new" and (2) that "the States have always possessed greater power than is conferred on Congress by the amendment."

(1) It is well known that every State in the Union has legislated for the regulation of child labor and protection of young children, although these regulations differ according to local climate, conditions, standards, experience, and resources. Local self-government has steadily tended to protect children and prevent their employment in hazardous or unhealthful occupations or under conditions imperiling their morals; but no State constitution, so far as the undersigned can recall, has ever granted to its legislature any such unlimited power as is now proposed to be granted to Congress, and certainly it is doubtful whether any such unlimited power could be constitutionally exercised as to youths, male and female, between 14 and 18.

At any rate, such power could be more efficiently and reliably exercised by the States as part of their system of local self-government than could be expected at the hands of bureaus in Washington. The disgraceful failure of the Washington bureaus in their attempts to enforce the eighteenth amendment should warn against turning the control of the labor of the youths and children of the entire United States, Territories, and insular possessions (total population in 1930 being 137,008,435) to Federal bureaucrats directed from Washington, who would probably be just as fanatical, offensive, and incompetent and just as much political appointees as were the many thousands charged with the enforcement of the provisions of the Volstead Act and its amendments.

It is impracticable at present in this reply to review the legislation of the several States with respect to child labor. Such legislation varies as local self-government will inevitably vary throughout the United States because of differences in climate, public policy, standards of living, resources, living costs, prevailing wage scales, taxes, etc. The proposed amendment is desired either (1) by those who are impatiently seeking to centralize all governmental power and patronage in Washington and eliminate the Federal principle under which the country has progressed and prospered for a century and a half, or (2) by those who do not understand the virtues and necessity of local self-government in matters affecting the families and children of the several States, Territories, and insular possessions.

It was in 1819 that Chief Justice Marshall warned the country as follows (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 403):

"No political dreamer was ever wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass."

Nevertheless, Washington bureaus are now constantly striving to do this by increasing and expanding the Federal power and curtailing and invading the governmental power of the States; perhaps without realizing what they are doing. Those who still have any doubts as to the purpose and effect of the activities of Washington bureaucrats, male and female, in their campaign for expansion of the Federal power and their constant reach for more and more power and political patronage in curtailment and nullification of State power, should read Congressman JAMES M. BECK'S discussion of the subject published in 1932 under the title "Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy", and the review more recently published by Mr. Sterling E. Edmunds, of the St. Louis bar, under the title "The Federal Octopus in 1933." They should also read the New Despotism, by Lord Hewart, Chief Justice of England.

(2) The second affirmation above quoted is that "the States have always possessed greater power than is conferred on Congress by the amendment." If it be meant by this that the States have always possessed greater power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age, the proposition is clearly untenable and plainly unsound. There is in fact no conceivable power over labor that can possibly be greater than the power to limit, regulate, and prohibit. There is no State legislature that has ever had or exercised any such unlimited power as the proposed amendment would vest in Congress, and no State has ever even attempted any such far-reaching and sweeping prohibition. Then, wherein will be found the necessity or excuse for a grant of such unlimited power to Congress?

Taking up each argument contained in the Statement by Lawyers under their point II, the following may be replied:

(a) No State has ever prohibited the labor of persons between 14 and 18 years of age except in hazardous and unhealthful or morally objectionable occupations.

(b) No State has ever granted to an administrative body of the State the unlimited power to prohibit the employment of all minors under 18. Such grants have always been reasonably limited.

(c) Every State—and not merely 35 States—has some legislative provision regulating the labor of minors with respect to age, hours of work day or night, and hazardous or unhealthful occupations; but these regulations vary according to the public policy or conditions in the particular State and in no case prohibit all labor of persons under 18 years of age.

No mention whatever is made in the Statement of Lawyers of the great and beneficent progress that has steadily been taking place during the past 30 years in reducing the employment of young children in industries. Some States may be deemed still backward in comparison with the more advanced States, such as New York. But this diversity is principally the result of local differences of conditions, climate, cost of living, supply of labor, prevailing scale of wages, taxes, etc., and creates no necessity for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

IV. Control of child labor is not a proper power to grant to the Federal Government

The fourth point of the Statement by Lawyers declares that the control of child labor is a proper power to be granted to the Federal Government. However, in supporting this declaration they confess and disclose the main motive and true impetus behind the amendment, which is not to safeguard and care for children and youths by preventing injurious and objectionable labor, but to regulate and prevent competition. Thus the lawyers assert that "the diversity of State legislation has resulted in inequitable conditions and unfair competition for industry." All pretense as to safeguarding the health, morals, or welfare of children and youths is now abandoned or put to one side and made secondary and the true motive at last confessed, namely, that the Constitution of the United States is being sought to be radically amended in order to equalize labor conditions and competition throughout the entire United States. Obviously the very same reasoning, if sound, would support an amendment providing that the labor of adults should be limited, regulated, and prohibited by Congress in order to set aside State legislation which the lawyers conceive has resulted in inequitable conditions and unfair competition. Such, as is well known, has been the constant aim and purpose of the Knights of Labor, the American Federation of Labor, and the labor unions, namely, to have Congress ultimately vested with power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of adults, although the first step or entering wedge is to be the prohibition of all labor by minors in competition with adults. See House Document No. 551, 1928, pages 135–136, cited at page 56 of argument heretofore submitted to the legislature by the undersigned.

Surely it must be a self-evident proposition that if it be a sound ground for the ratification of the child-labor amendment that the diversity of State legislation has resulted in inequitable conditions and unfair competition for industry in the several States, then exactly the same ground, if sound, would justify and call for an amendment granting to Congress the power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of all persons, adult as well as minor, throughout the United States, including the hours of labor, the scale of pay, collective bargaining, etc. If the control of child labor is a proper power to grant to the Federal Government, in order, as these lawyers actually contend, to prevent diversity of State legislation resulting in equitable conditions and unfair competition for industry in the several States, then equally persuasive, if not conclusive, will be the claim of adult labor and the American Federation of Labor and the labor unions that the entire control of labor and industry should be vested in Congress and the bureaus centered in Washington. If such a precedent be now established, little will remain of our Federal system, and, as Chief Justice Fuller said, dissenting in the Lottery case (188 U.S. 321, 375):

"Our form of government may remain, notwithstanding legislation or decision; but, as long ago observed, it is with governments, as with religions, the form may survive the substance of the faith."

V. As to education

The fifth point of the Statement by Lawyers is that the power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age does not include the power to control education. They argue that "labor and education are separate subjects of legislation"; that "the proposed amendment confines the grant of power to labor"; and that, under the tenth amendment, "the power to control education would therefore rest with the individual States, where it is at present."

As stated in my argument already submitted, reference to the dictionaries will show that the long-established and still current definition of the noun "labor" is: "Physical or mental toil; bodily or intellectual exertion * * * Human effort, bodily or mental * * * That which requires or has required bodily or intellectual exertion or effort for its accomplishment." And the definition of the verb is: "To exert one's powers of body or mind" (Webster's New International Dictionary). It is true that colloquially the word "labor" is somewhat generally used to denominate physical toil and manual work. Nevertheless, as stated in Corpus Juris (vol. 35, p. 924), "in some extended senses, the term may include every possible human exertion, mental and physical, whether it is skilled or unskilled labor; application of the mind which occasions weariness; exertion of mental powers, united with bodily employment; intellectual exertion; mental effort. Hence, labor may be physical or intellectual, or a combination of the two." See also Bouvier's Law Dictionary and the New Century Dictionary, Century Dictionary and Enclyclopedia, New English Dictionary, New Standard Dictionary of the English Language, the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, and the Universal English Dictionary.

Every recognized and authoritative dictionary of the English language in one form or another defines the word "labor" substantially as above.

The Statement by Lawyers, however, brushes this all aside with the comment that "a dictionary definition, selected arbitrarily from one of several definitions given, is not a valid basis on which to determine a statutory meaning."

It must be borne in mind, as recently declared by the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, in her address on February 21 before the Legislature of Kentucky, urging ratification (the Kentucky Legislature thereupon rejected the amendment), that the proposed amendment was drafted under the advice of distinguished lawyers. These lawyers must be presumed to have duly considered the definitions of the word "labor", which they were apparently advising should be substituted for the word "employment." They had before them the precedents of the acts of Congress of 1916 and 1919, both of which used the phrase general in State child-labor statutes, viz, "employed or permitted to work" (Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251, Child Labor Tax Case, 259 U.S. 20). If these distinguished and scholarly lawyers had intended to confine the amendment to physical or manual labor, or labor for hire, as now claimed, they certainly would have used apt wording and such as would be appropriate to express a limited meaning. Is it not fairly and reasonably inconceivable that they did not know the current definitions of the word "labor" as including mental or intellectual effort?

The construction of the term "labor" as used in the proposed amendment will be for determination by Congress in the first instance and ultimately by the Supreme Court. The questions will then be, primarily, whether or not the regulation of attendance at school of persons under 18 years of age is a legitimate regulation of their "labor", that is, mental or intellectual labor, and secondarily, if not within the express grant of power to regulate the labor of persons under 18 years of age, then whether or not the incidental grant of power to Congress contained in clause 18 of section VIII of article I of the Constitution would authorize the regulation of the mental or intellectual labor of these minors. The exact wording of this constitutional clause should be recalled, viz:

"The Congress shall have power * * *. To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

If, for example, Congress should determine to "prohibit the labor of all persons under 18 years of age", as provided in the bill now pending in the House of Representatives and introduced by Congressman RICH on January 3, then the question would at once be presented as to the reasonable necessity and propriety of providing schooling or education for the many millions of minors, male and female, between 14 and 18 years of age thus reduced to idleness and their inevitable moral deterioration and vices by being deprived of the right and liberty to labor and earn or help earn their living or acquire the capacity to earn their living by laboring as apprentices, etc. Will the lawyers issuing the statement above mentioned, or the lawyers cited by the Secretary of Labor in her Kentucky address, express the opinion that any such provision by Congress for the occupation of youths, male and female, when it prohibited their physical labor and reduced them to physical idleness, would be unconstitutional? As Chief Justice Marshall said in McCulloch v. State of Maryland (4 Wheat., 316, 402, 423):

"It would require no ordinary share of intrepidity to assert that a measure adopted under these circumstances was a bold and plain usurpation, to which the Constitution gave no countenance. * * * But where the law is not prohibited and is really calculated to effect any of the objects entrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground. This court disclaims all pretensions to such a power."

But it is contended in the Statement by Lawyers that the subject of education is not mentioned in the Constitution, and that it is, therefore, excluded from the power of Congress by the tenth amendment, apparently overlooking clause 18 above quoted. The very same point was made and overruled long ago in the McCulloch case. This contention not only disregards the express grant of unlimited and unqualified power of limitation, regulation, and prohibition of labor proposed in the pending Federal child-labor amendment to be vested in Congress, but it wholly misapprehends the scope of the tenth amendment as heretofore understood and construed. Thus Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, declared (sec. 1908):

"It is plain, therefore, that it could not have been the intention of the framers of this amendment to give it effect as an abridgment of any of the powers granted under the Constitution, whether they are express or implied, direct or incidental. Its sole design is to exclude any interpretation by which other powers should be assumed beyond those which are granted. All that are granted in the original instrument, whether express or implied, whether direct or incidental, are left in their original state. All powers not delegated (not all powers not expressly delegated) and not prohibited are reserved. The attempts, then, which have been made from time to time to force upon this language an abridging or restrictive influence are utterly unfounded in any just rules of interpreting the words or the sense of the instrument. Stripped of the ingenious disguises in which they are clothed, they are neither more nor less than attempts to foist into the text the word 'expressly', to qualify what is general, and obscure what is clear and defined. They make the sense of the passage bend to the wishes and prejudices of the interpreter, and employ criticism to support a theory and not to guide it * * *."

VI. As to military service

The same argument answers the point no. VI in the Statement by Lawyers, in which they say that the contention that Congress would have power to require military service in order to furnish occupation to the young men between 16 and 18 whom they might reduce to idleness by prohibiting them from laboring would not be worthy of consideration except for the fact that it has been advanced by persons whose high position in American life tends to give confidence in their utterances. The statement then proceeds to declare that "to claim that, under the guise of protective labor legislation, Congress would seek to require military service or training for boys under 18 years is an utter absurdity." The reasoning or logic of these lawyers appears to be that because Congress has always had the power to raise and support armies and has never exercised this power with regard to persons under 18 years of age, therefore it would not have the power to provide military training for the youths between 14 and 18 years of age whom it might see fit to prohibit from being employed in labor as provided in the pending Rich bill, and thus subject to all the vices and corruptions of idleness.

Of course, what was meant by "the persons of high position", familiar as they were with our constitutional history, was that, if Congress prohibited the physical labor of such youths, then it would have power to furnish reasonable and most healthful occupation and discipline through military training, which might become a most beneficial and salutary exercise of the power and duty of Congress to avoid the vices and degenerations which would otherwise inevitably result from any prohibition of labor by young men from 14 to 18 and to promote those manly virtues which are generally the result and benefit of military training and discipline. To characterize such a view as an utter absurdity requires, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall, "no ordinary share of intrepidity."

VII. As to the labor of children in the home or on the home farm

The Statement by Lawyers, in its point VII, proceeds to assert that "the fear that if the amendment were ratified Congress would regulate the labor of children in the household or on the home farm, or that it would prohibit all gainful employment for persons under 18 years of age, is unfounded. Although the States have always possessed the power to prohibit all employment under 18 years of age, no State has ever done so."

As the States have always had the power and no State has ever yet found it necessary to prohibit all employment of persons under 18 years of age, why now grant that unlimited power to Congress? Certainly this uniform consensus and practice on the subject throughout the entire United States furnish a demonstration that nowhere has there ever been found reason or excuse for such a drastic and unlimited exercise of power over persons under 18 years of age. If no State has ever done so, or has yet found it necessary or excusable or desirable to exercise such an unlimited, all-inclusive, drastic, and possibly oppressive power to prohibit labor, why now grant it to Congress? As Senator Root has well said in a recent letter:

"It seems incredible to me that our legislature should be willing to abandon their own authority in such a vastly important field of local regulation and transfer that authority to men living thousands of miles away."

It is with all deference submitted that the 13 lawyers issuing this professional advice to the public should have appreciated that they were not called upon as lawyers to discuss or express opinions as to fears or apprehensions, nor as to what they conceived to be probable or likely, but as to what would be the constitutional power of Congress under the proposed amendment. That, and that alone, was the ground stated or voiced "by certain prominent lawyers and also by a vote of the American Bar Association."

The lawyers illustrate their view by referring at page 9 to State legislation, including that of the State of New York as to hazardous occupations, such as work in coal mines, about dangerous machinery, with explosives, etc., and they state that the child-labor provisions of many of the N.R.A. codes also regulate the employment of minors under 18 in dangerous occupations. They proceed to assert that—

"It was the need for dealing with such hazardous work that led the framers of the pending amendment to give power to Congress to deal with child labor up to 18 years of age instead of limiting such power to 16 years."

And they then quote Secretary of Agriculture Wallace as having stated:

"Coming from an agricultural State I am familiar with the attempts of opponents of the amendment to arouse farmers against it on the ground that farm boys and girls would no longer be permitted to help with the chores, and that the parents' authority over their children would be seriously impaired. Of course this is nonsense, and every fair-minded person who knows anything at all about the proposed amendment knows that it is nonsense. The amendment is directed at protecting children from industrialized and commercialized employment which endangers their health and interferes with their schooling. Farm chores done outside of school hours and suited to the age and physical capacity of the youngsters certainly do not come under the heading of industrialized and commercialized employment."

Yet, to the contrary are the facts with regard to the intention and purpose of the framers of the proposed child labor amendment, as could readily and conclusively have been ascertained by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It ought surely to be evident that the proposed Federal child-labor amendment, if ever ratified, would have to be interpreted and construed in accordance with the purpose and intention of its framers in 1924, and not according to the much more moderate views and assurances now professed and held forth by its advocates after the lapse of 10 years. The good faith or integrity of purpose of the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture are not questioned or challenged, except to point out and insist that their present professions and promises of reasonableness and moderation will be quite immaterial and irrelevant in determining the construction of the amendment as proposed in 1924. Indeed, the present declarations and opinions of the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture quite convincingly indicate that they are either under the misapprehension or delusion that their present reasonable and qualified intentions and promises would control and limit the interpretations of the proposed amendment, or else that they have not taken the pains to study the proceedings in Congress which resulted in the proposal of the amendment as set forth in the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This may likewise possibly be true of the signers of the Statement by Lawyers, for otherwise they would hardly have cited the statement by the Secretary of Agriculture as printed on page 10 of their published statement.

In the Senate the following substitute was moved (S.J.Res. 256):

"The Congress shall have power to prohibit or to regulate the hours of labor in mines, quarries, mills, canneries, workshops, factories, or manufacturing establishments of persons under 18 years of age, and of women."

This was rejected, although it would have covered the provisions of the acts of Congress of 1916 and 1919, which had been held to be unconstitutional, as well as covered the present suggestion of these lawyers as to hazardous occupations.

In the House the following proviso was moved by Representative MCSWAIN, of South Carolina:

"Provided, That no law shall control the labor of any child in the house or business or on the premises connected therewith of the parent or parents."

This proviso was rejected.

Then the same Representative moved a simpler form:

"But no law enacted under this article shall affect in any way the labor of any child or children on the farm of the parent or parents."

This also was rejected.

And Representative Moore, of Virginia, offered the following substitute:

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 16 years of age, but not the labor of such persons in the homes and on the farms where they reside."

But this amendment was rejected.

Thereupon the child-labor amendment was proposed to the State legislatures in its most extreme and unlimited form, granting power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

Plainly, no such all-inclusive and unlimited power, far beyond any existing State child labor law, was necessary to accomplish the limited purposes now advanced or professed as its object and the limited restrictions or regulations now asserted to be the intention of the amendment.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD further conclusively shows as follows:

1. That the word "persons" was substituted for the original word "child" because the proponents were advised by counsel that a youth, male or female, over 14 and under 18 years of age, was not legally or properly speaking included within the definition of a "child."

2. The word "employment", or its customary State statutory equivalent "employed or permitted to work", as used in the acts of Congress of 1916 and 1919, were rejected because the proponents wanted power to reach right into the home and control the unpaid work there of children. The chief of the Children's Bureau, speaking for the proponents of the amendment, testified before the Senate Committee that as "the children often work with their parents and are not on the pay roll and are not held to be employed, and we feel that it is a dangerous word to use, as far as the protection of children is concerned."

In the House of Representatives Miss Abbott testified that the proposed amendment included the power to regulate labor upon the farms and in agriculture and just as much regulatory power as to farming as would be given with regard to mines or any other work or occupation and would make no exception at all. (House Hearings, p. 36.)

And yet the Statement by Lawyers quotes and holds forth as a reliable statement of the intention of the framers and of the power of Congress the above-quoted statement by the Secretary of Agriculture.

If the purpose and intent of the amendment, as proposed in 1924, had been only to vest power in Congress reasonably and qualifiedly to limit or regulate, as is now provided in some of the N.R.A. codes, why did the distinguished lawyers who were guiding the proponents in 1924 advise inserting the power not merely to limit and regulate, but the unlimited power to prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age?

If the purpose and intent of the amendment, as proposed in 1924, had been, as now asserted by Secretary of Labor Miss Perkins and Secretary Wallace, only to extend jurisdiction over children or youths working for hire, or in hazardous occupations, or in industrialized and commercialized employments, why was it not so limited, and why, under the advice of counsel, was the word "employment" striken out and "labor" substituted?

If the purpose and intent of the amendment, as proposed in 1924, had been really and in truth, as now frequently professed and more or less misunderstood, only to accomplish what was attempted in the acts of Congress of 1916 and 1919, which were declared to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, why was not the proposed amendment reasonably limited to the provisions of those statutes—namely, under the age of 16 in mines or quarries, under 14 in other employments, and under 16 when working in the latter employments for more than 8 hours per day?

Reference to pages 16–25 of the argument heretofore submitted to the New York Legislature by the undersigned will abundantly show the understanding of Representatives and Senators in 1924. They surely knew what was then understood and intended to be the scope, intent, and purpose of the proposed amendment. Its interpretation and construction will, of course, be determined by the purpose, intent, and understanding of Senate and House when it was proposed in 1924, and not by the contrary intention, understanding, or promises of the Secretary of Labor or the Secretary of Agriculture 10 years later. If reasonably limited power is all that is now desired, why was not application made last year or this year to Congress for a new amendment limited as is now professed to be the limited purpose and intent of the present proponents of the child-labor amendment? There is certainly no sound reason for giving to Congress unnecessary, excessive, and prejudicial power as in the case of the eighteenth amendment, and trust it not to abuse such power as it abused its power in the Volstead Act and its amendments.

As Governor Smith impressively declared in the October number of the New Outlook:

"It does not seem possible that the same States which are relieving us of the curse of the eighteenth amendment will now impose another constitutional curse upon us under the guise of abolishing child labor."

And in the March number of the same publication he said, among other very pertinent remarks:

"We are told that Congress will never do anything extreme or undesirable under this amendment. That is just what the Wheelers and Cannons told us about the eighteenth amendment."

Of all statesmen throughout the entire country none has during his entire career been more untiringly or more consistently devoted to the protection of children than Governor Smith. To him in the greatest measure—it may be said uniquely—are due the model provisions of our labor law and our education law with respect to the physical and mental labor of children. Indeed, he has been the leading champion of every humane and wise step taken in this State for a quarter of a century for the protection and welfare of childhood.

VIII. As to the alleged simplicity and inexpensiveness of Federal administration and enforcement

Under point numbered VIII the Statement by Lawyers asserts that "the administration of a Federal child-labor law would be comparatively simple and would not require setting up a huge bureaucratic agency", and in support of this claim it is stated that the experience under the two acts of Congress of "1916 and 1919 indicates the comparative simplicity and inexpensiveness of enforcing a Federal child-labor law." This argument will be reviewed as briefly as practicable.

AS TO THE ALLEGED SIMPLICITY OF ENFORCEMENT

The plea of simplicity of enforcement has been made throughout our entire history with respect to almost every proposed extension of Federal power and every encroachment upon the States in matters of local self-government. Nevertheless, the record has been to the contrary and has shown complexity of enforcement, constant expansion, never-ending encroachment and multiplication of Federal officeholders and bureaucratic agencies. The most striking examples in our own day have been the attempted enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the ever-increasing Federal expenditures and activities in connection with education. Education alone has resulted in the grant of hundreds of millions of dollars to the States and the maintenance of the Federal Office of Education in the Interior Department.

It is, of course, as notorious as it is indisputable that the attempted enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, as matter of fact, required the setting up of a huge bureaucratic enforcing agency and involved vast increases in the number of Federal agents and in appropriations, and that such enforcement was a deplorable failure. Yet, it was predicted by representatives and spokesmen of the Anti-Saloon League that the cooperation of the States under the provision for concurrent power, particularly in the prohibition or dry States, would greatly simplify enforcement. Quite the contrary was the outcome. Even the dry States retrenched expenditures and partly or wholly withheld cooperation, and practically the entire burden of enforcement was imposed upon the Federal Government, with the disgraceful results set forth in detail in the Wickersham Commission report as a warning against future attempts by Congress to invade the province of the States, to encroach upon local self-government, and to interfere in the lives, habits, and morals of the residents of the several States.

It is impossible to give even approximately accurate figures as to the thousands of Federal agents employed in the unsuccessful attempt to enforce the Volstead Act and its amendments and extensions, because of the complexity of enforcement, the participation of numerous departments, the large staffs directly and indirectly charged with the enforcement in bureau and field, as well as the participation in enforcement by the Treasury Department, the customs, the Navy, the Coast Guard, the Department of Justice, the courts, etc. But it may be asserted that it required, as matter of fact, an enormous expansion of Federal political patronage and vast expenditure and a huge enforcing bureaucracy. The figures or estimates of the Wickersham Commission will be found in volume I of their report to the President.

Any effective and uniform enforcement by bureaus centralized in Washington of limitations, regulations, and prohibitions of the labor of persons under 18 years of age throughout the entire United States, its Territories and its insular possessions, would require a vast army of Federal functionaries, field officers, investigators, police, detectives, under-cover men and women, etc., necessarily greatly in excess of the number found insufficient to enforce the Volstead Act and its amendments. Limiting ourselves to the figures of the census of 1930, which figures are, of course, much greater in 1934, it must be obvious that any effective or adequate investigation or supervision of all minors under 18 and the due enforcement of limitations, regulations, and prohibitions upon their labor would inevitably require a huge bureaucratic enforcing agency attached to the Department of Labor and its Children's Bureau, to the Office of Education in the Interior Department, to the Department of Justice, etc. The Labor Department would, indeed, in all probability then shortly become one of the Departments of the Government at Washington having the largest political patronage and the control and expenditure of correspondingly immense appropriations.

As Governor Smith warned in the October New Outlook:

"Opponents of the amendment, furthermore, ask whether the Federal Government can regulate child labor on a Nation-wide basis through control of interstate commerce and Federal enforcement any more successfully than it enforced prohibition by the same methods. Federal regulation and enforcement mean huge expenditures, waste, graft, duplication of effort, bootlegging, and disrespect for all laws. Is it possible that a United States attorney in a Southern State will prosecute vigorously offenses against a Federal child labor law, and that a jury will convict, if local sentiment is against Federal interference? Is it conceivable that Federal control can be exercised otherwise than through a new army of inspectors, investigators, sleuths, bloodhounds, and statisticians traveling about in trains, automobiles, and on horseback, stopping at hotels, and bedeviling the work of labor departments?"

A striking example of the inefficiency and expensiveness of the Children's Bureau in Washington will be found in its attempted administration of the Maternity and Infancy Act of 1921, known as the "Sheppard-Towner law." It was declared in the United States Senate by Senator Reed, of Missouri, on June 15, 1926, that the Bureau had been "nothing but a common and public nuisance, maintained at the expense of the United States." Congressman Beck declaerd, at page 219 of his work, "Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy", as follows:

"Apparently the estimable ladies who conducted this maternity bureau added little to the sum of human knowledge on the subject of the hygiene of maternity, if we may credit the following statement of the Journal of the American Medical Association:

"'During the 7½ years that the Sheppard-Towner Act was in effect it cost the people about $11,000,000 in taxes. During that entire time it did not develop a single new idea in the field of maternal and infant hygiene. As shown by official mortality statistics, it did not accelerate the rate of decline in either the maternal or the infant death rates by even a fraction of a point per annum.'"

AS TO ALLEGED INEXPENSIVENESS OF ENFORCEMENT

This claim is, perhaps, sufficiently refuted above, under the heading of alleged simplicity of enforcement; but a further glance at the expense of maintaining the Labor Department and its Children's Bureau may be both instructive and admonitory.

The Department of Labor not only is already overmanned and dominated by the labor organizations of the country, but it is a most costly experiment. The addition to its jurisdiction of control over the labor of all children and youths throughout the United States, the Territories and the insular possessions would make it not only one of the largest, but likewise one of the most powerful and far-reaching Departments of the Federal Government. An idea of the inevitable expansion and expense may be gathered from actual experiences during the past few years. For example, in 1931 the appropriations for the Labor Department amounted to $12,230,170; in 1932 they were $14,994,200, and in 1933 they were $12,924,770, whilst the employees were 5,412, 5,931, and 5,226, respectively (U.S. Budget and World Almanac). The appropriations for the Children's Bureau in 1931 were $368,000, with 154 employees; in 1932, $395,500, with 175 employees, and in 1933, $375,000, with 158 employees. Any adequate enforcement of Federal regulation of child labor would enormously increase these appropriations and the already excessive personnel.

This question of appropriations for the Washington bureaucracy should be of especial concern to the New York Legislature if it will ponder the fact that one third of the Federal income tax of hundreds of millions of dollars is collected from this State. It was exactly 34.44 percent in 1930; 33.06 percent in 1931; 32.98 percent in 1932, and 32.14 percent in 1933. In effect, every increase in Federal appropriations and every expansion of Federal activities penalize the State of New York far beyond any benefit or protection it receives, whilst a number of the States actually receive the benefit of Federal funds far in excess of any Federal tax paid by them.

Congressman Robert L. Bacon, of this State, has stated in a public address (Congressional Record, July 16, 1932) that in a recent "national fiscal year there were 14 States which did not pay a dollar of net taxes into the Federal Treasury" and that 16 States, or one third of the Union, "paid 93 percent of the total net Federal tax bill, or a sum of over $2,000,000,000." He added that these figures "sound fantastic, but I urge each and every taxpayer to be forewarned and to seriously consider the problem."

But it remains to analyze the specific experience cited in the Statement by Lawyers with regard to the enforcement of the acts of Congress of 1916 and 1919, which they assert "indicates the comparative simplicity and inexpensiveness of enforcing a Federal child labor law."

The act of Congress of September 1, 1916, known as the first Federal child labor law, did not become effective until September 1, 1917, and before that date and on August 9, 1917, it was challenged in the courts as being unconstitutional, as it had been challenged in both Houses of Congress. It was declared unconstitutional and void by the District Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina on August 31, 1917. In other words, the act of Congress of 1916 was adjudged unconstitutional and void before it ever became effective. This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States on June 3, 1918 (247 U.S. 251). The act contained an annual appropriation to the Children's Bureau of $150,000. Its attempted enforcement by that Bureau is surely negligible so far as indicating the probable cost of enforcing legislation under the proposed amendment, if ever ratified. In fact, the Children's Bureau in 1921 officially declared that its work of inspection under the act of 1916 "was hardly under way before the law was declared unconstitutional", and its report to the Secretary of Labor, transmitted December 1, 1920, stated at the outset, as follows:

"The Child Labor Division of the Children's Bureau was organized to administer the United States Child Labor Act, which became effective September 1, 1917. Approximately 9 months later (June 3, 1918) the act was declared unconstitutional, so that the work of the division in this field terminated at that time." As matter of fact, however, it had been declared unconstitutional in the district court on August 31, 1917, and if the Children's Bureau nevertheless continued to expend public funds in its enforcement, such expenditure had all the elements of illegal waste.

It must, therefore, seem somewhat far-fetched to assert that this tentative enforcement, which was hardly under way, and at all times in the face of a court decision of invalidity, tends to establish the simplicity and inexpensiveness of Federal enforcement as now asserted in the Statement by Lawyers.

The second child labor law was embodied in the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919, and it likewise, from the beginning, was recognized to be of very doubtful validity and was also challenged in both Houses of Congress as being unconstitutional. Litigation was promptly instituted to test its validity, and it was declared unconstitutional on December 10, 1921, in Drexel Furniture Co. v. Bailey (276 Fed. 452). This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court on May 15, 1922, Child Labor Tax Case (259 U.S. 20). Even the very limited operation by the Internal Revenue Department of this invalid child labor tax law involved a cost to the taxpayers of $307,703.

Although these acts of 1916 and 1919 were recognized and generally conceded from the beginning to be of very doubtful constitutionality and were not long seriously attempted to be enforced, the records, nevertheless, show that during that period the Federal Children's Bureau had appropriations for its various activities, of $214,640 for the fiscal year 1917, $380,581 for 1918, and $658,610 for the fiscal year 1919, which were reduced the next fiscal year to $310,008, and then to $294,874.

While, however, this source of funds and patronage was being curtailed by the decisions of the courts adjudging the two child-labor enactments unconstitutional and void, the Children's Bureau conceived and brought about the enactment of the ill-fated Maternity and Infancy Act of November 23, 1921, above mentioned.

CONCLUSION

The Statement by Lawyers concludes with the following declaration (p. 11):

"For these reasons we believe that the Federal child-labor amendment should be ratified. The real question at issue is simple: Are we willing to give Congress the power to make permanent the child-labor standards now incorporated in the N.R.A. codes, or do we wish to permit the States to return to child exploitation and the consequent lowering of adult wage levels when the codes expire?"

The real question, however, is not correctly stated, and it is not quite so simple. This statement, moreover, is likely to mislead in its obvious tendency to minimize the proposed amendment and divert attention from its true effect and meaning and the unlimited power it would grant to Congress. The amendment was submitted to the State legislatures for ratification 10 years ago, and 9 years before the National Industrial Recovery Act of Congress of 1933 was passed. The amendment could not, therefore, possibly have been proposed or intended in 1924 in order to give Congress the power to make permanent the child-labor standards now incorporated in the N.R.A. codes of 1933 and 1934. There was, however, as matter of fact, no such limited intent or purpose by the Congress that proposed the amendment in June 1924 for it then deliberately and advisedly voted (1) against reducing the age limit to 16, which is the limit now deemed adequate in nearly all the N.R.A. codes, (2) against exempting persons working in their own homes and on the home farms, (3) against striking out the drastic and all-inclusive express power to prohibit, (4) against confining congressional power to unhealthy or dangerous occupations or such as involved a menace to morals, and (5) against inserting the word "reasonably" before "prohibit." A contemporaneous declaration by Senator Fletcher, as published in the Congressional Record of February 17, 1925, will be enlightening as to the real issue if it is to be determined by the understanding and intention of the framers and the scope of the proposed amendment. This will be found in a letter written by him on February 5, 1925, a copy of which is annexed to this reply.

Congress has not yet even intimated that it desires the constitutional power to make permanent the existing essentially experimental provisions of most of the N.R.A. codes. In fact, some of the child-labor restrictions in the N.R.A. codes are objectionable, oppressive, and altogether too drastic. If there be any desire by Congress to make permanent any of the provisions of these codes, some of which are so extreme and oppressive as to tend or be calculated to strangle industry and delay or prevent recovery, the proper course to pursue is to petition Congress to submit a revised amendment limited within reasonable lines, and not to resurrect and attempt to secure the ratification of an amendment altogether too broad, which was duly rejected and defeated 9 years ago, and then emphatically repudiated and condemned by public opinion. The claim is clearly unfounded and untenable that the proposed amendment would simply make permanent the N.R.A. codes and would not vest, as its language plainly purports to vest, the unlimited power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age. The truly simple question is whether such an unlimited, unrestrained, and supreme power over the children and youths of all the States, Territories and insular possessions, now conceded to be unprecedented, unnecessary, and undesired, should be vested in Congress by the vote of the Legislature of the State of New York, and not whether we should rely upon future reasonable moderation and restraint on the part of the present and future Congresses in the face of constant and inevitable clamor for increases of political patronage and intermeddling with local affairs.

Mr. Charles W. Pierson of our bar, an exceptionally able scholar in constitutional law, stated in his book, Our Changing Constitution, as follows (p. 149):

"It cannot be reiterated too often that, under our political system, legislation in the nature of police regulation (except insofar as it affects commerce or foreign relations) is the province of the States, not of the National Government. This is not merely sound constitutional law; it is good sense as well. Regulations salutary for Scandinavian immigrants of the Northwest may not fit the Creoles of Louisiana. In the long run the police power will be exercised most advantageously for all concerned by local authority.

"The present tendency toward centralization cannot go on indefinitely. A point must be reached sooner or later when an over-centralized government becomes intolerable and breaks down of its own weight. As an eminent authority (Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes) has put it: 'If we did not have States, we should speedily have to create them.' The States thus created, however, would not be the same. They would be mere governmental subdivisions, without the independence, the historic background, the traditions, or the sentiment of the present States. These influences, hitherto so potent in our national life, would have been lost."

SUPPRESSION OF CRIME—ADDRESS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. Homer Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, before the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Washington, D.C., April 19, 1934, entitled "A 12-Point Program", discussing certain antigangster legislation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Madam President General, ladies, and gentlemen, permit me at the outset to express my deep appreciation of the honor you have done me in inviting me to address the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It is not only a delightful privilege in itself, but it affords me an opportunity to renew in very pleasant fashion a semiofficial tie of long standing between the Department of Justice and the D.A.R. The history of your society records that shortly after its organization in 1890 the national board of management selected as its first legal adviser a distinguished lawyer of St. Louis, the Honorable George H. Shields, who was at that time an Assistant Attorney General during the administration of President Harrison.

Since its inception your society has devoted itself with enthusiasm to patriotic causes. You have, as enjoined by your constitution, truly perpetuated the memory and the spirit of the men and women who achieved American independence. You have erected monuments to commemorate those whose heroic deeds have lighted the fires of patriotism within the hearts of the American people. You have caused to be introduced into the public schools patriotic exercises to celebrate the anniversaries that are closely connected with our national history. You have sponsored the writing of essays upon historical subjects. You have carried on educational work among applicants for naturalization to the end that they might be instructed regarding the great figures and the important events of American history. You have sponsored legislation to protect the dignity of the flag from disrespect at the hands of the thoughtless and the irreverent.

In these ways and by many other means you have consistently stimulated disinterested service and fostered reverence for the glorious traditions of our Nation. By so doing you have made a vital contribution to the public welfare, for as an ancient Greek statesman once said, "Through admiration of what is heroic men rise to higher levels."

Therefore, knowing full well your devotion to our common country and your deep concern for its welfare, I speak to you tonight of certain matters of wide and immediate importance.

The suppression of crime has become a national problem of the first magnitude. Hundreds of millions of dollars are expended each year in efforts to arrest, to prosecute, and to restrain the criminal classes. Moreover, large sums are spent annually by private individuals and corporations in the maintenance of guards and industrial police forces and for insurance against loss by criminal acts. The yearly toll exacted of society by predatory criminals, in the form of property destroyed, values converted, money stolen, and tribute enforced, constitutes a ghastly drain upon the economic reserves of the Nation. Undoubtedly crime costs our country several billion dollars each year, and it is conservative to say that there are more people in the underworld carrying deadly weapons than there are in the Army and the Navy of the United States.

Clearly the institutions and agencies upon which we have relied for the enforcement of the law have not adequately performed their proper functions.

In many localities there exists an unholy alliance between venal politicians and organized bands of racketeers.

Then, too, certain unworthy members of the bar maintain a close contact with the criminal classes and prostitute an honorable profession by resorting to improper practices in order to save their clients from the legitimate consequences of their crimes.

These recreant members of the legal profession take skillful advantage of the cumbersome and archaic procedural rules governing criminal cases which still persist in many of our jurisdictions. Trials are delayed, witnesses die or disappear, and appeals upon frivolous grounds are all too frequent.

As Mr. Justice Holmes once very shrewdly observed, "At the present time in this country there is more danger that criminals will escape justice than that they will be subjected to tyranny."

In many parts of the country law-enforcement officers are not selected primarily because of their training and general qualifications, but are given positions on a basis of political preferment. Where this is true, each change of political administration is accompanied by a reorganization of the local constabulary. It is impossible to build up an efficient and courageous force of officers so long as they are constantly subject to the whims of political fortune.

Another difficulty grows out of the unfortunate situations which result from a lack of cooperation so often characteristic of the activities of the various law-enforcement agencies of the country.

Another serious phase of the problem has to de with the relative uncertainty which exists with respect to the dividing line between the jurisdictions of the Federal and State Governments. Here lies an area of relative safety—a twilight zone—in which the predatory criminal takes hopeful refuge.

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States there was little need that the Federal Government should concern itself with the problem of crime. Owing to the isolation of the different settlements, the operations of criminals were, of necessity, local in their nature. You will recall that when John Adams first went from Boston to Philadelphia, his wife, the famous and delightful Abigail Adams (who, by the way, has been called the "patron saint of the Daughters of the American Revolution"), made note of the fact that it took 5 weeks to receive a return letter from that "far country."

We are no longer a Nation whose problems are local and isolated. The growing density of our population and the development of high-speed methods of transportation have resulted not only in a large increase in our crime rate but also have given to many offenses an interstate character. As a celebrated American jurist has said, "The maintenance of an organized society has come to involve much more than repression of local offenders against local laws. Where 100 years ago the chief concern was the common defense against foreign aggression and savages, today it is rather a common defense against organized, antisocial activities extending beyond State lines, operating without regard to political boundaries, and threatening any locality where there is possibility of plunder or profit." Crime today is organized on a Nation-wide basis, and lawbreakers extend their activities over many States.

In a well-remembered kidnaping case, which occurred during the past year, the operations of the criminals took place in 7 States; and it was necessary for the agents of the Department of Justice to go into 9 additional States in their successful efforts to solve the crime and bring its perpetrators to justice. The seven States referred to have an area of about 683,000 square miles, which exceeds in extent the combined areas of Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, England, Scotland, and Wales. This illustration indicates the extent of the difficulties involved and accentuates the need of a Nation-wide approach to the problem. The Federal Government has no desire to extend its jurisdiction beyond cases in which, owing to the nature of the crime itself, it is impossible for the States adequately to protect themselves.

In response to this manifest necessity, and entirely within constitutional limitations, the Department of Justice is urging the Congress to pass certain important bills now pending before that body, as follows:

(1) A law dealing with racketeering which will make it a felony to do any act restraining interstate or foreign commerce, if such act is accompanied by extortion, violence, coercion, or intimidation.

(2) A law making it a Federal offense for any person knowingly to transport stolen property in interstate or foreign commerce.

(3) Two laws strengthening and extending the so-called "Lindbergh kidnaping statute."

(4) A law making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or the giving of testimony in felony cases.

(5) A law making it a criminal offense for anyone to rob, burglarize, or steal from banks operating under the laws of the United States or as members of the Federal Reserve System.

(6) A law making it a criminal offense for any person to kill or assault a Federal officer or employee while he is engaged in the performance of official duties, and a law to provide punishment for any person who assists in a riot or escape at any Federal penal institution.

(7) A law to make the husband or wife of a defendant a competent witness in all criminal prosecutions.

(8) A law to limit the operation of statutes of limitations by providing that such statutes shall not prevent the prompt reindictment and prosecution of a person after a prior indictment has been held to be defective, and a law to prevent dilatory practices by habeas corpus or otherwise.

(9) A law to provide that testimony on behalf of the defendant to establish an alibi shall not be admitted in evidence unless notice of the intention of the defendant to claim such alibi shall have been served upon the prosecuting attorney at or before the time when the defendant is arraigned.

(10) A law to repeal the statutory provision which has been held to prohibit comment upon the failure of the accused to testify in a criminal case.

(11) A law to regulate the importation, manufacture, or sale, or other disposition of machine guns and concealable firearms.

(12) A law authorizing agreements between two or more States for mutual cooperation in the prevention of crime.

This is the 12-point program of the Department of Justice. I not only invite your attention to it, but I solicit for it your earnest support.

I believe that thus it will be possible for us to observe the letter and the spirit of the Constitution and at the same time work out a better and more effective system of crime control.

It is seemly that we should venerate the heroes of the Revolutionary period, and that we should honor the patriots whose courage and daring have added luster to our flag. At the same time we should remember that we are now engaged in a war that threatens the safety of our country—a war with the organized forces of crime. It is an undertaking of serious import and constitutes a test of our citizenship and of our capacity for successful self-government. In this fight your organization can render valiant service.

You can, if you will, direct your efforts toward the building up of a stout-hearted public morale which will cause citizens, as a matter of course, promptly to furnish to the officers of the law the information that may come to them regarding known fugitives from justice; to give testimony freely in criminal cases; and to render jury service gladly when opportunity is afforded to perform this high function of American citizenship. You can help in putting an end to the maudlin glorification of the gangster which has, at times, disgraced our public thinking and has led to episodes like that which recently occurred at Crown Point.

You can aid in speeding the activities of police and prosecutors, in enabling courts to establish proper rules and practices, and in securing desirable laws from State legislatures and from the Congress.

No more worthy enterprise could possibly engage your attention. A serious danger faces this country. Organized bands of criminals prey upon legitimate business, exact tribute from the timid or the fearful, and constitute an ever-present threat not only to property but to the safety of our homes and the sanctity of life. This open challenge to orderly government must be met with a courage worthy of our intrepid ancestors.

To this sacred cause I urge you to devote your thoughts and dedicate the energies of your great organization.

THE CHURCH AIDS LABOR—ARTICLE FROM THE "COMMONWEAL"

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very important contribution to the discussion as to the right of workers to organize and to bargain collectively, which was published in the Commonweal, a very well-known weekly review of literature and public affairs. The title of the article is "The Church Aids Labor."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Commonweal, New York, Friday, Apr. 27, 1934]

Without attempting to discuss the details of the Wagner bill, which seeks to provide for labor's right to self-organization and for the establishment of a tribunal for the adjudication of industrial controversies, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, through its administrative committee of bishops, has filed with the Senate committee considering that measure a statement strongly upholding the right of workingmen to form their own labor unions, and to bargain collectively. The bishops have taken this action because of the fact that the encylical letter, Quadragesimo Anno, on reconstructing the social order, or portions of that document—which is the authoritative basis of Catholic social action—has already been cited in the hearings on the Wagner bill held before the Committee on Education and Labor of the United States Senate, of which Senator DAVID I. WALSH is the chairman. That Catholic teaching supports and indeed demands the principal measures put forward in the Wagner bill, could hardly be established as a fact simply by such references to the Pope's letter, or quotations from it, as have entered into the arguments before the Senate committee; but the bishops' statement emphatically declares that such is the case. All the episcopal chairmen of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, with one exception, together with several assistant chairmen, were present at the semiannual conference held in Washington, which issued the statement. The one bishop of the committee absent was prevented by illness from being present. As the National Catholic Welfare Conference is the Catholic hierarchy of the United States, the action of its administrative committee, fully authorized to speak for the conference, comes as close to being the voice of the entire Catholic Church in this country as is possible—short of what the bishops might promulgate in a solemn council. As the daily newspapers may not in some cases—probably in many—print the whole text of the statement, we quote it in full. It is short but mighty. How far it will guide and direct the thinking and the action of individual Catholics remains to be determined later on; but that it represents the moral teaching of the Catholic Church admits, we hold, of no reasonable doubt whatever. This momentous utterance is as follows:

The Honorable DAVID I. WALSH,
Chairman Committee on Education and Labor,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In view of the fact that the text of the Quadragesimo Anno, or portions thereof, has been placed in evidence in the hearing on S. 2926 before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, the administrative committee of bishops, National Catholic Welfare Conference, judge it in order to send you the following statement and ask that it be filed with your committee in the hearings on this bill.

Congress is considering legislation providing for the protection of the worker's right to self-organization and the establishment of an industrial tribunal for the adjudication of industrial controversies. Both purposes are in complete accord with and are required by the Catholic social program enunciated by Pope Leo XIII in 1891 and by the present Holy Father, Pope Pius XI, in 1931.

The statement issued in 1933 by the bishops of the administrative committee, National Catholic Welfare Conference, declares: "His [the workingman's] right to organize must not be interfered with. * * * Labor and trade unions offer one means of obtaining justice in wages and salaries. The normal working of such organizations, whether singly or as a federation of unions, should be to promote the general welfare and to insure for all workers, whether skilled or unskilled, maximum employment, adequate remuneration, the protection of their rights as men and as citizens, and security against accident and indigence. * * * Capital and labor should work for the common welfare and for their mutual interest should encourage all workers to organize. Unions, embracing all groups of workers, should be governed by good sense. They should endeavor to distribute opportunity to the workers of every class. They should always seek competent and disinterested advisers, that their organizations may ever be characterized by sanity."

The worker's right to form labor unions and to bargain collectively is as much his right as his right to participate through delegated representatives in the making of laws which regulate his civic conduct. Both are inherent rights.

The worker can exercise his God-given faculty of freedom and properly order his life in preparation for eternity only through a system which permits him freely to choose his representatives in industry. From a practical standpoint, the worker's free choice of representatives must be safeguarded in order to secure for him equality of contractual power in the wage contract. Undue interference with this choice is an unfair labor practice, unjust alike to worker and the general public.

To determine the rights of both worker and management and to resolve the conflicting claims of both parties, an industrial tribunal, with mediation and arbitration powers, is necessary. This procedure is dictated by the plainest requirements of reason and public order. The opposite is chaos and anarchy.

Thanking you for your favor in filing this for the record of the hearing on the bill in question, we remain,

Most respectfully yours,

JOHN J. BURKE, C.S.P.,
General Secretary.

That the issues raised in the Wagner bill are of the gravest kind is certain; and no less certain is the fact that until or unless they are settled equitably there can be no permanent or satisfactory basis for our industrial system. And of late there have been most disquieting symptoms of dangerous unrest in the relations between employers and the employed. The month of March had three times as many strikes as February. In February there were 78 strikes, involving about 56,000 workers; while in March there were 218 strikes, involving 137,000 workers. There were brought before the regional labor boards in March more than 600 cases, as compared with 431 in February. Senator WAGNER, head of the National Labor Board, notes two outstanding facts, one favorable, the other highly disquieting. He says:

"Outstanding still are the two main characteristics to which the National Labor Board directed attention in its report to the President on the first 6 months of its work. First is the fact that the majority of employers and employees continue to make increased use of the boards; second is the fact that a minority of large employers, whose following has not diminished, persist in an attitude which does not make for industrial peace and constitutes a heavy obstacle in the way of the work of the boards."

Discussing international relations—which, as we all have learned in recent years, depend so largely upon economic relations, as these again depend upon industrial relations—Dr. James Brown Scott, director of the division of international law of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, recently declared that no treaties or pacts could possibly secure world peace unless or until moral principles are recognized and respected. In the statement issued by the bishops the moral principles which apply to the rights of labor are unequivocally laid down. In other statements, equally emphatic, the duties of labor are stated. So, too, in regard to the rights and the duties of employers. These are not merely personal or associated opinions, but rather statements of the moral law. That law may be disregarded—at the cost of disaster. Men's wills are not compelled, even by God. But if we are to solve the social crisis, the moral law must come before greed or stubbornness, whether of employers or employed.

WHERE SHALL THE ALIEN WORK?—ARTICLE BY HAROLD FIELDS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Where Shall the Alien Work?", by Harold Fields, the president of the National League for American Citizenship.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Reprinted from Social Forces, vol. XII, no. 2, December 1933]

WHERE SHALL THE ALIEN WORK?

By Harold Fields, National League for American Citizenship

Relatively scant attention has been given to the prohibitions that have been imposed upon aliens who are seeking to engage in pursuits that will make them self-supporting. Nor has much study been made of the supplemental numbers that have been added to our unemployed forces through well-defined industrial and legislative policies that militate against the employment of these same aliens.

Yet throughout the United States there is today a consistent attitude among businessmen and lawmakers alike, that has for its announced purpose the refusal to aliens of the right to engage in certain and many occupations. These foreigners are being denied the opportunity to work, despite the fact that they were legally admitted to this country and with the foreknowledge by the Government, in most instances, that they would seek to earn their own living. In May of this year, when the index of employment showed a slight upturn, a very large factory in the Midwest increased its force by 100 percent, but refused to reemploy former workers who were still aliens. In thousands of cases foreigners are being dismissed because of this "all American" policy. This program has failed however to often produce the compensating factor of employing Americans in the place of these discharged aliens; in altogether too many cases, the alien having been dismissed, none is taken on in his place and as a result there have been found two persons on the breadline in place of the former one.

An industrial survey of attitudes toward the employment of the alien would constitute a timely contribution to any correlated study of immigration and economic conditions. The last published study[1] of that type showed that already, in our so-called "prosperous" years, discriminations were being practiced on an extensive scale by industries. With the advent of the depression, these industrial discriminations have multiplied still further.

Still more significant is an analysis of the laws that have been enacted by the States of the Union as well as the rulings that have been promulgated by official bodies affecting qualifications for lawyers, doctors, and other professional persons. Such an analysis shows a growing tendency toward occupational discriminations against aliens.

The outline that follows crystallizes the attitudes of the 48 States on this important question. Particularly does it make clear the fact that so far as the State is concerned, occupations that involve careful and long preparation, such as medicine, law, accounting, teaching, and kindred pursuits, are fast being limited to nonaliens only. The issuance of licenses is frequently denied to aliens on the legal postulate that the State has a special interest in the privileges covered by such licenses. In many other types of discriminations there is a defense in the fact that the courts have held that these forms of legislation have not violated the spirit nor the letter of the fourteenth amendment.

The practice of caring for citizens first or only, would be still more evident in this compilation of statutes and orders were the list to include similar discriminations against aliens inheriting or owning land[2] or their rights in compensation cases. However, these types of discriminations were omitted from the comparative study here made in order to stress and isolate the single problem of occupational disabilities for aliens. The presentation here offered, therefore, is, in a sense, limited and not at all inclusive of all such distinctions in our economic structure. A cursory examination of this compilation presents several interesting observations: (1) That every State in the Union has included laws on its statute books that withhold from the alien the right to engage in stated occupations; (2) that the number of such laws is proportional to the alien or foreign-born population of each State, e.g., that in the New England and Middle Atlantic States the greatest number of such laws is to be found, whereas in the southern Mississippi States, the least number is registered; (3) that the admission and residence of orientals and Mexicans to western and southern border States has resulted in discriminatory laws out of proportion to their alien population; (4) that the most common form of prohibition lies in the field of the professions.

The States having statutes on their books barring aliens from employment in certain occupations, the list of such occupations, and the references to such statutes or orders, here follow:

The citations of the laws and rulings indicate the age of these discriminations in the many States. A study of legislation introduced in the several States this year shows a very definite trend toward an increase in this type of statutory enactment. Seemingly extraneous legislation against aliens such as prohibiting fishing for lobsters, or owning a dog, or hunting, or angling, are but indices of the attitude which has prompted such legislation in part. It finds its ultimate end in the attempt to deny work to aliens in the Public Works program of Congress, in the reforestation program, and frequently in public relief plans. Yet such discriminations create unwarranted hardships: aliens are thrown upon the charities for their support and often their carefully built plans, so often constructive and economically advantageous, are shattered. Furthermore, this distinction in employment is regrettable when viewed in the light of its effect upon any assimilation program that we may seek to effect among our foreign-born residents and upon our ultimate economic recovery. This is the more confirmed by the statement of Justice Hughes in Truax v. Raich (239 U.S. 33; 1915) in his decision in the Arizona law that sought to restrict employees in establishments engaging more than 5 persons to not less than 80 percent citizens. Justice Hughes stated:

"The right to work for a living in the common occupations of the community is of the very essence of the personal freedom and opportunity that it was the purpose of the fourteenth amendment to secure. * * * The opposite as it affects noncitizens would be tantamount to the assertion of the right to deny them entrance and abode, for in ordinary cases they cannot live where they cannot work."

We cannot overlook the fact that the aliens in this country today number between five and one-half and six millions and that almost all of them are undeportable. Many of them are aliens because they cannot become citizens; they lack the necessary period of time; they lack the relatively high naturalization fees or else they are unable to verify their arrival. If we do not grant to these groups the right to work, we defer their Americanization process and impose upon ourselves the need for sustaining them through public charities. Furthermore, many of them are married and have raised American-born children; discriminations against that group handicap the education and welfare of our own native-born citizens.

The philosophy of caring for one's own—upon which tenet this form of discrimination is founded—must be modified in occupational opportunities to caring for all who are legally in our midst. The citizen and the foreigner who has been legally admitted in past years to our shores deserves prior consideration to the transient. To that form of distinction there can be no objection. But to discriminate between elements among our bona fide residents is invidious and subversive of American ideals. Economically, politically, and historically this policy of discrimination lends itself to important consideration as another effect of the growing nationalism in this country and as another outgrowth of technical developments.

THE AIR-MAIL SITUATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, legislation designed to revise the air-mail laws is now before the Senate for consideration. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and myself are joint authors of an amendment which will, at the proper time, be called up for consideration.

On April 17, 1934, on a Nation-wide radio hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting System, the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] delivered an address, in which I concur on this all-important air-mail question. His address was entitled "The Air-Mail Situation." I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tonight, the situation that confronts us is—

A destroyed aeronautical institution.

A great group of experienced, skilled, and specially informed operators who built up that institution, completely banned from creating a new institution to take its place.

A group of nonsubsidized, schedule air-transport companies, who organized immediately after the election into a society for the purpose of securing the air-mail contracts and subsidies thereunder which encouraged the development of the institution which is now destroyed.

Several bills for permanent legislation, pending or ready to be offered, varying in essential features of government and of economics.

Advertisements for bids for temporary contracts covering many of the great routes built up under the stimulating provisions of the McNary-Watres Law, on specifications which lower the standard of safety for pilots and passengers in some of the same frequently befogged areas of our country where several of the Army pilots lost their lives.

The several members of the society of nonmail scheduled air-transport operators busily engaging in preparing bonds and bids to secure these temporary contracts which will consolidate more firmly their strategic position for securing the objective of their organization, namely, substituting themselves for the former operators.

A suggestion by the President that Congress adopt a broad policy for aeronautics after investigation through a commission of all interrelated factors, and that in the meantime contracts for 1 year, or until the policy may be adopted, be let on competitive bidding was made public today, and on the floor of the Senate notice was given by me that an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the McKellar-Black bill would be offered, providing for the appointment of such a commission by the President, and also providing that, pending the report of such commission, and the enactment of permanent air-mail legislation the Postmaster General is directed to revive and reinstate the air-mail contracts canceled February 9, last.

Numerous stockholders of the injured operators, and an army of pilots, technicians, mechanics, and laborers, who are appalled by the swift and ruthless damage inflicted upon them.

Business generally suffering from the loss of one of its important implements of speedy communication.

The volume of passenger and mail transportation by air shriveled to an insignificant point.

Transcontinental mail no longer assured of carriage faster than by train.

Many thickly populated centers practically without air mail.

Air-minded millions who have adjusted their daily work and their lives to the mode and velocity of air transportation, deprived of this service.

This is a sad picture when contrasted with the superb institution which had been created and was serving this country on February 19 of this year. Any hope for improvement depends on the extent of salvage provided for in legislation soon to be passed.

To create this magnificent institution intrepid pioneers gave their lives, millions of our people contributed capital, and the Government afforded a mail subsidy and direct assistance through the Department of Commerce.

The benefit to our civilization is most clearly perceived in its achievement of a more perfect Union.

The first objective expressed in the preamble of the Constitution of the United States was to form a more perfect Union:

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union", among other things, did ordain and establish the Constitution.

We have learned that the Constitution is not self-executory, and that it is not self-perpetuating. We know from experience that the purposes of that great charter can be achieved only by means of patriotic, diligent, and effective service by our people in all the activities of society.

The airplane and the radio have become the greatest unifying agencies civilization has ever enjoyed.

Now, when philosophies of foreign origin attack our social system and the very fabric of government, threatening the disintegration of that Union, and the destruction of liberty, this great institution of the air mail which cements us together should be rescued from cupidity and politics, and be placed on a sound and stable foundation.

The record shows two effectives bombarding the Post Office Department for cancelation of the air-mail contracts:

1. The organized nonsubsidized operators.
2. Political "spoilers."

The record reveals a campaign so comprehensive that the self-seeking interested companies brought their influence to bear upon committees of the Senate and House and individual Senators and Representatives (tr. 7904), the special investigating committee, and the Postmaster General, with ever-increasing urgency until the objective of cancelation was reached.

The record discloses that the society (tr. 7887, 7889) formed for the purpose of securing cancelations kept an attorney of Washington busy with officials and committees and that individual companies also employed him for the same purpose. He testified in the hearings this week that he was working to get an opportunity for his client to bid on air-mail contracts (tr. 7879). The record shows that such an opportunity could not be had without cancelation (tr. 7884).

The record shows that this attorney had been an official of the Post Office Department for 22 years, from 1903 to 1925 (tr. 7894).

The record further shows that a friend of that attorney of more than 30 years' standing, Mr. Stephen A. Cisler, was made general superintendent of the Air Mail Service and the former superintendent was removed to another service. The significance of this change was called to the attention of this attorney's client by letter, saying, among other things: "From what I know of Mr. Cisler, I believe that you will get a fair consideration."

Mr. Cisler had been a comrade of his attorney in the mail service. The attorney wrote: "He has never been employed by any mail operator, but he was general superintendent of the air mail from about 1923 to 1926. He is at present stationed at Fort Worth, Tex., as assistant superintendent, railway mail in charge of air mail."

The record shows that the set-up in the Post Office Department also included two other Texas men, Solicitor Crowley and Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Evans. These are prominent names in the roll of the Democratic National Convention of 1932.

The record discloses that Solicitor Crowley and President Braniff were working together before the Senate special investigating committee (tr. 2794).

The record reveals that the nonmail operators were "after something more important than a short-line contract" (tr. 7903).

Early in the campaign the suggestion was made that a equitable solution of the situation "would be to leave the large operators in possession of the transcontinental routes but divide the feeder routes up among other responsible operators" (tr. 7908). However, even this scheme grew with the encouraging progress of their efforts until the operator who wrote the attorney to "bring it up in your (his) discussion" with then Second Assistant Postmaster General Howes, sought a network of lines which included all of the important routes in the thickly settled area of the United States east of the Mississippi River. This was Braniff Airways whose president was also president of the society organized for cancelation of the contracts.

The record shows that they began to believe that satisfactory results would depend largely on the attitude of the Post Office Department, and that they had just as good a chance to obtain their objective under the Watres law as under any measure Congress might pass (tr. 7916). The attorney then believed that the Department's course of action regarding cancelation would largely depend on opinion of the Comptroller General.

The record reveals that this was the fortunate occasion of the change in air-mail superintendent, and the attorney wrote his client confidentially: "For your confidential information, I am quite sure a new superintendent of air mail is to be appointed shortly, and I think Mr. Howes will then be prepared to discuss intelligently the problem of the Independent Schedule Air Transport Operators. I am keeping close touch and watching developments" (tr. 7942).

Events were slowly but surely moving favorably. The record shows that Representatives and Senators were being impressed into service with the Department. The attorney was confident that the Comptroller General would shortly tell Mr. Farley that he could cancel practically all extensions (tr. 7946). The new legislation to give the President power to cancel contracts was advancing (tr. 7947), and counsel advised clients to "continue to lay their cases before the Postmaster General and show the necessity for early action in their behalf" (tr. 7947).

To secure the contracts quickly was a necessity; not for the benefit of the public, not to save the Government money, not to improve the service, not to make aeronautics more safe and efficient. President Braniff wrote to Mr. Howes: "I am calling these matters to your attention because I am extremely anxious that you should understand the need for the promptest possible relief" (tr. 7954, May 16, 1933).

The record shows that the Postmaster General sought the opinion of the Comptroller General regarding the power to cancel as early as the first month of the present administration (tr. 7909), but was not advised until in June of certain powers to cancel definitely given by law, which required notice and hearing. This was evidently a disappointment. Of course, these powers were not used. It would not do to try out the question of collusion in a regular way, with the accused having an opportunity to be heard.

But were those nonmail operators daunted? They were not.

Immediately after this opinion came out Braniff Airways called Mr. Howes' attention to the opinion as if it were favorable, and notified him that Braniff Airways desires "to submit bids for carrying the mail on routes which are already covered by certificates or extensions", and laid out an air-mail map covering the eastern half of the United States.

He wrote later that he was in dead earnest about it (tr. 7975).

The record shows that Mr. Cisler and the attorney discussed this letter, and that Mr. Cisler thought that "some method should be found for extending the benefits of air-mail transportation to certain independent operators (tr. 7966) who have been operating at least more than 1 year", but the attorney said, "Mr. Cisler is feeling his way cautiously and carefully with a view to arriving at some equitable solution" (tr. 7877).

The record shows that the attorney was having "about two conferences a week with Mr. Cisler", and that he felt "that some progress was being made with a view to tangible results in the near future", and advised that further political pressure be brought on the Department "through your congressional delegations, national committeemen, as well as from civic organizations" (tr. 7971).

Braniff replied: "Keep in regular touch with the Department; press our proposal at every opportunity."

The attorney later wrote: "I have been urging Mr. Cisler to decide on some policy with respect to certain independent operators" (tr. 7996). That was not done because the Government could save money thereby. He admitted that it was done because the independent operators "could not possibly continue to operate much longer" (tr. 7997). This attorney testified that, although his client wanted cancelation of contracts, all that the attorney sought was cancelation of extensions, and that he had numerous conferences with Mr. Cisler about that (tr. 8016).

The record shows that other clients of this attorney were also carrying on their part of the campaign. One of them wrote him: "I have bombarded the Post Office Department with all the national Democratic committeemen, State chairmen, governors, Congressmen, all Democratic Senators, and everyone else in this territory who materially helps keep the Democratic donkey alive."

The record also reveals a relationship with Investigator Patterson, of the Senate special investigating committee, which speaks for itself. The attorney wrote to his client Braniff asking for the names of three or four qualified accountants who could assist that committee. He said, "Any names you suggest, I think it would be advisable not to discuss the matter with them. Let me furnish the names, and let the committee get in touch with them direct. This should be treated confidential." The attorney testified that this was requested by Investigator Patterson (tr. 8037). One name came through from client. But it was not communicated to the committee.

Between the date when Postmaster General Farley testified that he had found nothing about the contracts which had caused him to act toward cancelation, and that his own conduct under them might be regarded as ratification of them, January 30, 1934, and the cancelation February 9, the society of independent operators turned on pressure for speedy action which was succeeded by cancelation of all contracts. February 2, 4 days before the conference with the President, they filed with Postmaster General Farley a memorandum urging "that unless early constructive action is taken to bring about changes in existing administration of the Air Mail Service, the independent operators will be forced to cease their air-passenger transport operations * * *" (tr. 8050). They asked for cancelation of extension and invitation for bids.

Time does not permit further reference to the record now. Sufficient has been shown to call us to the rescue.

We must not permit this bombardment to become permanently destructive.

Permanent legislation should not be passed until after a full and complete knowledge of all facts can be had, so that a remedy may be found that will save this great institution and place it out of reach of the blighting effects of personal cupidity and political interest. We must not have the future air-mail system subject to change every 4 years.

But in the meantime the contracts should be reinstated pending full consideration. Any other course would consolidate the ruin and havoc created by cancelation, and perpetuate the wrong perpetrated in the name of the Government of the United States.

POWER TRUST INVESTIGATION—CAMPBELL RUSSELL

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a few days ago I read into the RECORD a number of letters and documents which had been produced before the Federal Trade Commission in their investigation of the so-called "Power Trust." Among those letters was one from Mr. Ernsberger, president and general manager of the Insull property, the Southwestern Light & Power Co., dated January 17, 1927, to Mr. W. C. Sharp, of Chicago, who was one of the operating vice presidents of Insull's Mid-West Securities Co. From the letter which I read at that time I quote now as follows:

You will recall that I wrote you and also talked with you about the possibility that I should be able to arrange for the employment of Campbell Russell by the utilities association, thereby stopping the prosecution of the suit for reduction of rates against the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. in Oklahoma City before the corporation commission.

I had several conferences with Mr. Russell and he was so thoroughly sold on the Southwestern Light & Power Co., its policies and reputation, that he insisted that he would rather go to work for them. Therefore I have hired him.

His salary will be $5,000 per year—the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. has agreed to pay three fourths of his salary. I have arranged also with the Oklahoma Utilities Association that Mr. Russell be transferred to that association in the next 3 or 4 months.

I think it best to handle it as we are for the reason that direct connection with the association at this time might injure the utility's standing with the legislature that is now in session.

You may know that we are working very hard to prevent the repeal of House bill 4.

I think we have performed a mighty good service in getting Mr. Russell out of the work he has been doing, for that (the) reason that it would have spread from the O. G. & E. case in Oklahoma City to other parts of the State at some time in the early future.

To that letter of Mr. Ernsberger, Mr. Sharp replied, and I read into the RECORD, as I read now, a part of the reply. Mr. Sharp said, his letter dated January 17, 1927:

I showed your letter of January 17 to Mr. Insull and he was very much pleased with the arrangement that has been made, but suggested that perhaps we were asking the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. to bear too much of the burden.

I told him I would take this matter up with you and see how you felt about it. He did not feel that our other companies in Oklahoma should share in this expense for obvious reasons.

The reading of that letter into the RECORD brought to me Saturday a letter from Mr. Campbell Russell, the attorney named in the letter. The letter is written on his letterhead and reads:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., April 18, 1934.

Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Having long observed your conduct as a public official, as a persistent champion of justice, of fair play, and of human rights, I am now confidently anticipating that you will either produce some evidence to support your recent statement in the United States Senate besmirching my reputation, or that failing to find such evidence you will correct your statement.

When I say evidence, Senator, I mean something more than a letter from an officer of the company who was discharged shortly after such letter is said to have been written. As to why he was discharged, I have no knowledge.

I do know that as a result of his manipulations he left many depleted bank accounts and empty pocketbooks in Oklahoma.

I appreciate the fact that I was one of the employees of the old company who was not invited to participate in his new venture.

Thanking you for such attention to this matter as your own conscience shall direct, I am,

Sincerely,

CAMPBELL RUSSELL.

This morning I wrote a letter to Mr. Russell, and I have in my hand a copy of my reply. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 23, 1934.

Mr. CAMPBELL RUSSELL,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

MY DEAR MR. RUSSELL: I have your letter of April 18, 1934, in which you complain that I have "besmirched" your reputation. The thing of which you complain is my reading into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the letter of Mr. Ernsberger, president and general manager of the Insull property, the Southwestern Light & Power Co., dated January 17, 1927, to Mr. W. C. Sharp, of Chicago, one of Mr. Insull's vice presidents in the Middle West Utilities Co.

You do not explicitly deny the truth of the statements made in this Ernsberger letter, although I take it that from the fact that you have complained against me for reading it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you are, in effect, denying the truth of this letter. If the statements made in this letter of Mr. Ernsberger are not true then certainly he has done you a great injustice. The most effective denial would be to have your testimony before the Federal Trade Commission. This Ernsberger letter, you will remember, was produced before the Federal Trade Commission, and is a part of the evidence developed there. I am sure the Federal Trade Commission desire to do you no harm and would help you to right any wrong that has been done you by the letter of Mr. Ernsberger, if that letter is false. I want to assure you, also, that I shall be glad to do anything that I can to bring out all the evidence on this subject.

Therefore, I most respectfully suggest that you send me an affidavit denying the facts set out in the Ernsberger letter, and I will be glad to file it with the Federal Trade Commission, and ask them to summon you as a witness, and that they subpena Mr. Ernsberger, also, the author of the letter, and that they send their agents to make an examination of the books of these companies of Mr. Insull, to ascertain whether any salary has been paid you in accordance with the alleged employment which is set out in the Ernsberger letter. If Mr. Ernsberger's letter is false, then it is certainly another glaring incident of the methods used by some of the officials of these power companies to injure honest men.

Assuring you of my willingness to fully cooperate in an attempt to bring out all the evidence on the subject, I am

Very truly yours,

G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no personal knowledge of the facts. I think, however, if there are false statements in the letter which Mr. Ernsberger, the president of one electric power company, wrote to the vice president of another electric power company, it is certainly, as I stated in my letter, a glaring instance of an attempt to injure an innocent man.

I know nothing about the truth of the matter. It is the first time during the 3 years this investigation has been going on before the Federal Trade Commission when the truth of any of the letters, so far as I know, has ever been questioned. I have pointed out to Mr. Russell in my letter that if he will deny under oath the statements made in the Ernsberger letter, I will do everything I can to have the Federal Trade Commission subpena the necessary witnesses in order that the whole truth may be brought out.

I believe that is all I care to say or ought to say at this time in regard to the controversy.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 31, 32, 33, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 35, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "That the present incumbent as attending physician be advanced one grade as an extra number, provided that this shall not be considered as affecting the opportunity for advancement of any other person."; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, and 30.

MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
MARCUS A. COOLIDGE,
FREDERICK HALE,
J. G. TOWNSEND, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LOUIS LUDLOW,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration and adoption of the report; and then I shall move that the Senate further insist on its amendments still in disagreement and request a further conference with the House, and that the same conferees be appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, may we have a brief explanation of the amendments in disagreement?

Mr. TYDINGS. The amendments in disagreement are mainly those which the committee put in. Those to which the House has acceded are some of those that were put in on the floor of the Senate. The House has receded from about 16 amendments, and the Senate only from 4; so the Senate has maintained practically all of its amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the bill still in disagreement, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. COOLIDGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on Friday, while the subject of the air-mail contracts was being discussed, I yielded to a proposal for a unanimous-consent agreement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that debate on this matter be limited beginning on Thursday next. I had understood at the time that an agreement had been reached which would be satisfactory. I found that it would be impossible for me to do what I had intended without consuming more time than would be allotted to any one Member of the Senate, especially to one who is not a member of the committee. Consequently, having assented to the agreement, I have felt considerable embarrassment, in that I still hold the floor with much unsaid that I think must be said before the debate concludes in order to have it in the RECORD, so that people who have not had the opportunity of being before the committee will know what was brought out in the hearings of the committee.

For that reason, I retained the floor for today. Also, in order that the country might know the general reaction toward the cancelation of these contracts in the manner in which it was done, as expressed through the independent thought of the leaders of public opinion, the editors of the papers throughout the country, I asked consent to have inserted in the RECORD a large number of editorials. Consent was granted, and the editorials were inserted. I also asked and obtained at that time consent to insert in the RECORD statements of some of these companies as to the history of the companies and their contracts. I did that in order that their side of the case might be presented, although it would have been preferable to have them come before the committee, where they could be examined in chief- and also upon cross-examination.

On the evening of April 20 there was delivered in the city of St. Louis, before the chamber of commerce, an address by Mr. P. B. Sturgis, the traffic manager of the eastern region of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., which includes in detail the history of the air-mail service, with special reference to the manner in which the contracts were made with this company, and also gives the judgment of this manager on the manner in which the contracts were canceled. I do not care to read the address into the RECORD, but so as to save time, should be glad to have it inserted without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

(Address delivered by Mr. P. B. Sturgis, traffic manager, eastern region, Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., before the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, Apr. 20, 1934)

AIR-MAIL CONTRACT CANCELATION

There is only one subject in the minds of those in the aviation industry at present. That subject is the "cancelation of the air-mail contracts." It should be of interest to everyone here, because it involves the principles of sound government. An entire industry has been condemned without a hearing or fair trial.

The interest of those of us in the industry goes farther. Annulment of the contracts means a loss of revenue of $1,200,000 a month, with an average gross business of $2,000,000. It is estimated that the domestic air-mail operators lost approximately $400,000 in December 1933 even with air-mail revenues. In March 1934, the first complete month since the birth of the air transport industry in this country that it has operated without air mail, a net loss of nearly $1,500,000 will probably be experienced. The resources of the operators are not great. It is estimated that total assets of all the air lines, including those of their holding companies, amount to only $60,000,000. Of this total, not more than one half, or, roughly, $30,000,000, could be in net quick assets. A net loss of $1,500,000 a month is an enormous drain. No industry can survive at that rate of deficit monthly.

Why are air-mail revenues so important? Because at present passenger and express revenues are not sufficient to cover operating expenses. Operating cost of the present 10-passenger planes approximate 60 cents per airplane-mile. The average passenger rate is 6 cents per mile. Thus it is imperative that a full load of passengers be carried each trip to break even. However, the passenger-load factor on even the most heavily traveled routes rarely exceeds 50-percent capacity over a yearly period. This means that the average revenue from passengers would approximate 30 cents per airplane-mile. Express revenue has so far been small and seldom averages 1½ cents per mile over the best routes. This makes a total gross revenue of around 31½ cents per mile. But the operating costs amount to more than 60 cents per mile. So far the difference has been largely made up by Government air-mail payments. The reasons for this contribution to air transportation were: (1) The demand for a fast mail service by individuals, banks, and business concerns, for which the users paid approximately one half the bill; (2) the air transport industry would be of inestimable value in case of national emergency through the rapid communications and transportation service offered, the training of pilots and mechanical personnel, and the equipment available as either transports or bombers.

The first air-mail service in this country began May 15, 1918, by the Army Air Corps, between New York and Washington. The Army relinquished this service August 12, however, when the operation was transferred to the Post Office Department. The postage rate at the outset was 24 cents an ounce, later reduced to 16 cents and still later to 6 cents. A few months of operation convinced the Post Office Department of the practicability of an extensive air-mail service. The next route considered was between New York and San Francisco, and by September 1920 it had been established. In the same year two feeder lines were inaugurated.

During this period the planes were flown only during daylight hours, and the mail was forwarded by train at night. To get the full advantage of the speed of aircraft it was necessary to arrange for night flying. Therefore, beacons were placed and fields lighted, and by July 1, 1924, through transcontinental service with day and night flying began.

By 1925 air mail had developed to a point where the Post Office Department felt that it should retire from the field and turn operations over to private capital. Not only had volume on the main line grown to a point of warranting the assumption that private enterprise could support the venture, but demands for further extensions of this service were being made by off-line cities. Consequently, in February 1925 legislation was enacted authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for the transportation of air mail at a rate not to exceed four fifths of the revenues derived from such air mail. Experience soon showed that the mail was being delayed by the necessity of scanning each piece in order to determine the revenue to be paid the contractor.

In 1926 the first amendment to the Air Mail Act was passed and provided for contracting on a poundage basis with a limitation of $3 per pound, and contracts which had already been awarded under the previous law were by agreement changed to the poundage basis. There were 31 contracts awarded by competitive bidding under the original law and the first amendment.

It may be of interest to insert here the number of bidders on some of these routes: New York-Boston, 4 bids; Chicago-St. Louis, 3; Chicago-Dallas, 2; Salt Lake City-Los Angeles, 3; Seattle-Los Angeles, 3; New York-Chicago, 4; Cheyenne-Pueblo, 9; Chicago-San Francisco, 4; Chicago-Atlanta, 6; and Atlanta-New Orleans, 6. Is this evidence of collusive and fraudulent bidding? On the contrary. The successful bidder on the Chicago-Atlanta route secured the contract at such a low rate that the line could not possibly be made profitable. In other words, the air transport industry was even then becoming the victim of cut-throat competition.

The postage rates were charged on a zone basis. The Government-operated transcontinental route traversed three zones, requiring 8 cents postage for each zone, or a total of 24 cents for the transcontinental flight. In addition, if a letter was traveling to an off-line point on an independent operator's claim, an additional 10 cents' postage was required. The system was cumbersome and expensive, and finally a uniform rate of 10 cents per half ounce, regardless of destination, was established by the Postmaster General.

In 1928 the Air Mail Act was again amended, and one of the provisions of this amendment permitted the Postmaster General to fix the rate at not less than 5 cents an ounce or fraction thereof. Shortly after the passage of this amendment the rate was changed to the minimum authorized by law.

This resulted in an enormous growth in the volume of air mail. In 1926 the amount of air mail carried was 383,000 pounds; in 1927, when the universal rate of 10 cents a half ounce went into effect, it increased to 1,000,000 pounds; and in 1928, with the further reduction in the rate to 5 cents an ounce, it jumped to 3,500,000 pounds. In 1929 it reached a figure of 7,100,000 pounds.

The problem confronting Postmaster General Brown when he took office in the spring of 1929 was serious. Air-mail volume had grown beyond all expectations. With payments to contracts based on poundage carried, the cost was substantial. In May 1929 the Government paid approximately $1,200,000 for air mail transportation, as compared with $300,000 in January 1928. With the domestic air lines flying well over 1,000,000 miles a month, over 14,000 miles of airways, an industry had been created.

Some of the contracts under which these companies were operating would expire in less than a year, and practically all of them would have expired in the course of the next 2 years. There were many shortcomings in the poundage method of payment, which only experience in actual operations could and had made apparent. From Boston to Los Angeles, for instance, on the poundage basis, the Government was abliged to pay a total of $8.74 per pound. The Government was receiving only approximately $2 per pound in stamp revenue. It was uneconomical. Furthermore, on the poundage basis the line between New York and Boston was receiving $3 for transporting a pound of mail between these points, 200 miles apart, while another operator, with less volume, was receiving only 78 cents for carrying a pound of mail between Chicago and Atlanta, Ga., a distance of 790 miles. One line was receiving as high as $4.38 per mile flown in May 1929. Another was receiving only 14 cents. It was obvious that some companies were being overpaid while others were rapidly going broke. New legislation was imperative if the cost to the Government was to be reasonable, and continued encouragement given this new industry.

The Postmaster General after careful study of the problem decided on a program to build up an efficient air transportation system, which, by reason of increased nonpostal revenues, would eventually relieve the Post Office Department of a deficit from domestic air mail, and thus make the industry self-supporting. (1) The legal right of air-mail contractors to carry mail under route certificates after 2 years of satisfactory service should be recognized. (2) Rates should be changed from a poundage to a space-mileage basis. (3) Authority should be given to adjust these rates periodically. (4) Operators should be forced to encourage passenger and express traffic, so that as revenues from these sources increased, reductions in air-mail payments could be made until a point was reached when the payments approximated the stamp revenue. (5) The service should be expanded to take care of certain new territories. (6) There were certain pioneer equities in air transport operations over various parts of the country that should be recognized. To award such new services by competitive bidding would result in numerous short lines expensive to operate and whose rates would therefore be difficult to reduce. These small lines would not be able to afford engineering or technical staffs or undertake valuable experimental work. It was believed that larger companies would contribute more to air transportation. Authority should be given, therefore, to make extensions or consolidations.

This was Postmaster General Brown's air transportation program. It was enacted by Congress April 29, 1930, under the Watres Act. This act specifically provided that the Postmaster General could award air-mail contracts to the lowest responsible bidder at fixed rates per mile for definite weight spaces. Bidders were limited to operators owning and operating an air line of not less than 250 miles in length for a 6 months' period. It specifically provided that the Postmaster General could issue in substitution for a surrendered air-mail contract a route certificate granting the holder the right to carry air mail over its route for a period not exceeding 10 years at rates of compensation to be fixed from time to time by the Postmaster General. The Watres Act went on to specifically provide that "the Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established."

The idea of a 10-year term was originally enacted into law in 1928 by an amendment substantially similar to this particular provision of the Watres Act, except that it provided for payment on a poundage basis. Due to the provision in the original extension power for payment on a poundage basis, Postmaster General Brown chose not to issue route certificates on such a basis, but invoked another extension power in the postal statutes and temporarily extended contracts, which were due to expire before the Watres Act could become effective, for a period of 6 months. In this way he was then able to issue route certificates to those contractors concerned under the provisions of the Watres Act. Thus he saved the Government money in not continuing for another 6 years contracts under which it would have to pay $3 a pound for a 200-mile run. Furthermore, by not issuing route certificates until he could do so under the provisions of the Watres Act, Postmaster General Brown made it possible for the whole air-mail rate structure to be the same for all routes instead of being on a poundage basis for some and a mileage for others. He thus obtained at the same time complete control of the rate-making power for the future.

The provisions under the Watres Act affected each and every one of the operators. Changes in their rates were to be made. Certain extensions were to be awarded. Contracts were to be exchanged for certificates. It was imperative that a plan be formulated which would be fair to the operators and to the Post Office Department and at the same time be in the public interest. The Postmaster General might have decided for himself just what consolidations and extensions to make and what changes in rates should be effected. Or he might sensibly confer with the contractors themselves who had built up the industry and at least let them offer their advice and recommendations. He chose the latter method of procedure, since nothing could be lost thereby, and mistakes might be avoided. Shortly after the passage of the Watres Act he called to Washington representatives of the air transport lines, including those who had mail contracts, those who could qualify to bid under the act, and other aviation interests. The operators had nothing to do with the calling of this meeting. They were unaware of its purpose until they met with the Postmaster General and his principal assistants in charge of air-mail matters in the Post Office Department. There is nothing unusual about such meetings. Even the present Post Office Department officials called the operators into conference last fall on a rate discussion.

One point concerning the individuals at those meetings in May and June of 1930 has been generally passed over and neglected, particularly by the critics of those meetings. That is that the individuals attending them were operating men—not the men who controlled the companies and had the power to make the deals that would come out of a real spoils conference.

United, the North American interests, and Aviation Corporation were represented by operating men. The problems to be discussed, and that were discussed, were operating problems. If there was to have been any parceling out of plums, it seems logical that the really controlling financial figures would have been representing their companies.

At the meeting the Postmaster General stated that the existing air-mail map did not provide for coordinated systems; that there were great sections of the United States without air-mail service. He stated specifically that he had decided to have two new transcontinental routes, one central route from New York to Los Angeles via Kansas City and one southern route from Atlanta to Los Angeles via Dallas. He stated that these transcontinental lines should be independently owned, so that the Government and the public should have the benefit of alternate routes for dispatching the mail under varying weather conditions.

He outlined the provisions of the Watres Act, showing that Congress had limited the award of contracts to those companies in operation over a 250-mile route for 6 months. He quoted the section of the Watres Act giving him power to make extensions and consolidations of routes which he considered to be in the public interest. He asserted that he intended in the administration of the law to preserve as well as he could the air lines already in operation and in which private citizens had invested large sums of money. He requested members of the group to study the problem and to suggest ways and means whereby a Nation-wide air-mail and passenger service could be created without the inevitable destruction of investments already made. The operators were to formulate their ideas and make recommendations with respect to the equities which they thought they had in certain territories. He made no commitment to abide by their report.

Regardless of what the operators might report, Postmaster General Brown felt that he was not only charged by Congress with he building up of the air-mail system as such, but also with the development at the same time of a sound passenger system. To accomplish this, he felt he must have three-way transcontinental competition. He felt, further, that he must have passengers flying over the Alleghenies, which was not then being done. Coincident with these thoughts was the deep feeling of responsibility toward his fellow citizens who would be passengers on the air lines. Therefore he was determined that passenger business should be developed by lines of proven experience and responsibility. It was for that reason that he had supported the experience clause in the Watres Act. Before the Black committee General Brown expanded on the philosophy behind these thoughts and desires of his in a manner that can leave no room for argument as to the soundness of his air-mail policies.

The meeting was reported in complete detail in the New York Times. The Post Office Department issued a release to the press. This was the clandestine spoils conference of which you have heard so much where Wall Street interests carved up the air-mail map. The operators failed, of course, to agree on any set plan. A memorandum was drawn up setting forth their ideas regarding their respective equities in proposed extensions or new routes. Of the 13 proposals, however, it is interesting to note that only 3 were actually acted upon, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the memorandum. These three were perfectly obvious. Mr. Farley and Senator BLACK offer this memorandum as evidence of fraud and collusion on the part of every operator attending the conference. Postmaster General Brown offers the same as evidence that there was no fraud or collusion.

In accordance with Postmaster General Brown's original intention, bids were called for on the central transcontinental line. Two companies—Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express—pioneer operators on this or portions of it, bid jointly.

There is nothing illegal about a joint bid. This does not prevent another party from bidding. In this case there was another bid, and it was the lower. The matter was put up to the Comptroller General. After an exhaustive study of the facts he ruled that the low bidder was not qualified and that the Postmaster General was justified in making the award on the joint bid to Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express.

The southern transcontinental route was also open to competitive bidding at the same time (August 1930). On this route there was only one bid. It was also a joint bid submitted by a subsidiary of Aviation Corporation and Southwest Air Fast Express, Inc., known as the "Halliburton Co." They were awarded the contract. Subsequently, the Aviation Corporation purchased the half interest of the Halliburton Co. in the line. Shortly thereafter Transcontinental Air Transport and Western Air Express purchased from the Aviation Corporation a large block of stock of Western Air Express which represented substantial working control of that company. But for this arrangement Aviation Corporation would have had control of the two new transcontinental routes. This sale by Aviation Corporation of its stock in Western Air Express removed all possibility of any violation of the antitrust laws, and at the same time was in conformity with the expressed policy of Postmaster General Brown. Nevertheless, Postmaster General Farley points to this transaction as evidence of fraud and collusion.

In the meantime, extensions had been awarded many lines. In some cases extensions were longer than the original lines. In other cases the Postmaster General was able to award new routes through extensions. This was far-sighted. Longer routes meant more efficient service, lower operating costs, greater traffic volume, uniform service to the public; consequently lower costs to the Government. This policy did not make many friends for the Postmaster General among the operators who received no mail contracts. In general, however, they were companies not qualified to operate, and Postmaster General Brown refused to permit them to stand in the way of building up this transportation system he had envisioned. The present administration is tearing down our industry in order to afford these companies least qualified to operate a chance to participate in the air-mail appropriation.

General Brown has been criticized for his administration of the extension privilege. But he had the power to make these extensions and consolidations of routes. The law specifically states, "The Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established." It does not say Senator BLACK, it does not say the Senate Air Mail Investigating Committee, it does not say the solicitor of the Post Office Department. It says the Postmaster General. As a matter of fact, this extension privilege was used by Postmaster General Farley as late as 2 months before the cancelation of contracts to extend American Airways' Buffalo-Chicago route from Buffalo to New York. Finally, it is particularly worthy of note that the same power which gave the Postmaster General the power to extend routes also gave him the power to cut them down or take them away. Furthermore, this power of cutting down on routes was actually used by Mr. Brown and also his successor.

Let us see the result of Postmaster General Brown's actions during his administration and up to the cancelation of the contracts last month. Payments by the United States Government came down from $1.15 per mile in April 1929 to 37 cents per mile in December 1933. The average European government is paying approximately 88 cents per mile for their air transportation service. Air-mail poundage increased from 5,635,680 pounds in the fiscal year 1929 to a peak of 8,845,967 pounds in the fiscal year 1932. Mileage flown grew from approximately 500,000 miles per month in early 1929 to 3,300,000 miles late last fall. Length of air lines increased from 14,000 miles to more than 25,000 miles.

How has this affected the Government's pocketbook? According to the cost-ascertainment reports of the Post Office Department, the excess of air-mail payments over revenues in the 1929 fiscal year was approximately $7,000,000; expenditures in that year were $11,200,000 and stamp receipts $4,200,000. During the current fiscal year, had the air-mail contracts not been canceled, it is conservatively estimated that the net cost to the Government would be only $6,500,000. Expenses were estimated at $14,000,000 and revenues $7,500,000. Thus the net deficit of air mail for the Government would have been reduced by a half million dollars in the short space of 5 years. In that same period service offered to the public, as measured by miles flown, would have been increased by more than 250 percent. Receipts from passengers in 1931 amounted to $4,250,000. In 1932 they rose to $5,000,000, and in 1933 approximated $8,750,000. It is estimated passenger revenues would have reached fully $11,000,000 in 1934 if the contracts had not been canceled and the service curtailed as a result. Express traffic has increased from $8,000 in 1931 to $130,000 in 1932, and to nearly $300,000 last year. This year it would have reached $500,000 at a minimum. It is obvious that with this great increase in passenger and express revenues the entire air-mail subsidy could have been eliminated in a period of 3 or 4 years, because as these revenues increased and operating costs decreased the appropriation could be reduced until it approximated the Government's stamp revenue.

Steps were being taken by the House Post Office Committee to amend certain provisions of the Watres Act, which appeared necessary as the industry had developed over the past 4 years since the passage of that law. This proposed legislation would have placed air mail on the lines at fixed rates of 2 mills per pound-mile, the stamp revenue received. On this basis two of the most important air lines would be self-supporting—receive no Government subsidy. Other lines which do not handle a sufficient volume of mail to make money under these rates would be paid a minimum guarantee in addition to the fixed pound-mile rate. This would gradually be reduced until, after a period of a few years, the entire air transport system would be on the 2-mill or self-supporting basis.

This would have been enacted and would have meant real success to the air-mail program, had not politics interfered. An investigation was launched. Witnesses were examined without the aid of counsel. No opportunity was afforded to cross-examine witnesses with selfish reasons to have the air-mail contracts canceled. Unwarranted inferences and innuendoes were drawn and featured in the press. It was shown that high salaries and bonuses were paid to officials of one aviation concern. It does not appear that these salaries and bonuses came out of companies carrying the air mail. On that showing a new industry, already well established though still in its infancy, has been well nigh wrecked.

Bear in mind that air-mail rates per mile flown had been reduced again and again until at the time of the cancelations the carriers were losing money and barely able to exist. They lived in hopes that their pioneering efforts would be later rewarded by increased revenues from passengers and express. And the fact should never be lost sight of that Postmaster General Farley, under the route certificates which the air-mail carriers had, was czar as far as rates paid to the carriers were concerned. Will the Government ever get a more equitable arrangement from its standpoint?

It is now proposed to throw open all routes to competitive bidding, without regard to past service, equipment, equities, or experience; to give the successful bidder 30 days to qualify, and to exclude the companies and the men who have largely been responsible for the industry's success. The reasons behind the administration's confiscatory action were not clear. And it is most unfortunate that having set back air transportation immeasurably by this conduct, the framing of permanent legislation is in the hands of those, particularly in the Senate, who are hostile to aviation, or who are not familiar with or understand the problems or economics of the business.

The air transportation industry is young and in its pioneering stage. For the industry to survive, legislation governing it must be sympathetic and constructive. In the air-mail cancelations, the heavy hand of the Government has dealt the industry a staggering blow. A constructive program for a period of years must be laid out and enacted into law by Congress. Then the people of this country should demand that this program be administered intelligently and sympathetically and without regard to narrow and selfish partisan politics.

It is, therefore, imperative that every individual interested in seeing what was the country's most promising young industry receive a fair deal and a chance to continue its progress, bring all of his influence to bear on Congress, in whose hands at this moment is the power of making or breaking the air transportation industry.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the time is limited, and that it ought to be divided equally between the two sides, and that members of the investigating committee will desire to take some time, I think it is unwise for me to insist upon holding the floor to say what I have to say, with members of the committee on both sides of the Chamber present and ready to take up the discussion.

As a matter of common decency, it seems to me that those who have been very closely identified with the whole matter ought to be given whatever time they wish to take. For that reason, since the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is present and desires to speak, and is acquainted with all the details as I cannot be, and since he ought to have whatever time is necessary to develop the case, I am going to discontinue my own statement, as I had intended to make it today, and give way so that the members of the committee may have all of the allotted time they desire to take.

For that reason I suspend for the time being.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, Congress ought to put on the air brakes, for there is danger ahead.

The recommendation of the President that a commission find and report the facts affecting areonautics, both civil and military, should be carried out.

However, the air-mail status before cancelation of contracts February 9, 1934, should be restored and maintained pending acceptance of the report.

The dangers that are imminent are—

That contracts may be awarded on the bids for temporary service which reverse the policy of the Government and the interest of the operators to develop safety and efficiency in the transportation of passengers;

That Congress may act hastily and unwisely in enacting permanent legislation in an atmosphere of political excitement and on inadequate information;

That Congress may establish the bad precedent of approving and ratifying an impetuous abuse of official power;

That Congress may confirm the condemnation by Postmaster General Farley of his predecessor in office, and of a group of citizens in mass without separate trial—indeed, without notice, and without any trial, ex parte and in absentia;

That Congress may perpetuate the smirching of the good name of officials of Government and of citizens without a chance—much less an opportunity—for them to confront the witnesses who rob them of more than their purse;

That Congress may establish by law the uncivilized doctrine that a contract is no more sacred or binding in effect than to give an action for damages for its breach;

That Congress may teach the people that it is right to break a contract;

That Congress may abet our Government in using its might to wrong its citizens, and then dodge behind sovereignty to escape the reach of equity proceedings;

That Congress attaints a class of citizens and bars them of rights enjoyed by all other citizens;

That Congress may encourage attacks by societies of nonmail carriers, organized from time to time, as new groups of them spring up, to cancel mail contracts and open them to bidding at sacrifice rates in order to take from those who have them and give those contracts to those who have them not; and

That Congress may make itself a party to the destruction of an institution which has cost the lives of brave pioneers, as well as the savings of private investors; an institution that has become an important implement of commerce and an effective agency of forming a more perfect union of the several States, as well as an arm of the national defense.

To avert these dangers an amendment to the pending bill in the nature of a substitute will be offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and myself, which I send to the desk to be read by the clerk for the information of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That pending the enactment of permanent air-mail legislation, and in order to meet the existing emergency with respect to the carrying of the mails by air, the Postmaster General is authorized and directed, with the consent of the holder, to revive and reinstate any air-mail contract or route certificate in force on February 9, 1934, and thereupon the person, firm, or corporation holding any such air-mail contract or route certificate shall have all the rights and privileges and be subject to all the duties and obligations as existed under such contract or route certificate at the time of the cancelation thereof.

SEC. 2. (a) The President is authorized to appoint a commission, to be composed of five members, to make a thorough investigation and study of the facts and conditions pertaining to the operation of the air mail and all civil and military aeronautics and to report to the Congress, on or before January 3, 1935, the results of its investigation and study, together with its recommendations for a permanent air-mail policy. The President shall select a chairman from among the members of the commission.

(b) Each member of the commission other than a member who is an officer or employee of the United States shall receive such compensation for his services as the President may fix.

(c) For the purposes of this section the commission, or any member thereof when authorized by the commission, may hold hearings, administer oaths, and require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses or the production of books, papers, documents, or other evidence, or the taking of depositions before any designated individual competent to administer oaths. The provisions of section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act insofar as applicable, shall apply in the case of any person required by subpena to appear and testify or produce evidence before the commission created by this act.

(d) The commission may appoint and fix the compensation, without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, of such experts and employees, and may make such expenditures, including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of Government and elsewhere, for travel, and for printing and binding, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. All expenses of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission.

(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(f) The commission shall cease to exist upon the submission and acceptance of its report to the Congress pursuant to the provisions of this section.

It is also proposed that the title be amended so as to read: "A bill to create a commission to report upon a permanent air-mail policy, and to provide for the carriage of the mails by air pending the enactment of permanent legislation."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the amendment does not require an explanation. Boiled down to a few words, there are just two essential things in it. One of them is provision for the restoration of the status quo before the cancelation; the other is a provision for carrying out the President's recommendation for an investigation and report of facts which shall form the basis of permanent legislation, and which probably would comprehend more than has been embraced in the scope of the special committee's investigation, and much that has not as yet come before the special committee, and without which Congress is now undertaking to enact permanent legislation.

What I have to say today is for the specific objective of putting on the airbrakes. If Congress should adopt the substitute I have offered, absolutely no harm would come to any living human being on account of that action, and much and grave harm would be prevented.

I address myself to the cancelation of the contracts in order to prove that their cancelation was wholly without warrant; that there was no such cause for cancelation as that assigned by the Postmaster General. I shall, before closing, undertake to call attention to the evidence which shows what was really the underlying purpose and motive of the Postmaster General in canceling the air-mail contracts, and who were the actors, through a series of years, in bringing about the cancelation, not for the public good but solely for a selfish end.

Mr. President, a great reaction of the people of the United States beat upon the Postmaster General immediately following his cancelation, on February 9, 1934, of all the air-mail contracts in question, the most curious performance of government which history has ever recorded. Think of it—an entire group of contracts with the Government, covering an entire governmental activity, canceled en masse at one fell swoop! I venture to say that history will record this as one of the strangest events of the present period of our lives.

The Postmaster General, in response to that reaction from the public, from all sources, without regard to politics, wrote a letter which he addressed to the special investigating committee of the Senate, dated February 14, 1934, in which he assigned as his first reason for canceling these contracts that five of them had been continued in time. He says "extended." It is obvious from reading his letter—of which he denies the authorship, but which he says he ratified—that whoever wrote the letter was unacquainted with his subject, and that he thoroughly confused extensions of routes with extensions of time. The first substantial defense for this outrageous breach of contract, however, was that five of these contracts were extended in time, as he says, 6 months, without any legal authority for so doing.

The Postmaster General referred to Solicitor Crowley for authorship of that letter; and so when Solicitor Crowley was on the witness stand before the committee he was asked if he was aware that in the basic post office law there was a section, 1808, which expressly gave the authority for extension of time. He admitted that he was aware of it, but he thought it belonged to and applied to nothing but temporary contracts. Then he admitted that a temporary contract was a contract for 1 year, whereas a regular contract was a contract for 4 years. His attention was then called to the express language of the law; and he either discovered for the first time in that cross-examination how the law read, or he had shut his eyes to it up to that time, and had not advised his superior officer that such a law existed.

I quote from section 1808 of the Postal Laws and Regulations:

> In all cases of regular contracts the contract may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be continued in force beyond its express terms for a period not exceeding 6 months, until a new contract with the same or other contractor shall be made by the Postmaster General.

That disposes of Solicitor Crowley's theory that the Postmaster General had no legal authority to continue the contracts in point of time.

Let us see what the Postmaster General himself testified about it on the witness stand before the same special committee:

> Senator AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Farley, did your counsel call your attention to this authority and tell you that a Postmaster General had this authority, which I am about to read, namely, paragraph 2 of section 1808 of the Postal Laws and Regulations:

Thereupon I read to him the section I have just read to the Senate; and this is the Postmaster General's reply. I quote from the hearings, page 2705:

> Postmaster General FARLEY. Nothing specific of that nature was called to my attention; but, I repeat, this letter was prepared with all of the facts in the letter, and I was thoroughly advised as to its legality.
> Senator AUSTIN. Were you ever advised in connection with a judgment you were about to sign, and did sign, saying that these extensions for 6 months were illegal, that there was a basic law that gave expressly the discretion to do that very thing?
> Postmaster General FARLEY. I am not familiar with that section of the law referred to, Senator.
>
> Senator AUSTIN. That is plain enough for any layman to understand, is it not?
> Postmaster General FARLEY. Sure, it is. But, I repeat, every move that I made was made upon the advice of Mr. Crowley and the Attorney General.

Thus that ground, which had been alleged as the first ground of defense for breach of these contracts, was blown right out from under them. That is the kind of failure of defense that is complete and perfect.

Let us now proceed to the next defense.

On page 2 of his letter of February 14 the Postmaster General said—I am quoting Postmaster General Farley, for he signed this letter and sent it to the special investigating committee—

> Extensions of these contracts for a period of 10 years under the so-called "certificate" method were arbitrarily made by Postmaster General Brown on May 3, 1930.

At this point we ought to look at the language of the law itself, the McNary-Watres Act, relating to that subject. I quote section 6:

> SEC. 6. The Postmaster General may, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, upon the surrender of any air-mail contract, issue in substitution therefor a route certificate for a period of not exceeding 10 years from the date service started under such contract to any contractor or subcontractor who has satisfactorily operated an air-mail route for a period of not less than 2 years, which certificate shall provide that the holder thereof shall have the right, so long as he complies with all rules, regulations, and orders that may be issued by the Postmaster General for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting mail operations to the advances in the art of flying and passenger transportation, to carry air mail over the route set out in the certificate or any modification thereof at rates of compensation to be fixed from time to time, at least annually, by the Postmaster General, and he shall publish in his annual report his reasons for the continuance or the modification of any rates.

Then there is the proviso which permits cancelation for willful neglect, namely:

> Provided, That such rates shall not exceed $1.25 per mile. Such certificate may be canceled at any time for willful neglect on the part of the holder to carry out any rules, regulations, or orders made for his guidance, notice of such intended cancelation to be given in writing by the Postmaster General and 45 days allowed the holder in which to show cause why the certificate should not be canceled.

It does not need a debate to the Senate of the United States to show that this authority to exchange contracts for certificates was expressed as the policy of Congress, and was granted by the express language of the McNary-Watres Act. It could not be exercised until after a satisfactory performance by the contractor for 2 years, and then it could not be exercised without the consent of the contractor. The record shows this was done in the case of every contract with the consent of the contractor. As soon as the new contracts which were bid for and let in 1930 had matured for 2 years, they also were exchanged for certificates.

Now let us examine the reasonableness of this procedure as bearing upon the use of it by Postmaster General Farley as a defense for breach of these contracts.

It is an old American doctrine—and I believe we have not strayed so far from the ancient landmarks that we cannot remember, at least, a few old American doctrines—that a contract involves two parties, at least, and that any modification of such a contract requires the assent of all the parties to it. If there are two parties to a contract, one party cannot modify it by sheer force; both parties must agree to the modification. So the Postmaster General, who was in authority at the time of the action against which the accusation is made here, held that old American doctrine to be binding and effective on him. He talked over, as the record shows, with committees of Congress, the question that if the Postmaster General were to acquire powers that were arbitrary they could only be acquired if a law were passed enabling him, with the consent of the contractor, to effect a new relationship between the contractor and his Government. So this authority to exchange contracts for certificates had an objective which was wholesome and good, namely, that the policy of the United States Government as executed by its Cabinet officer, the Postmaster General, might not be hampered by the binding effects of contracts but should be free, so that the Government could arbitrarily fix the rates of pay accorded to every certificate holder after the exchange from a contract to a certificate. Before such exchange the Government could change a lesser rate or raise it only with the consent of the contractor.

Under the McNary-Watres Act the Postmaster General not only might do so but he must fix the rate from time to time, at least annually. That was but one of the tremendous powers given to this Cabinet officer. For whom? For the benefit of these contractors who today in public utterances are called crooks? They occupy honorable positions in our life, in our commercial society, as do the former officials who performed great service at great sacrifice to themselves for their country and who are now besmirched by a cancelation which it is claimed is based on collusion and fraud and by the allegation that one of the fraudulent acts which formed a part of the conspiracy, as stated in the letter of the present Postmaster General, was the exchange of contracts into certificates? No; it was not for the benefit of the contractor, Senators, but for the public benefit, because it always enabled the Government, in the interest of society, which pays the bill, to reduce the cost of the carriage of their air mail at any time when it was proper and appropriate so to do. It was not a privilege of Government, either; it was a duty; it was a duty which fell upon the shoulders of Postmaster General Farley as heavily as it ever bore upon the shoulders of Postmaster General Brown, his very able and distinguished predecessor in office. Did Postmaster General Farley take advantage of the powers under these certificates and reduce rates? He did. He recognized that law; he ratified the use of it; and he reduced, when the Appropriations Committee of the other House, the Budget Director, and the President himself so acted upon the appropriation that it became necessary to reduce, not only the compensation of operators but also the number and extent of routes, the location and direction of these mail lines, and to take air mail away from cities that before had been favored with it. Then he used this power not in the interest of the contractor but always against the interest of the contractor and in the interest of the public.

Another thing about these certificates, whose use was condemned and made an excuse for the breach of these contracts, which is in the public interest, is that they have direct reference to the promotion of the safety and efficiency of aeronautics for the carriage of passengers, and these certificates are made binding and good for the benefit of an operator for the long period of at least 10 years, if that period is provided for in the certificate, only if the operator conforms to the rules and regulations relating to safety and the efficiency of the carriage of passengers by those who contract to carry the air mail for the Government. So this particular power exercised by the predecessor of Postmaster General Farley was a legal power; it was a wise power; it represented the policy of Congress; and its execution was directly in line with the spirit of the law and with every expression of legislators recorded in the hearings.

Mr. President, have I not said enough about the defense for breach of these contracts to show that it is a complete fallacy? Does it not reveal that the men who dealt with this defense were not acquainted with their subject, were not acquainted with the law and its meaning, were not acquainted with the policy of the Government, and were absolutely blind to the public good that was intended to be subserved by that law? We will come to that later on, if I have the time, and see the admission under oath that the men who broke down these contracts did not consider the public good and did cancel the contracts on a pretense that they had a legalistic cause for doing so.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the route-certificate item, will he yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The newspapers carried the news on Friday of the opening of bids for new temporary contracts, with an expression of surprise that the bids were so low. Several newspapers made the statement that at least one result of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts was a considerable saving to the Government in the payment for the air-mail service. What I wanted the Senator again to make perfectly clear—he has made it clear, but I am not sure that everybody fully realizes it—that there is not anything that has been done by the present Postmaster General or that can be done under the new contracts that could not have been done under the existing law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is absolutely correct. The fact is that one must say more than that. The Postmaster General cannot do under these contracts what he could do under the certificates. He cannot arbitrarily fix the rate as he could do under the certificates. It is a joke, a stupendous joke, to give any significance to the amount bid for the temporary contract as affecting permanent legislation by the Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want to be understood as attempting to disrupt the trend of the argument of the learned Senator from Vermont; but this thought has occurred to me as regards the prices bid under the temporary-contract arrangement, and I should like the Senator to discuss it. I am fearful that these prices bid under the temporary arrangement will be more destructive of the science itself than anything that has come about, because they represent temporary rate structures set up in an emergency looking to getting contracts rather than looking to the building up of the science for the future.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the learned Senator from Nevada has expressed a thought that occurred to me at the outset. These are sacrificial bids; they are bids that constitute the purchase of a franchise in the hope that by once establishing themselves they may ultimately obtain what they have destroyed.

We well remember a reference in the very letter to which I have referred to a contract for 9 cents a mile in the northwestern part of the United States by Varney Airlines. No sensible legislator would ever allow his mind to be deluded by the supposition that such a rate would compensate the carrier for its services; and yet, in undertaking to excuse this breach of contract, use has been made of that 9-cents-a-mile bid, which was a sacrificial bid, in order to justify the breach of the air-mail contracts and in opening the business to bidding in order to bring about just what happened—to induce others to make sacrificial bids and thereby give a false impression of the situation economically.

I am departing somewhat from my line of thought because of the interrogatories, but let us look at the situation. Heretofore there has been a policy of Government which comprehended not merely flying the mails but also comprehended the building up of aeronautics for passenger service and for the national defense.

If we so arrange this business that a man may obtain a contract by competitive bidding for a very low price and we do not have those provisions which are connected with the certificates relating to safety and efficiency in the passenger service, what is the trend of relationship? Is it not obvious that the Government has shifted its policy and has abandoned the improvement of a postal service in order to buy its air-mail transportation just as cheaply as it can?

It will get only what it buys, for the air-mail carrier is not going to ruin his stockholders if he can help it. He will trim his sails to reduce his costs, and he will get his costs down to the amount of that bid or as near to it as he can, at the price of those safety devices which cost large sums of money and which have been created during the past 4 or 5 years because of the financial encouragement which the Government has held out to individuals to put all their ingenuity and all their inventive genius and a great amount of sacrifice into the development of safety devices for flying ships, and into all sorts of ground equipment to make the ways safer for the carriage of passengers, because there was a formula in accordance with which a price was paid for every one of these devices. There was created also a great competition between the carriers to have a better and safer and more efficient passenger service in order also to gain the rewards that fine service to one's fellow men always produce.

Mr. McCARRAN rose.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. This thought, Mr. President, I think is in keeping with that which is now being discussed; otherwise I would not bring it forward. The safety devices and safety appliances have largely been produced and brought forth at Government expense. I think the Senator will agree with me to that extent. Commercial lines flying the air are not altogether to be credited with those developments.

Regarding the carrying the mail, it is a commodity which belongs, while in its custody, to the Government of the United States. Does not the Senator believe that, as in the case of any other commodity, a rate structure should be fixed after study and investigation, which rate structure should be applicable to those who carry the mail by air?

Mr. AUSTIN. I agree with the Senator on that principle. Of course, we would have to know more in detail about it to make any specific agreement, but I like the thought just the same.

Mr. President, I cannot leave this subject without specifically pointing to the difference between the single-motored craft and the multimotored craft. There was a prize or a bonus or a subsidy, I care not what it is called, for the use of multimotored equipment to encourage it use. Postmaster General Brown had a vision that came true. He saw the multimotored ship whose wings were powerful enough to support without injury five elephants standing upon them, a great ship flying with the speed of a meteor from coast to coast without a stop, bearing not only mail and express but passengers as well. He saw that splendid vision come true on the very day that this breach of contract took effect and the institution collapsed.

The bids for temporary service do not require multi-motored equipment. Under the specifications a contractor may use single-motored equipment provided he does not carry passengers and provided he flies certain routes. Thus we have expressed a direct reversal of the policy of Congress, a direct turn from that lofty vision which was embodied in the very foundation of the McNary-Watres Act, to that sordid idea of doing a political turn at the cost of reduction of the standards of safety, when some of the very same routes on which the Department now allows the use of single-motored planes are the ones upon which our gallant young Army fliers gave up their lives obeying the command of the Government to try to patch over the horrible collapse created by the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

Mr. FESS rose.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, if he desires to interrupt me.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in his observations, because I agree with him entirely. The suggestion that was made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is in point also—that the law permits or authorizes contracts for carrying the mail. The major element in the law has relation to the art of flying, building up a great aviation industry in order to avoid an increased cost to the Government by new requirements of improvement in aviation, just such as the Senator from Vermont has mentioned in relation to the trimotored plane or multimotored plane. No one knows what will be the ultimate limit of that idea.

There was a limit put in the law by fixing a maximum rate above which the Postmaster General could not go. But at the same time the provision to make the air-mail business stand on its own feet with safety and speed required an examination at least once a year. On one occasion former Postmaster General Brown had a revision twice a year, and in the space of only 4 years the rate was reduced from $1.29 down to 42 cents.

What I want the Senator to make perfectly clear, having reference to propaganda such as we heard on the radio Friday night when Lowell Thomas gave his period over to Harllee Branch in order that the country might learn what a wonderful thing is going to be done under the temporary contracts whereby we are saving so much money, is that nothing can be done on the basis of that reduction that cannot be done under the present law by the Postmaster General.

I resent the Government undertaking to indicate that the only thing there is to come out of the cancelation and this great wrong is that we are going to get lower rates. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has put his finger on the point. We are going to do it at the cost, not only of the service but of the whole industry itself, and probably the loss of lives of many citizens of the country.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I agree with what the learned Senator from Ohio has said; and, as I have already indicated, the condition is worse than he states it. The rates bid on these temporary contracts cannot be changed. The old rates could be changed and reduced. These rates are a joke in many respects, because on some of the routes they are just exactly as high as the rates of the old contracts.

Take the midcontinental route, from New York City to Oakland, Calif. What was the rate on that route? Ninety-seven and one-half percent of the maximum rate of 40 cents a mile. And what is that? Thirty-nine cents. Well, look at the new bids on the transcontinental routes, and what are they? Thirty-nine cents. So it is a joke to hear people talk about a "saving" on account of such bids. Some of the bids are for more than 39 cents.

I do not care to be diverted into a detailed discussion of rates. Before departing from the subject of certificates, however, I might call attention to a fact which affects the public good and which, therefore, denounces the excuse advanced by Postmaster General Farley for the cancelation of these contracts. This public good is that capital cannot be induced to go out and work if it is terrified about its safety. The employment of the unemployed cannot be increased if capital is so terrified about its future that it will not work.

The future of the operator, the future of the contractor, was one of such doubt that it was specially reported on by the learned doctor from Harvard University who made the investigation in 1932. Now we see the reason why it was doubtful. It was because of the shortness of the time of his contract, which was to expire in 1936, I think. These certificates enabled the Postmaster General to give some assurance of the future of the contractor by extending the time 10 years. Thus he could later find an employer who had sufficient confidence in the future to pour out his wealth and make it work in conjunction with labor for the benefit of his fellow man.

That is one of the things which answers Postmaster General Farley's complaint with regard to these certificates. He says:

> Extensions of these contracts for a period of 10 years under the so-called "certificate" method were arbitrarily made by Postmaster General Brown on May 3, 1930.

Reason, justice, common sense, the letter of the law, the policy of Congress, and the public good, all denounce that defense as specious, and as of no value or effect.

What was his next proposition? He says—and I read from the next sentence in the letter of February 14 by Postmaster General Farley:

> Then Postmaster General Brown proceeded to build up, by so-called "extensions" of routes, part of the system of the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation, and the greater part of the American Airways and the Transcontinental & Western Air systems. This means, in simple terms, that if one of these companies had a contract for part of a through route a transcontinental system could be built on that short line. To illustrate, if one had a route from Boston to New York, it could be extended from city to city until it reached the Pacific coast without competitive bidding. These great systems were built in this manner.
> I am convinced that before any of the air-mail contracts were awarded those interested held meetings for the purpose of dividing territory and contracts among themselves.

Now, it will be seen that the subject of extensions and of meetings is one and the same subject, and I intend to discuss it accordingly.

Before examining the law itself to see what it means I desire to call attention to an outrageous misrepresentation, and that is that the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation was built upon these extensions. The record shows that every single route that covers the whole length of that main transcontinental line, extending from New York to Oakland, Calif., was not built upon extensions. There was not an inch of extensions in it. It was built upon contracts let by bidding before the McNary-Watres Act was passed at all, or was even under consideration. There were two extensions made of that line long after the McNary-Watres Act was passed—one of them a feeder in the Middle West that ran up North, and another a little tip end added on from Los Angeles to San Diego. Moreover, there was National Parks Airways, which did not have an extension in it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kean	Reynolds
Ashurst	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Couzens	King	Russell
Bachman	Cutting	Lewis	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lonergan	Shipstead

Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Walcott
Carey	Hastings	Patterson	Walsh
Clark	Hatch	Pittman	Wheeler
Connally	Hayden	Pope	White
Coolidge	Johnson	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the scope of the McNary-Watres Act with reference to extensions and consolidations, which the Postmaster General uses as a defense for cancelation of the air-mail contracts? The act itself provides, in section 7, that:

> The Postmaster General, when, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

To state the case briefly, in order that references to hearings which I shall make may be understood and their application correctly made, Postmaster General Farley and those who hold with him claim that an extension within the meaning of this law cannot be any longer than the thing extended; that an extension can only be made once, and that that is the end of it; and that an extension cannot be made on an extension, and a through line to any place thereby created; whereas Postmaster General Brown understood the law to mean that by extensions he could revamp the air-mail map of the United States.

Taking this matter in the light most favorable to Postmaster General Farley, I ask the question whether, if his construction of this power were right and the authority of the Postmaster General were as limited as he claimed it was, he would then have any excuse or justification for breaking these contracts? Obviously not. They had been in operation for years before he got around to thinking that he ought to break them. They had been serving the public in a wonderfully beneficial way for 12 months during his own incumbency of the office; and, even if he held the view which he claimed he held, then he should have considered the propriety and wisdom, from the standpoint of the public interest, of destroying all these contracts just because he disagreed with his predecessor in office over the interpretation of the law.

What we say is that assuming that this evidence will support his view, it does not justify the accusation of fraud and collusion, and the besmirching of the good names of men and of public officials, just because he holds one view of the law and they hold another view of the law.

But let us examine what the contemporaneous interpretation of that act and of that language was with respect to extensions, in order to see what the record shows; for certainly we in the Senate should be governed by the record rather than by political speeches which are reiterating collusion and fraud in the public press all over this land. We hope that the record of the transactions by the Congress may be safer for the public to follow than the record of such political addresses.

I refer to the hearing on February 19, 1930, on House bill 9500, which was the predecessor to the McNary-Watres Act. Senators will remember that the McNary-Watres Act was approved on April 29, 1930. In this record, at page 8, the following appears:

> Mr. KELLY—
> Referring to Representative KELLY—
> Of course, General, the yardstick idea was never contemplated under the previous system. The yardstick was a matter for each individual route, based on competitive bidding, and naturally it was determined by the bidders, just the same as star routes, mail-messenger contracts, and other things of that kind where bids are made.
> Postmaster General BROWN. Well, competitive bidding in the air-mail business is of doubtful value and is more or less of a myth. In the case of most of the contracts there has been only one bidder, and in other cases I think if we were to throw the whole matter open today to competitive bidding we would have very few competitive bids. That is to say, we would have very few people come in and bid who knew anything about the business. We would have promoters come in and bid against air-mail operators; we would have people come in who had stock to sell and who hoped to get their stock sold before their losses were so great in carrying on the business that they could not sell the stock, but there would be, in my judgment, very little real, substantial bidding by men of experience able to carry on an industry of this kind in the present state of the art.
> Mr. KELLY—

And this is the important thing, bearing upon the contemporaneous construction of this language—

> Mr. KELLY. That is the reason we provided the 6-year extension without further bidding.

I call the Senate's attention to language used in that hearing on this very section of the bill, which cannot be avoided, which cannot be answered or disputed, which is so clear that it must be persuasive, and which, of course, is of the highest evidentiary value, because it in part induced the passage of that act. Postmaster General Brown, testifying before the committee considering amending the Air Mail Act, at page 27 said:

> Section 6 authorizes extensions and consolidations when the public interest will be promoted thereby. The purpose of that is to enable us to revamp the air-mail plan of the country and make it a logical one, so far as we have the wisdom to do so.

We have heard all sort of yelps and cries and bellows of fraud and collusion because the Postmaster General called together the operators—not only the operators of the air-mail contracts but also operators of passenger lines who had no air-mail contracts—in order to see what could be done to revamp the air-mail map; and the accusatory finger has been pointed at the Postmaster General and everyone else who participated in that meeting because they were doing exactly the thing which it was stated in this hearing section 6 was provided to give them the power to do, namely, "revamp the air-mail plan of the country and make it a logical one, so far as we have the wisdom to do so."

Of course, the rational thing to consider in this interpretation is what that meant. So far as the operators were concerned, it meant trying to ascertain where the equities were, where the pioneering rights were; and if they could be ascertained, either by a finding of fact or by an agreement between the operators, then they would afford the Postmaster General a basis of making a logical distribution of the routes in laying out extensions and consolidations.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if it is not true that the spirit as well as the letter of the McNary-Watres Act was that the carrying of the mail should be by competitive bidding.? I think the Senator from Vermont will undoubtedly answer that in the affirmative. If that be true, then I make the further inquiry if these conventions, as I should call them, these meetings that were conducted from the 19th of May on, were not for the purpose of avoiding the spirit of the act?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall have to answer "no" to both questions. It is apparent that there are two Senators who view the McNary-Watres Act differently; two men of whom there can be no doubt that they are free from interest, bias, prejudice or any of those fallacies of logic which interfere with the study of that act and arriving at a good judgment about what it means, and yet they differ. If we were to punish them, because they differ about the meaning of that act, by calling them "crooks", would it not be an outrage? Would it not be an outrage to accuse them of fraud and collusion because they construe this act in a certain way—one of them in one way, and another in another? Of course it would. If the opinion held by the Senator from Nevada and disputed by the Senator from Vermont is an excuse for canceling the air-mail contracts, then it is in the same class with the other excuses which are laid down in the letter of the Postmaster General of February 14—not worthy of consideration. I feel sure, however, that the Senator from Nevada would not take that position. We differ, and I am sure that he can give good reasons for his position.

For my own part my reasons are as follows: The act itself provides two methods of procedure in laying out and revamping the air-mail map of the United States and making it more logical than it had before been. One of them was contained in one section of the act and the other was contained in another section of the act. The bidding feature was contained in section 4, reading:

> The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by aircraft between such points as he may designate to the lowest responsible bidder at fixed rates per mile.

And so forth, and so forth. The other is contained in section 7, reading:

> The Postmaster General, when, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidation of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

Attention has been called to the fact that the language contained in section 4 with respect to bidding is not a command; that it does not limit, it does not restrict the methods. It says that "the Postmaster General is authorized." It does not say the Postmaster General "shall"; and in section 7 that power stands in the same way. The Postmaster General is allowed to use his judgment. It says, "When in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby" he may make extensions; he is not obliged to make them, the act does not say he shall do so.

Now I am about to cite the record from year to year, and first, to the hearings preceding the adoption of the act, hearings which characterize the language of this very section, and also the hearings held through the years until this cancelation took place, in order to show that the interpretation of the creators of the act, and the interpretation of those who executed the act, and the policy of Congress as expressed on the floor, all agree that the power to extend was sufficient to create the routes that were actually created, because those routes are specifically set forth in those hearings and are specifically approved as being within the power of section 7.

I turn to page 34 of the hearings. It will be recalled that I had pointed out where the Postmaster General specifically stated that section 7 was intended to enable him to revamp the entire air-mail plan and to make it more logical. We come now to page 34 of the hearings on amending the Air Mail Act, February 19, 1930, and we find specific extensions referred to.

> Mr. GLOVER. These lines that the Postmaster General has mentioned here as possible air routes, the route from New York to St. Louis, Atlanta to Los Angeles, which completes the picture in the Southwest, and Norfolk to Pittsburgh, and there the present line hooking up with the Transcontinental, Pittsburgh to Cleveland, and then with the southern transcontinental coming into being, we believe that the line should be extended down from Pueblo, Colo., which now comes down from Cheyenne and ties up with the southern transcontinental at some place along Sweetwater or Midland, Tex., which will connect up and give New Orleans a direct connection with the Northwest. Then a route from Louisville to Dallas, and then our line that we have in mind to connect up with the Canadian prairie service west from Winnipeg. Our connection would come up from St. Paul and Minneapolis, the Twin Cities, to Winnipeg, through Fargo, N.Dak.
> Mr. SPROUL. Is it your opinion that many of those short lines that have been established should be discontinued or merged into longer lines?
> Mr. GLOVER. I believe that is correct; yes, sir.
> Mr. SPROUL. That is your idea, that that should be done?
>
> Mr. GLOVER. Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. SPROUL. Are you working on a scheme to do that?
> Mr. GLOVER. We have a scheme; yes, sir; a well-laid scheme to do that.

I emphasize the word "scheme" because it is found in the record. That was the word used by those who had to do with this particular clause. They applied it to this particular clause. It is a very significant word, a word that comprehended a whole plan. It did not comprehend a fraction of an idea or of a design; it comprehended the rounded scheme of the development. We will hear the Senator who reported the McNary-Watres Act to the Senate using that word, and we will hear of the Representative in Congress who reported that same measure to the House of Representatives using that word as bearing upon the interpretation of this very clause as to extensions and consolidations.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FESS. It might be of interest to the Senator, if he does not know who Mr. Sproul was, to say that he was one of the most outstanding Members of the House of Representatives, representing a portion of the city of Chicago, and himself a very large business man. Evidently he used that term, because he initiated it in his testimony, as a builder, and, of course, it has no ulterior meaning. Some people think the word "scheme" implies something that is immoral.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I regret exceedingly that I could not hear all that was said by the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], but I wondered if he was justifying the word "scheme" as having originated in Chicago. If he was, I wanted to have him discuss it a little further.

Mr. AUSTIN. I appreciate the contribution of the Senator from Ohio. There is always tremendous power in a word, but there is lent to it a force and effect far beyond the lexicon meaning when it is presented by the person who uses it driving it to its target, and therefore I am very much pleased to identify Mr. Sproul.

Now, I call attention to the report on the McNary-Watres bill, submitted to the Senate by former Senator Phipps, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. With respect to section 7 he used this language in that report:

Section 7 authorizes extensions or consolidations of existing routes. At the present time the scheme of air-mail routes, which has grown a little at a time, is illogical. There are short lines and there are long lines, some of which should be consolidated and others of which should be extended.

Now I read from the report submitted by Mr. Watres presenting the same bill to the House of Representatives. He said:

Section 7 authorizes extensions or consolidations of existing routes. At the present time the scheme of air-mail routes which has grown a little at a time, is illogical. There are short lines and there are long lines, some of which should be consolidated and others of which should be extended.

There is identically the same language used in both reports, and undoubtedly the word "scheme" came from the hearings as having a peculiarly comprehensive effect, because they were discussing section 7 in the committee before the bill underwent this parliamentary procedure, and they were trying to tell anybody, they were trying to tell us today, that the meaning of extensions and consolidations as used in that section was to extend to a scheme.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Some time when the Senator finds it convenient I should like to have him distinguish between "extension" as we have found it used in the course of the hearings before the special committee, and what to my mind was the real meaning behind the term when used in the legislation, namely "elongation", an extension in its general course rather than the meaning of the term as we have found it used in the hearings.

Mr. AUSTIN. The word "elongation" does not appear so far as I know in the hearings on the bill or since the introduction of the bill. I have examined very closely to discover the use of that word. It appears to our special committee that a lawyer who was consulted about it undertook to use that word in order to illustrate his understanding of the word "extension", claiming that "extension" did not have the scope of "elongation." But it has a different meaning here. According to the contemporaneous construction of those who created the law, according to those who exercised the power and according to the investigating committee of 1932 and the learned Dr. Crane, of Harvard, "extension" here comprehends more than "elongation."

There are three kinds of extensions. There may be only one kind of elongation. Here we have extensions which are lateral feeder lines. Here we have extensions which are couplers, which join together two disconnected lines. Here we have an extension that is end to end and does conform to the word "elongation." The Comptroller General, I think, undertook to make some general definition, although he admitted that it was utterly impossible to make a definition of "extension" which was exclusive or comprehensive enough in its character so that it could apply to every case. He said we have to consider every case upon its own merits, and, in effect, he said that in order to have an extension lawful, the basis of the extension must be the public need; second, there must be an immediate relationship to the existing project or service; third, subordination—that is, a subordinate relationship to the existing service, project, or route; fourth, it must not overshadow or subordinate the route sought to be extended.

I do not know that I would adopt even that as sufficiently comprehensive and exclusive to let us know at all times and under all circumstances what is an extension. But certainly up to date, no matter what learned debates there may be, no matter how much scientific men may differ, no matter who is right and who is wrong about the meaning of it, it is today nothing but an academic dispute. The great transcontinental routes of the United States are made. They already existed prior to February 19, 1934, as great servants of the air-minded millions of the country and an almost indispensable help to speedy commerce in the United States, connecting almost every corner of the country in 24 hours. Is there any sense, is there any justice, is there any decency in ruthlessly destroying those airplane companies because of an academic dispute over the meaning of the word "extension" in the law? Give them the benefit of the doubt; give them a construction that is according to the most favorable view to them; does it justify pointing the finger of fraud at an official of the Government? Does it justify condemning without trial citizens of the country who have borne honorable names throughout a long life of service to the public? Asking the question answers it.

Moreover, this is a condition; this is not merely a philosophical discussion; neither is it a lawsuit or a trial that is dependent upon the construction of the statute. Here is a case where a Postmaster General canceled contracts and alleged that he did because they were induced by fraud and collusion, and that extension constituted an essential part of that fraud and collusion. It should be noted, in passing, that only 28 percent of all the routes of the whole country were made by the method of extension.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, would it unduly interrupt the Senator for me to ask him a further question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not at all.

Mr. FESS. In reference to whether there is an elongation or a change of direction, I think we have a good illustration in the case of the Northwestern where the points of the parent route were Chicago and the Twin Cities. If we say that an extension cannot be anything else except a continuation in the same direction, then the Northwestern, which goes to the Twin Cities, could not be extended to Duluth, because the original direction is northwest and Duluth is a little northeast. Neither could it be extended to Fargo, because the original direction is northwest, and Fargo is rather west. It seems to me it would be absolutely silly to say that in order to have it extended it must be in the same direction in which it started.

I think the Senator is right when he says the discussion is purely academic. On the other hand, if a company that already has a route is going to have another route added to it, it does not seem to me it is significant as to the particular direction it takes. It would be an extension of its fixed route provided that when the mail starts it continues on its way even though it does change direction.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the contribution of the learned Senator from Ohio is sound, and that any scheme of air-mail map must necessarily take into effect a network that will reach the thickly settled areas whence comes the business of passengers and mail.

I will ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] to read for me from page 149 of the hearings of November 12, 1930, before the House Committee on Appropriations on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill in order to prove that the contemporaneous interpretation of section 7, relating to extensions and consolidations, is in harmony with the exercise of power under it by Postmaster General Brown.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if I have permission, I read, beginning on page 148 of the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations in November 1930:

NEW ROUTES CONTEMPLATED

The CHAIRMAN. How many other new routes have you under contemplation now?

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, this line (Spokane-Seattle) is out, and that is the only territory which is not served by a transcontinental line. We believe that should be dropped out. This line is a necessity here—Kansas City to Denver. We believe that this line from Cheyenne which connects up at Pueblo should be connected down to El Paso, where it connects up with two transcontinentals, as well as this line over here to Fort Worth from Pueblo, passing through Amarillo and Wichita Falls to Fort Worth, where there is quite a voluminous flow of mail for the Northwest by air. That allows the mail to come out through here, from Amarillo to Pueblo, through here, and up into Seattle and Portland and Tacoma and Spokane. And then we would like to straighten out this line here. Our South American mail has developed to such a great extent that we would like to make this, as they say, a high-ball line, so as not to have it carry air mail all the way out here to Atlanta and open up that territory in those Southern States of North Carolina and South Carolina, where the great mill industry has been built up and has a very large flow of mail to New York City. That, of course, we have in mind, but we have been prevented, for reasons which I have mentioned, extending that line through Louisville, Nashville, Memphis, and Little Rock, to Dallas. That is a new extension.

Mr. THATCHER. You have that covered in last year's appropriations?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes, sir; we have in this year's appropriation only next year's new extension. Nobody ever thought we would take a line down to Louisville and stop there; we always had in mind a line going into the Fort Worth section.

Mr. BYRNS. Section 7 reads:

"The Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established."

I do not know how it could be made any plainer. I understand the Comptroller General says that you cannot extend or consolidate.

Mr. THATCHER. What does he base his decision on? What is his argument?

Mr. GLOVER. On the line from Cleveland to Louisville the extension is greater.

Mr. THATCHER. What is the basis of his argument that you cannot extend or consolidate?

Mr. GLOVER. That is the reason—that the parent line is shorter than the extension. The extension is longer than the parent line, the original line.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it is. Congress says you need not extend it.

Mr. GLOVER. We put it in there with that purpose, and we made the plea before the Post Office Committee that we be allowed to extend some of these lines and consolidate the short lines. Mr. Chairman, here is the picture between Cleveland and Pittsburgh: The Postmaster General had in mind that the Capital of this Nation should not be without air-mail service to the West, and he wants to extend it to Washington and take it down to Norfolk, but the Comptroller General says, "You cannot do it."

The CHAIRMAN. What does he base his opinion on?

Mr. GLOVER. Just what I told you.

Mr. ARNOLD. Section 4 of the Watres Act seems to authorize the Postmaster General to establish new lines.

Mr. GLOVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ARNOLD. And section 7 authorizes him to make extensions by consolidations of routes which are now or hereafter to be established. Taking the two together I do not see where his authority is curtailed in any way.

Mr. THATCHER. You could extend for a short distance and extend it another short distance and meet his technical objections, if that is a technical objection. I think that the decision is unreasonable if that is what he bases it on.

The CHAIRMAN. You are talking about those lines you think ought to be built. Suppose that they were built. How much more money would that cost the United States? Suppose they were in operation today.

Mr. GLOVER. The Spokane-Seattle route, as I mentioned, is out of it, Mr. Chairman, and that leaves about $2,525,000, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If they were established and the Postmaster General, thinking that he has a right to do this whether Congress wants it done or not, establishes them this year, then next year you would have to have a new map by reason of the varied extensions you have made or new lines you have built necessitating a lot more, and there is going to be no end to it in the world.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General wants to cooperate with the committee.

Mr. BYRNS. I read section 7 a while ago. It seems to me that it clearly and unequivocally gives the right to the Postmaster General to extend or consolidate. I do not care whether the Comptroller General says to the contrary or not. If the English language means anything it means that.

Section 9 says:

"After July 1, 1931, the Postmaster General shall not enter into contracts for the transportation of air mail between points which have not theretofore had such service unless the contract air-mail appropriation proposed to be obligated therewith is sufficient to care for such contracts and all other obligations against such appropriation without incurring a deficiency therein."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is an interpretation made within 9 months after the approval of the McNary-Watres Act by a great committee which had to do with this legislation. That was the Post Office Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, which had under consideration the appropriating of money.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Am I right in my understanding that the Mr. BYRNS who made that statement was subsequently Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, and is now the majority leader in the House?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; that is perfectly correct; and there never has been a time in all these hearings when Representative BYRNS, before he was chairman and after he was Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, has not maintained steadfastly that the authority conferred in section 7 of the McNary-Watres Act gave the Postmaster General power to make extensions in order to revamp the entire air-mail map and to make it a logical one. He was in at the beginning, and he has continued through to the end, and has been absolutely consistent from the start in interpreting that section in spite of all the different views others may have held with respect to the power. Even Postmaster General Farley, on cross-examination, had to admit that whether Postmaster General Brown had or had not done what was right in making these extensions would depend upon how that act was interpreted, and how section 7 was interpreted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did Representative BYRNS ever take the position that it was not the duty of Postmaster General Brown to advertise the air-mail routes, and let the contracts for them to the lowest bidder?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I know nothing about that. That is an irrelevant inquiry. It has nothing whatever to do with this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be irrelevant, but nevertheless the act provides that the Postmaster General shall let these contracts to the lowest bidder; and that is what the Postmaster General did not do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is that intolerance of mind, that incapacity to see any view excepting one, which has led to this misconduct by the Government in dealing with its citizens. A rational, tolerant, reasonable consideration of this law necessitates the conclusion that there are two ways of procedure under the McNary-Watres Act, one of them equally as legal as the other, and that there is no command in the law to let the contracts by bidding. There is a mere authorization; and the Senator from Tennessee can have the language of the authorization read to him if he would like to have that done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. I do not have to have the act read to me. I am familiar with it. I desire to ask the Senator if the bill which was originally proposed by the Postmaster General did not give him specific authority to let these contracts without bidding, and if that provision was not stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that that provision was stricken out?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator from Tennessee in my own way. He cannot tie me hand and foot. I will answer him. The original draft of the bill did not contain exactly what the Senator says, and one cannot answer his question with a "yes" or a "no." There was a provision in the original draft which enabled the Postmaster General to negotiate contracts, and that was not accepted.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; and after that provision was not accepted, and was left out of the law, the Postmaster General proceeded to do just exactly what he had asked the Congress for authority to do, which authority was refused.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is an inaccurate statement. The Postmaster General did not negotiate any contracts at all. The record is directly to the contrary; and before I get through discussing the meetings which were held I shall prove it. I shall prove that the effort in the first place was not to establish contracts by negotiation, but to establish facts by an inquiry, and that it wholly failed and was utterly ineffectual, and that the other feature of section 4 of the McNary-Watres Act was resorted to primarily because of that failure, and also because of the dispute over the interpretation of section 7, which is now under debate.

I call the attention of the learned Senator from Tennessee to the fact that Postmaster General Farley, who used this as a defense for breach of these contracts, on oath before the special committee investigating the air-mail and ocean-mail contracts, testified as follows:

Senator AUSTIN. I will ask you about the other feature of the letter. You do recognize there are two methods of making contracts and extensions that are authorized, one equally as legal as the other, under the McNary-Watres Act, do you not?

Postmaster General FARLEY. That is true.

He said 17 times—just think of it, 17 times in the course of that examination—that he was doing what he did and that he was making his answers by advice of counsel. When we open the big book here, the record of the experience of the McNary-Watres Act in Congress, we find that on the floor of the House of Representatives there was some discussion of section 7 of that measure, and that Representative Kelly and Representative Hogg both stated on the floor of the House that section 7 invested the Postmaster General with the power to make these extensions and consolidations for the purpose of creating a more logical scheme of the air mail in the United States.

The bill went through the House and came to the Senate, and what was its experience here? Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee can elaborate what the experience was here. The only debate that occurred here in the Senate on that bill was this. I read from page 7618 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 24, 1930:

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to its consideration; I want to have the bill passed. I merely wish to say that it was stated by the Postmaster General and his assistant in charge of the Air Mail Service that new lines are to be constructed, among others one from Nashville, Tenn., to Memphis and Little Rock and Dallas. I hope the bill may be passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The record is perfectly accurate; we passed the bill after striking out the provision for negotiation of contracts between the Postmaster General and private individuals. That had been stricken out in the House, as I recall. If the act had been properly interpreted, it would have been a good law. I did not oppose it because I thought it was a good measure, but after it was passed the Postmaster General paid no attention whatever to its terms: he let contracts by negotiation, which he had been denied the privilege of doing, and the present situation is what we got.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is not familiar with the record. There is not one word of testimony of a contract let by negotiation; not one word.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are just talking about terms and words. As a matter of fact, it was done through the so-called "extension policy", which was an even more devious policy than the negotiation policy. The air-mail routes were extended from place to place all over the country.

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course, they were.

Mr. McKELLAR. And it was a violation of the law.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what the law provided for. When the Postmaster General asked for the enactment of section 7, he told the world that he wanted it for the purpose of revamping the entire air-mail situation, and all Congress knew it, and, of course, we assume that the Senator from Tennessee knew it when he rose here and told us that he wanted the bill passed; that he understood that there was to be one of those routes, which was afterward adopted by extension, brought down into his territory. That route was one of the very same routes which had been discussed as an extension proposition in the hearings on this very act and on the appropriation bill of the year before.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand the contention of the Senator from Vermont, there was no provision in the law requiring an advertisement before the original letting of one of these contracts?

Mr. AUSTIN. The original letting?

Mr. LONG. I mean after that, advertising was not required before an extension?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. LONG. I had understood it to be said on the other side of the Chamber the other day that the present administration had made just one of those extensions itself, one from Buffalo to New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; that is the record.

Mr. LONG. They made one?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. They needed to make but one. One is enough. That shows an interpretation of the law. When a man exercises a power under the act, he more than admits, he claims, the power under the act, and confirms that that is the meaning of it.

Mr. LONG. I think that is sound. I think one is enough. Then, as I understand, the only point about which we are having any argument is whether or not these contracts could be let by extensions.

Mr. AUSTIN. Not exactly that.

Mr. LONG. If there is an argument, that is the only argument we can have.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have not a contract here let by extension at all. This is what we have; we have original contracts let by bidding. The next step in the history was extension in time for 6 months of five of them. The next step was changing the contracts into certificates, which gave the Postmaster General certain powers over them which he did not previously have. The next step was letting by bidding of two transcontinental routes, the midtranscontinental and the southern transcontinental routes. The next step was several extensions, going over the whole period of 2 years or more, at different times, basing an extension on an existing route certificate.

New lines are not created by extensions. An extension is based on an old line, and they go from place to place only if they have a starting point. That is what was done, and that is one of the excuses given for destroying the whole works. It is said that that is collusive and that that is fraudulent.

Mr. LONG. Let us say that that is out. I think I agree with the Senator, from what I have heard of the matter. Let us say that that is out. What is the next thing they claim?

Mr. AUSTIN. The next thing is blackmail. After exhausting all the different defenses for the act of cancelation, after being driven from defense to defense, finally Solicitor Crowley, having admitted that the contracts themselves which constituted the consolidations of the southern transcontinental route, the contracts between Halliburton and the company which bought him out, showed a hostility instead of collusion between Halliburton and the Postmaster General, then he stepped right off of this ground of collusion entirely and said, "I will call it blackmail." That was the last chapter of the defense, blackmail.

Meantime the Postmaster General goes all over the country and makes speeches, political speeches, still yelping "Collusion", when his solicitor had retreated from collusion entirely and adopted blackmail.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the assistant of the present Postmaster General alleges blackmail?

Mr. AUSTIN. The assistant of the present Postmaster General charged blackmail in so many words.

In response to the interrogatory of the Senator from Louisiana, I think I ought to read into the RECORD the testimony that was adduced. I read from the hearings of the special committee, page 2797. Attention had been called to the contracts:

Senator AUSTIN. Now, these contracts show, do they not, just the opposite relationship to collusion? These contracts show disagreement, do they not?

Mr. CROWLEY. Yes; it is the plainest case of collusion I ever saw.

Senator AUSTIN. Collusion between whom?

Mr. CROWLEY. Between the chairman, representing Postmaster General Brown, Mr. MacCracken, and this man that wanted to bid on this air line. He sent this telegram in July, and he brought them to his own terms in August, and here is evidence of it.

Senator AUSTIN. Don't these contracts clearly show that instead of there being collusion between the Postmaster General and Halliburton there was hostility?

Mr. CROWLEY. I am sure there was hostility on the part of the Postmaster General toward Halliburton. The evidence is clear on that.

Senator AUSTIN. You cannot very well mix hostility with collusion between the Postmaster General and Halliburton, can you?

Mr. CROWLEY. You might refer to it in some other term, "blackmail", or something like that.

Senator AUSTIN. That would be something new. I would not be at all surprised to have you make that charge, sir, but up to date we haven't it in the statements which appear in the letter of February 14, in which the Postmaster General says you advised him about.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to draw the attention of the learned Senator from Vermont to the fact that, whether he would call this collusion or designate it by some more comprehensive term, it resulted in the payment of $1,400,000 to Mr. Halliburton in a mythical deal in which he had practically nothing to sell.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall have to show that the facts differ from that materially when I arrive at the question of bidding, which I am going to take up separately. I will say that the assertion, which I have heard made and I have seen it in the record of the hearings before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, will not bear the test of examination.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Postmaster General sent a telegram forcing Mr. Halliburton to do something? It is Halliburton the air-mail man we are talking about?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; he had a line.

Mr. LONG. What was the telegram which the Postmaster General sent Halliburton?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; the Postmaster General did not send him any such telegram at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the $1,400,000 that my good friend from Nevada was talking about? That is a goodly sum of money. I am interested in that. Where did it go? To whom was it paid?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I can answer only one of the learned Senators at a time. I will first answer the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am curious about the $1,400,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should think the Senator would be. He has been told, or it has been implied in questions before the committee of which he was chairman, that the $1,400,000 was paid to Halliburton to cause Halliburton not to bid.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the testimony, and I am curious to know what the Senator has to say about it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no; there is no testimony of that kind. Questions were asked which implied that, but there was not a word of testimony to support the implication. On the contrary, Halliburton did bid. He never sold out the right to bid. He promised to bid, and he did bid. The $1,400,000 was paid to him for a line which he had been flying for years, and for his equipment on the ground and in the air, and for some of his best pilots.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who paid it to him?

Mr. AUSTIN. The company which became the sole owner and manager and operator of a transcontinental route, according to the scheme.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as it turns out, according to the Senator's statement, for whatever material Halliburton had—worth very much less than $1,400,000—he was paid, by the successful bidder, the sum of $1,400,000. Is that not correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; that is not exactly true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not that substantially true?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; it is not substantially true.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is not substantially so, why did Halliburton get $1,400,000 from the successful bidder?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator asked the question and then answered it himself, so I am not concerned with disputing with him.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am asking the Senator a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a debate between Senator McKELLAR and Senator McKELLAR, in which I ought not to interfere.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator is satisfied with that answer, I am, because there is no doubt in the world that the successful bidder paid to Halliburton $1,400,000 and took whatever Halliburton had, and Halliburton went out of business, and the Transcontinental Line got this big route after having paid for a portion of it or paid $1,400,000 to keep this man out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is not the testimony. That is a bare assertion, and, unfortunately, it is contrary to the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. The testimony in the record speaks for itself, of course; but there is no more question about that being correct than that we are here in this Chamber.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is so remote from the facts that I will not trouble to deal with it. When I come to the subject of the bids, who made them, and who got the awards, I think the record will show that the person who bought out Halliburton was not the person who made the bid and was not the person who was given the award. I will ask the Senator to wait and see.

Now, I should like to proceed with my discussion of this subject.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I believe the Senator will realize that I am not at all prejudiced on this subject. I am not undertaking to defend the committee, and I am not undertaking to prosecute the committee or other persons, but I have heard so much said on the subject that at this time I should like to have the question cleared up. I do not see the point with reference to the contracts not having been let.

I agree with the Senator so far as I have heard the explanation from him, and I have not heard that seriously disputed. It seems to me the only question is on the point of collusion. If the Senator has stated the facts about this matter—and I am going to ask him if he will not enlarge upon it just a little bit—I want to see just where the collusion was, if there was collusion. So far as a man selling out is concerned, he can sell out to whom he pleases. He can bid, or he need not bid. There is no law compelling him to bid or not to bid. As I understand, however, Halliburton did not sell to the man who got the contract.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; not to the man who was awarded the contract.

Mr. LONG. That is certainly contrary to what we have all been led to believe.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. As a matter of fact, Halliburton made the bid and got the award.

Mr. LONG. He got the award?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; and so did the Robertson Aircraft Co. make a bid and get the award of another route.

A business transaction occurred which the former Governor of Louisiana and the present Senator will recognize as one of the characteristics approved by the Supreme Court in the Appalachian case, of combining great units for such a service as this from coast to coast. That is a consolidation, one of the very things expressly provided for in this act.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator mean that the two consolidated?

Mr. AUSTIN. A third company came in and bought them out, and consolidated the northern end of this line with these two links, which carried through to the coast and made one through route from coast to coast under one management, which was ideal. It was not only ideal in theory, but it proved to be ideal in practice, and there grew up there a great transportation system.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want to be understood as attempting to disrupt the discourse of the Senator from Vermont, but I think the Senator from Vermont is discussing the Transcontinental & Western Air.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; the Senator from Vermont was discussing the southern route, Safeway, the line owned by Halliburton.

Mr. McCARRAN. That was the Halliburton Line originally; but what line took over the Halliburton Line?

Mr. AUSTIN. Finally the Aviation Corporation of Delaware became the owner of it; but there were steps in the transaction.

Mr. McCARRAN. The steps to which the Senator referred—I am using his own terms—were that various companies were asked to come in and contribute $500,000 apiece until the sum of $1,400,000 was made up to buy out Halliburton, because Halliburton had threatened to bid.

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President. This transaction has been distorted to give it an appearance of collusion. When I reach the subject of the bids I shall discuss those contracts in detail. I merely say in passing that Aviation Co. owned 20,000 shares of the capital stock of Western Air Express, and the Government in its scheme objected to any interlocking of interests between the transcontinental routes. Its plan necessitated the unscrambling of this interest, and therefore Aviation Co. was forced to sell and get rid of that 20,000 shares to Western Air Express.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the learned Senator will pardon the interruption, I trust he is not confusing Transcontinental & Western Air with Western Air Express.

Mr. AUSTIN. No, indeed. I know what names I am using. Western Air Express became a part of, or rather became owned in part by, Transcontinental & Western Air; but Western Air Express remained a legal entity throughout all these days and is alive today. Western Air, by the way, was one of the successful bidders on that midtranscontinental route. Here is Halliburton's testimony, on page 1488, in which he admits:

> Well, I was a bidder on the southern transcontinental route from Atlanta to Los Angeles, but had previously agreed to sell my interest in the line in the event the contract was awarded.

Mr. President, the testimony is so voluminous, the record is so long, that I am sure it would not accomplish the purpose which I seek, which is informing the Senate regarding the subject, if I went through with it, as I have prepared to do, for I am but half-way through with the hearings that interpret section 7 relating to extensions and consolidations in a manner which fully justified Postmaster General Brown in making the connections between disconnected routes, the feeder lines that he made, and the end-to-end extensions which filled out the picture and made a logical scheme such as was spoken of by those who reported the bill for passage, by those who discussed the act on the House floor, and by all who had had to do with it at that time. So I am going to pass on to another feature, and that is the meetings which were held.

These meetings are connected inseparably with this section of the law, section 7 relating to extensions and consolidations. These were the meetings at which epithets were hurled. It is said that an epithet is more powerful than an army. Of course, when the accuser's case is so rotten that he must employ an opprobrious epithet in order to excite the emotions, and to drive men away from intelligent and calm consideration of the facts, his case is bad, indeed; and that is the situation here. They called these meetings "spoils conferences", and we had that statement bruited about the country; we have seen it in newspapers in order to make people who do not know the record, who do not know the facts, believe that there must be something about these meetings that was collusive, that was fraudulent, because they called them "spoils conferences."

The fact is and the record is that when the representatives of the air lines were called together the first question that was raised for consideration was, "By what method do you choose to proceed to revamp the air-mail map of this country? Two methods there are; one is by bidding, the other is by extension and consolidation. Which method do you choose?"

The first man to speak was Col. Paul Henderson, a man who was opposed to the Postmaster General's plan, a man who had interests that were hostile to the interests of the Postmaster General, a man who had a friend in the Postmaster General's department who was very close to him. That man in the Department followed Paul Henderson in all that he did and took the same attitude that Paul Henderson took with respect to the scheme of the air-mail map of this country. I will refer to that later, because if there is any evidence at all tending to support the claims made here, it will be found in the testimony of Paul Henderson, who was an interested witness, who was a prejudiced witness, who was a pure hearsay witness, who was out of the country and in England when the events which he undertook to characterize in writing and before the committee took place; but Paul Henderson was the very first man who spoke up in that meeting. Curiously enough, this is a case where a man has had the boldness, the audacity to come before the public and say that a conspiracy was set forth in writing, that collusion and fraud were recorded in writing, and within the past week he has gone before the public and said that in the possession of the committee are admissions in writing of fraud and collusion. To be perfectly calm, to be perfectly fair, to be very tolerant, one cannot examine this record without believing that the man who made such a statement as that must be ignorant, that he must be incapable of understanding the English language.

Mr. President, this was not a surreptitious meeting. This meeting was called, in the first place, in a public manner. A release was issued by the Post Office Department on May 19, 1930, which release was published in the press, and advised all the world that the meeting was going to be held. The press release read, in part, as follows:

> In order to acquaint themselves with the provisions of the Watres bill, recently made a law through the signature of President Hoover, representatives of every large passenger and air-mail carrying concern throughout the country conferred today with Postmaster General Brown, Assistant Postmaster General Glover, and other officials of the Department in charge of the Air Mail Service.
> This is the first time that operators of the large passenger lines have had an opportunity to talk with the Postmaster General and exchange views with him since the Watres measure became a law.

Then it goes on to tell about the discussion of the air-mail and the passenger service. Then it is said that they were preparing a map of the United States—

> Before the close of today's session it was agreed that the operators should prepare a map of the United States which will show in detail plans for a network of passenger and air-mail routes to cover the country and which will be determined at future conferences with the Postmaster General.

And so forth and so on.

It even tells who was there, either in person or by representative.

Mr. President, is it not absurd for a Cabinet officer to cancel these contracts and to condemn a whole class of men, citizens of this country, to smear and smut up his predecessor in office and others who were in official position by cancelation based upon the allegation of collusion and fraud in a meeting advertised in all the newspapers of the country? Is it not perfectly absurd to ask the people of the United States to believe that the record made in writing at the meeting is a record of conspirators engaged in a fraud? No one but a man who will not think can come to any such conclusion. Any fair-minded person examining that written record will come to the conclusion that they were acting under that provision of the law which enables the Postmaster General to make extensions and consolidations, and that they agreed that it was not so well to try to revamp an air-mail map by bidding.

Here is the record. It should go into the RECORD of the Senate; it should be read by every interested citizen of this land, and we will abide by the judgment of all of them. I quote from page 2325 of the hearings:

The Postmaster General invited representatives of passenger air lines to meet with him in conference at 2 p.m. on May 19 for the purpose of discussing the provisions of the Watres bill insofar as it offered aid to the passenger lines.

The following persons were present.

And there are named 25 persons and 12 companies. As a matter of fact, three other companies were also there or were represented there. It ought to be remembered in this connection that claims have been made that all the lines represented, all the persons there, obtained contracts, which is about as near the truth as some of the other assertions which have been made in interrogatories to me. Only nine companies were ever granted contracts and the vast majority of them obtained those contracts before the meetings were held.

The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres Act.

And so forth. Further on it reads:

The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest. He outlined certain prospective routes that were in contemplation.

Here we have Colonel Henderson responding first. Did he think the Postmaster General did not have the power to make the extensions? Let his words speak for him:

Colonel Henderson said: "I believe it is quite possible for this group to work out a plan." He asked for instructions from the Postmaster General as to some policy. He mentioned extensions and then assigning such extensions to some operator who has no mail contract. He indicated the air-mail contractors would be willing to agree to such a plan.

Later in the day and in the record he again spoke:

Colonel Henderson thinks those who have air-mail contracts should be organized into one committee and those who have no air-mail contracts should be organized into another committee.

Was he stepping out of that meeting believing it to be collusive and fraudulent, or was he participating in it?

Mr. Maddux feels that if they do not receive an air-mail contract they could not live, and he hoped the bill would take care of this. He would rather see the plan work out as mentioned above than competitive bidding. He said, "That is the view of T.A.T."

There is another man who thought the method that should be employed should be under section 7 of the law instead of section 4.

Mr. Mayo said, "I think the suggestion is a good one rather than to have competitive bidding." He thinks the routes we have worked out with the directors on their certificates are fair.

And so forth. I could go through and read it all, but I shall not weary the Senate with the reading. I will ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Postmaster General invited representatives of passenger air lines to meet with him in conference at 2 p.m. on May 19 for the purpose of discussing the provisions of the Watres bill insofar as it offered aid to the passenger lines.

The following persons were present: Messrs. Russel, Hanshue, Woolley, and Bishop, of Western Air Express; Messrs. Mayo and Patterson, of Stout Air Lines; Messrs. Maddux, Sheaffer, Cuthel, Furlow, of T.A.T. Maddux Air Lines; Messrs. Coburn and Hinshaw, of Aviation Corporation; Messrs. White and Johnson, of United Aircraft Corporation; Messrs. Doe and Elliott, of Eastern Air Transport; Mr. Henderson, of National Air Transport; Messrs. Marshall and Denning, Thompson Aeronautical Corporation; Messrs. Robbins and Hann, of Pittsburgh Aviation Industry; Mr. Van Zant; Mr. Lou Holland, of United States Air Transport; Mr. Ted Clark, representing Earl Halliburton; and Lawrence King, of Detroit.

The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres bill and invited suggestions from those present as to the ways and means of assisting the passenger operators, inasmuch as it is understood none of the so-called "strictly passenger lines" are breaking even and it is apparent that they will need some assistance if they are to continue. The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest. He outlined certain prospective routes that were in contemplation somewhat as follows: A southern transcontinental route from Los Angeles to San Diego, thence to Fort Worth and Dallas; also a route from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City and Los Angeles; from St. Louis to Tulsa and Fort Worth; from St. Paul to Winnipeg; possibly from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Omaha; possibly a route south from Cheyenne; and possibly one from Albany to Boston. He referred to the plan mentioned below.

Colonel Henderson said: "I believe it is quite possible for this group to work out a plan." He asked for instructions from the Postmaster General as to some policy. He mentioned extensions and then assigning such extensions to some operator who has no mail contract. He indicated the air-mail contractors would be willing to agree to such a plan.

Mr. Maddux feels that if they do not receive an air-mail contract they could not live, and he hoped the bill would take care of this. He would rather see the plan worked out as mentioned above than competitive bidding. He said: "That is the view of T.A.T."

Mr. Mayo said: "I think the suggestion is a good one rather than to have competitive bidding." He thinks the routes we have worked out with the directors on their certificates are fair, and so forth.

Mr. Clark said: "I would prefer the plan suggested rather than competitive bidding."

Mr. Lou Holland said: "I think it should be worked out by agreement, as I am afraid that competitive bidding will result in wild promotions."

Mr. Hanshue: "We are willing to do anything within reason to work out the plan rather than to go into competitive bidding."

Mr. Coburn: "I believe there is a community of interests among the operators in the Department, and they are ready to cooperate and find out how to do it."

Mr. White: "I feel sure that the entire group would be delighted to go into such a conference and work it out along the lines suggested."

The Postmaster General asked everyone to speak if there were any objections to the plan suggested and said that this was the appropriate time to express their opinions or objections thereto. No one rose in objection to the plan.

Mr. MacCracken suggested grouping the representatives together according to locality in order to work out the details of the plan or any other plan that might be gotten up, suggesting they might even have four committees, or an eastern and a western committee.

Colonel Henderson thinks those who have air-mail contracts should be organized into one committee, and those who have no air-mail contracts should be organized into another committee.

Mr. Cuthel suggested that certain members of this group present to the Postmaster General a grouping of companies to deal with southern and midcontinent transcontinental routes.

The Postmaster General decided to permit the operators to use the room in which the meeting was held for the purpose of organizing themselves into such groups as may be agreed upon and to report back to the Postmaster General when they had reached a conclusion with regard to the suggested plan. He suggested that they stick to the routes outlined.

E. B. W.

Mr. AUSTIN. As a matter of fact, every company represented there, whether it had a mail contract or did not have a mail contract, assented to operating under section 7 of the law instead of under section 4 of the law, namely, to try to create the air-mail map by extensions and consolidations rather than by letting contracts through public bidding.

They started to do it. Then, what happened? The cupidity of men, the utter selfishness of companies, entered into the situation in such a way that the fine plan of the Postmaster General, about which we have been reading in the hearings and for which the law provided, went for naught. They could report in agreement as to certain lines, but there were other lines for which there were so many claimants and about which there was so much disagreement that they could not agree at all. On some of the lines there were as high as five different fliers claiming some pioneering equities.

About that time conditions became so disastrous among them that a question was raised regarding the authority of the Postmaster General to go along with the matter. When the report was made on June 4 of a disagreement regarding some of the lines and of an agreement regarding the other lines the Postmaster General sent back word to those who were in the meeting, "You have picked all the meat and left the bones." In other words, those lines about which there was no controversy, those lines where there was only one claimant, those lines where somebody was perfectly willing to get out of the way because he knew his claim was not good, were easy to handle and as to them there could be an agreement. But it was as to those routes where there might be a question of fact as to who was there first and who pioneered, and as to those lines where there were as many as five different claimants for the same pioneering right, that the Postmaster General needed agreement. He could not decide those questions. So they were told that he would ask the Comptroller General for an opinion about the group whose line led to Winnipeg.

His opinion was not rendered until July 24, 1930. The matters of which I have been speaking were on June 4, 1930. Paul Henderson went to London and left the situation. In the meantime many of those who had no air-mail contracts besieged the Postmaster General to do something for them and to do it under section 7 of the act.

But on July 24 came the opinion of the Comptroller General, which held that, although they might extend the route to Winnipeg, they might not extend it to Omaha in the other direction, and thereby create an entire new route solely by extension without anything upon which to extend it. First, they must have a base; first, they must have a contract to begin the extension, or they may not have the extension.

Never from that time forth was there anything done to try to arrive at an agreement upon the equities and the pioneering rights or to try to make the air-mail map in a logical form by agreement. That was the end of it.

I had intended to invite attention to the testimony of various persons who participated in that meeting to show the significance of the period, but I am using too much time already. I shall merely refer to the record, so that those who wish to read may learn the story. The evidence of the end of these conferences will be found in the testimony of Clark, page 1509; King, page 1524; Henderson, pages 1477–1486; Sheaffer, pages 1544, 1662, 1665; Woolman, page 1602; and Taney, page 1616.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator include in his reference the testimony of Wadsworth, found on page 2323 and following of the record? On page 2325 the Senator will find a memorandum prepared by Mr. Wadsworth in shorthand, written out by him afterward in narrative form, which gives the exact facts as to what took place in that conference.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this is an exhibition of what might have caused the judgment to cancel these contracts. Here I have been reading from that page and from that memorandum and commenting on that very meeting and on that very same record, and yet the learned Senator from Tennessee now rises and asks me if I will refer to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would object if I should read from that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I should object.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator should take his own time. We are under an agreement limiting debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will not interfere unless the Senator is willing to have me do so. I just wanted to show that the Senator had left out some things that were said in that meeting.

Mr. AUSTIN. If that is the case, I shall be glad to have the Senator read. From what page does he intend to read?

Mr. McKELLAR. From page 2325. This is the celebrated so-called "spoils" meeting:

> The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres bill and invited suggestions from those present as to the ways and means of assisting the passenger operators, inasmuch as it is understood none of the so-called "strictly passenger lines" are breaking even and it is apparent that they will need some assistance if they are to continue.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, does he want that read twice?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I want it read twice, because the Senator from Vermont did not read some of the comments on it by some of those present, as I recall.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have had them put in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take only a moment for me to read it:

> The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest. He outlined certain prospective routes that were in contemplation somewhat as follows: A southen transcontinental route from Los Angeles to San Diego, thence to Fort Worth and Dallas; also a route from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City and Los Angeles; from St. Louis to Tulsa and Fort Worth; from St. Paul to Winnipeg; possibly from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Omaha; possibly a route south from Cheyenne; and possibly one from Albany to Boston. >
> The Postmaster General asked everyone to speak if there were any objections to the plan suggested, and said that this was the appropriate time to express their opinions or objections thereto. No one rose in objection to the plan.

Mr. President, if the Senator will permit just one other word, here was a law which required these routes to be let by competitive bidding. Here were these contractors closeted with the Postmaster General and agreeing upon a plan which violated the law; and thus we find why that conference was called "the spoils conference."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is about what I suppose took place down in the present Postmaster General's office—that kind of reasoning, and that kind of utterance. By no other means can I imagine how anyone could arrive at cancelation of these contracts on the ground of collusion or fraud than to have taken just that position. I submit to any fair-minded man that the examination of that record will show that the business there of these men was trying to decide upon what method would be used for establishing these routes; whether it would be under the bidding clause, namely, clause 4, or whether it would be under the extension clause, namely, clause 7.

These gentlemen all thought at the start that they could agree upon pioneering rights and equities, and, therefore, that they could handle the matter without bidding. They started in to do it, and they failed. There was a total collapse. The thing fell flat. Never were they able to do anything of the kind at all. Then, at some later period, when attempting to excuse or justify this cancelation, the present Postmaster General said:

> Oh, but my solicitor says that the effect of their talking there about this business held over in such a way that it amounted to the same thing as if they had agreed. They all got contracts. Everybody there got contracts.

That is about as near the truth as anything else has been. The record shows that they did not all get contracts. The record shows that out of 14 companies that were represented there, only 9 companies got contracts. The record shows that in the case of the routes for which contracts were let, the contractors already possessed their rights before the meeting, and only two routes were created after that meeting—namely, the midtranscontinental line and the southern transcontinental line—and each of them was created by competitive bidding; and the only bidders who did bid for those lines were the only people who were qualified either to make the bid or to perform the service. Of course, it is historically true that in the case of most of these contracts there has been but one bidder qualified to make the bid. There has been but one bidder interested in making a bid in many cases. In some cases there has been more than one bidder, but only one was qualified; and even though the bid of the qualified person was higher than the bid of the disqualified person, the award was made to the one who was qualified under the specifications and the law.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYDINGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. WHITE. When the Senator speaks of bidders not being qualified, does he refer to a want of qualification under the terms of the law?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do, Mr. President. The Postmaster General did not fix the qualification. The law fixed it. The Congress fixed it. If there was collusion in limiting bidding, then Congress is the colluder. It was the policy of the law that a company should have had experience in flying of a certain length of time and of a certain scheduled regularity over a certain route, as stated not only in the law itself but in the discussion of it by Representative LaGuardia when the bill was up for passage in the House; and that is what I refer to when I say that only one of them was qualified in most cases.

Now, we have the Postmaster General's defense for cancelation that there was an unlawful extension of time for 6 months; that there was an unlawful and arbitrary exchange of contracts into certificates extending the time 10 years; that there was an unlawful and collusive meeting of these people to divide up the air-mail map and revamp it. What has become of all these defenses? They have vanished, and we now come to the fourth one.

The fourth defense was that the bidding was not competitive bidding. That is as near the truth as any of these defenses have been; but there was no agreement that they should not be competitive. That is what is necessary in order to support this defense. The fact that they were not competitive is no defense. The fact that they were not competitive is the result of the economic situation. They were not, indeed, competitive. They could not be competitive. Competition could not be expected on these two great transcontinental routes between the same men who became the operators of them under a plan to have distinct, independent transcontinental routes that were equally well-balanced and competitive at all points of junction. That scheme could not be carried out and have the same people bid on both routes.

Why could not that be done? Not because of an agreement; not because of a law; not because of the plan of the Postmaster General or because of his order, but it was so because of the economic law. The man who wanted to fly a midtranscontinental route had to concentrate all his energy on getting that route. He could not afford, in the nature of things, to be shooting a blunderbuss all over the map. He had to aim for that which he wished. He had to put up a half-million-dollar bond. He had to have the capitalization and the financing to operate a transaction which involved millions and millions of dollars in flying the mail under the law from ocean to ocean. All those little fellows, worthy enough—I criticize them only because of their subsequent misconduct—were disqualified not only under the law but in fact because they were not competent financially to bid or to operate these lines. They did not have the necessary type of ship. They did not have the airways.

Mr. President, the bids were opened, and it turned out that there had been a joint bid on each of the transcontinental lines. Two different operators, two corporations, which previously had flown different routes which would be included in the transcontinental lines, in each case bid for the whole distance. In the southern transcontinental route there were the Halliburton's Southwest and the Robertson Aircraft & Transport Corporation. In the midtranscontinental route there were Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport.

In order to complete the financing of both of these routes, and to make the operation uniform, and capable of being flown from coast to coast without stop, or capable of being flown from one great city to another, skipping a stop now and making a stop then, according to flying conditions, corporations were formed in order to own the capital stock of the successful bidder. Thus there were created these two transcontinental routes.

Let me digress for a moment to consider the whole scheme. Before ever these meetings were held the united company had a complete transcontinental route from New York to Oakland through Chicago, let after bidding, and then transformed into certificates. There was a complete line, which Paul Henderson considered ought to be made the backbone or vertebrae of the entire air-mail system of this country. All of the ribs which would constitute the network connecting cities and towns to the vertebrae, he thought, ought to be feeders into that line. His opinion of the policy of Postmaster General Brown of establishing two more transcontinental lines was not very good. As a matter of fact all his interest seemed to be against that scheme. He thought he ought to fight to save his own line as the only true grand trunk on this continent. There it was, however, a completed line.

Still farther north and west was the Northwest Airways, whose original contracts were let by bidding, and the routes thereof were afterwards transformed into certificates, and still afterwards extended farther toward the Pacific Ocean and the northwest corner of this continent.

Postmaster General Brown had the splendid vision of at least three and possibly four great trunk lines crossing the country at intervals, far enough apart so that they would best serve the commerce of the Nation and best serve the unifying purposes of such a remarkable institution of communication as aeronautics, these to be articulated with the surrounding country by north and south lines at suitable places according to the demands for rapid transportation of air mail and passengers. That even had been stated to committees of Congress. It will be found that the reports of the hearings contain a very definite plan, or "scheme", as they called it, on the part of Postmaster General Brown, a scheme which, under normal conditions, could be carried out only after 10 years, or possibly 12 years, unless it had the stimulating power that was afforded by the McNary-Watres Act.

If it had been dependent upon letting to public bidding by the little short lines which constituted the coupling-up extensions made by Postmaster General Brown, what would they have had? The most illogical, the most "string-bean" plan of an air-mail system that can be imagined. Instead of through lines, grand trunks, going from ocean to ocean, there would have been a route that would have run out a little way and then broken up, and another route commanded by another general running on for a little way, and then another piece under another man, and so on, spotted all over the map.

What would have been the effect, according to the testimony of the experts? The air mail is not merely a ship flying in the clouds. There must be established the great airways with their beacons, their telephone-telegraph systems, their radio stations, all the equipment necessary to communicate with the ship in the air, and to tell the pilot what the weather is, where he is going, which way to fly in the dark, to give him the route over which he may pass through the mists and the clouds, show him how to land although he is blindflying, and land immediately on the bull's-eye. All these things are necessary to safety, efficiency, and speed in this business.

Could they have been developed in 4 years, as they were, under that "string-bean" policy of letting to bidding? A man with the vision of a 12-year-old boy must see how utterly inconsistent and impossible that would be.

Mr. President, the contracts were let to the lowest bidder who was qualified to bid. There was a bidder on the midtranscontinental route who underbid the company which was awarded the contract, and that was the Avigation Co., to which I wish to allude for a moment.

Postmaster General Brown was probably as familiar with that company as anybody in the United States at the time it made its bid. In the first place, it was nothing but a "paper" company. We have all heard something about "paper" companies in the examinations that have been conducted. It was just a promotion, and the strangest and weakest part of that promotion was that its existence was not merely founded upon the award of a contract in its bidding but it must be found by the directors to be a profitable contract. Postmaster General Brown had the interests of the Government of the United States at heart. The record is available to show that he was always for the Government; regardless of the effect upon the operator, he was always for the Government.

Postmaster General Brown knew of the lack of capacity and flimsiness of this bidder, and he knew something else; he knew by the confession of Mr. Letson, who was the organizer of that company, and who owned one of the constituent corporations, that the whole thing was "phony"; that a representation had been made to the Postmaster General which had turned out to be untrue and incorrect, and he, Mr. Letson, had the old-fashioned, rugged honesty to go to the Postmaster General and say, "Here; I lay the cards on the table. This contract for the transportation of reels was a phony contract. We tried to justify our financing upon a great contract to transport reels from Hollywood to the East, and I have to admit to you that it is a "phony" thing." Postmaster General Brown said——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Just a moment. My time is very limited. I yield only for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. What I want to ask is did not Mr. Brown turn down the bid of Mr. Letson and his company—which was composed of three companies, by the way, and was a very responsible organization—on a difference of 39 cents? In other words, one company bid $1.01 a pound for carrying the mail, and the other 62 cents a pound for carrying the mail, and did not Mr. Brown accept the one at $1.01? Does the Senator think that was in the interest of the Government?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not according to the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was Mr. Letson's testimony.

Mr. AUSTIN. The fact is that the rate for carrying the mail on that midtranscontinental route was 97½ percent of 40 cents a mile, or 39 cents a mile. That is what it was, and that is what it remained until the Postmaster General, exercising his power under the McNary-Watres Act, reduced it. It was so reduced that 33⅓ percent more miles of routes were carried by that single company than were contracted for by bidding, and in the first 9 months of its service for this country it went into the red $1,800,000. That is the story.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is that the contract where the rate was only 39 cents?

Mr. AUSTIN. Thirty-nine cents a mile.

Mr. LONG. And was that rate reduced 33⅓ percent?

Mr. AUSTIN. Reduction was made by extension of mileage so that it flew 33⅓ more miles for the same money.

Mr. LONG. That is, the rate would then be 26 cents?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know just what it comes to in figures. I should think it might be that.

Mr. LONG. It is somewhere between 26 and 30 cents. What about the other company which the Senator from Tennessee said underbid them?

Mr. AUSTIN. That was Letson's Avigation Co. I was about to tell the Senate about that company.

Mr. LONG. Very well. What did they bid, and who were they? That is what I should like to know.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will tell the Senator. I will read from the testimony of Mr. Letson before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The CHAIRMAN—

I suppose this is the Senator from Tennessee—

So the Postmaster General, after telling you you were going to get a contract, did not give it to you on the ground it was not a responsible bid, although you had underbid the next company the difference between 64 and 97 percent; are those the figures?

Mr. LETSON. Ninety seven and one half.

The CHAIRMAN. He got it at 97½?

Mr. LETSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we still have not got to your contract. I am a little interested in this. Did you get a contract?

Mr. LETSON. It took me a long time.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems so. How did you get it finally?

Mr. LETSON. I think my attitude toward Postmaster General Brown just before this contract was let had something to do with it. About a week before the contract was awarded to T.W.A., I went before the Postmaster General to see if he had decided what he was going to do about awarding the contract. He stated he had practically made up his mind but he was not going to tell me at that time, but if I would remain at the hotel for a short time he would send for me. At that meeting I told him that I thought he should know all of the circumstances that had some bearing on this contract. That was the fact we had used a frame-up as a basis of trying to force the Postmaster General's hand to give us the contract we had bid on. Feeling that was fraud, I told him I thought it was my duty to tell him. That was one contract we made for the carrying of films from Los Angeles to New York. The man who came to Wilmington and made that contract with our group was sent there for some purpose. Originally he claimed he was there to buy ships of Bellanca to carry films across the country for United Artists. To verify that statement, Mr. Adams called up Mr. Mayer, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, as he was interested in the Bellanca Aircraft, as he was president of that company. He said it was true they had considered such a line, and I will say he gave substance to the claim this man was there for the purpose of buying ships for the sole purpose of carrying films, which were made in Los Angeles, to New York, where they were cut and returned for some purpose. He was to pay us 20 cents a mile for carrying films. I have forgotten the poundage.

After the Postmaster General had claimed we could not operate this line on 64 percent of the maximum operating rates—

Will the Senator from Louisiana notice that? That was 64 percent of the maximum rate. The maximum rate was 40 cents, and their offer was 64 percent of that rate.

Mr. LONG. Yes; I understand.

Mr. AUSTIN (continuing reading):

It meant we would operate at a loss, and we used that as the argument to force him to recognize our bid. After this man had signed up all kinds of contracts, within a few days we found out he was bogus. So, at this meeting, a week or 2 weeks prior to the time the contract was let to T.W.A., I told him I thought I was duty-bound to tell him there was nothing to the film contract. He said "I have known that for some time." I said, "How did you know it?" He said, "I have known it." Then he said: "I will tell you something. I am pleased to have you come and make that frank statement. I like you for it. Your Mr. Adams has been here twice, but he has never intimated to me that that contract that you had made had been washed out; he is still trying to get the contract on this line at 64 percent of the maximum rates on the basis of the film contract as well as the post-office pay.

"You stay in Washington a short time, and I will call for you when I decide as to whom I shall award this contract."

And his statement goes on. It is a frank statement by this witness, who was not called there with any other purpose or in any other interest than to tell his story to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The fact shown by the record is that the Avigation Co. bid was submitted to the Comptroller General by attorneys representing the Avigation Co. and those who were interested in the bid, and the Comptroller General obtained a statement from Postmaster General Brown which did not cover in detail all the facts leading to the matter, and thereupon the Comptroller General made a request of the Postmaster General to furnish him other facts; and then, not on the fact of fraud—I think there is no reference in the Postmaster General's evidence submitted to the Comptroller General on the so-called "fraudulent part" of this transaction—but on the fact that this corporation was not responsible, that it had never flown a mile, the contract was not granted.

The corporation which made this bid, it will be understood, was not the component corporation. It was not one of the companies which had experience which made it qualified within the McNary-Watres Act. It was the Avigation Co. which made the bid, a company which had never owned an airship, never flown a mile, a mere paper company, which never would own the constituent corporations unless it secured a contract, and unless the directors should find that the contract was a profitable contract. So not only did the Postmaster General, looking out for the interest and welfare of the United States, say, "We must not and we will not award this contract to the lowest bidder, because he is not responsible", but the Comptroller General also rendered the same opinion.

So the incident ought to be, in the language of diplomacy, regarded as closed, and doubtless would be were it not for the strange, the extraordinary, situation in which today we find the present Postmaster General coming before the country and claiming as a justification for breaking these contracts and ruining a great institution that it was a collusive thing; that it was a fraudulent thing to award that contract to the company which made the higher bid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that in that last conversation which the Senator read as having taken place between Mr. Brown and Mr. Letson the Postmaster General said to him, "Now, I cannot let you have that contract; I have got to let the big company have it; but I will tell you what I will do: I will make one of these other companies, one of the big companies, that have got other lines, give you or sublet to you a contract from Kansas City to Denver", and did not Mr. Letson take that contract from Kansas City to Denver?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is about a half truth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will now show what the record indicates. Let me read from the record.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator give me the page? I examined the witness and I happen to know something about his testimony.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I have not finished answering the first question asked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont declines to yield further.

Mr. AUSTIN. I now call attention to the testimony of the witness. The witness says that immediately following the conversation which I have read he departed.

I read on, in order to give the context of the statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. What page?

Mr. AUSTIN. Page 520 of the transcript. I have just concluded with this part of the transcript.

I was displeased with that, and you know it.

And the transcript continues:

> Furthermore, what is the status of your company now?
> I said, "We were in the merger of Avigation Corporation, a group I told you of, Ohio Transport, Pittsburgh Airways, and United States Airways, but we made an agreement when we went into this company that in the event we did not get this bid, we would dissolve the Avigation Corporation."

Mr. President, you can see how ephemeral that kind of an organization is.

> He said, "You are fortunate. I cannot give the contract I have told you." The contract was given to the press that evening or the following evening, I do not know, but very soon afterward, as soon as this press notice gave the information the contract had been awarded the T.W.A., I immediately went to New York. I met Mr. Adams there, one of our group, and told him we had lost the contract. I told him I wanted to complete the dissolution of the Avigation Corporation, and I asked his consent to that, and he gave it. He called up the parties interested with us in Pittsburgh, and I went from New York to Pittsburgh and proceeded to dissolve the Avigation Corporation.
> The CHAIRMAN. How long was that after the bid was awarded?
> Mr. LETSON. I went directly home.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. You did not wait at the hotel?
> Mr. LETSON. Oh, yes; he told me I was not to participate in the contract; that is when I left.

I read far enough there to show that the question asked by the Senator from Tennessee could be answered only in the negative.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will just read a little further——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot spend time doing the futile thing of reading for the education of the Senator from Tennessee. We are operating under a unanimous-consent agreement which limits opportunity for debate, and in his own time, I presume, the Senator from Tennessee can refer to this matter and read for himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in fairness, I am perfectly willing to have the Senator's reading taken out of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor. Does he yield or does he not to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Vermont refuses to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this witness also testified before the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee that he was frightened that he might be awarded the contract on that bid; that he was in fear and trembling that they might give him the contract on that bid, because he was conscious of the fact that he was utterly incompetent to handle it. He said he did not have the financing wherewith to set it up, and so he considered it the greatest boon to him that the Comptroller General and the Postmaster General both decided that he was not a responsible bidder. In other words, the record shows that he was, indeed, not a responsible bidder, and that is why his bid was not successful, and no other ulterior, sinister, slimy cause was there, as has been imputed to these honorable men and these honorable officials publicly as an excuse or justification for breaking these contracts, they having made these contracts by public bidding, in which every person who was qualified under the law had an opportunity and right to participate, including this man Halliburton.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator unduly if I should ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am right in mid-air with a sentence. When I shall have finished I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. FESS. I thought the Senator was about to leave that phase of the subject with reference to Halliburton.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I want to refer to the matter further.

Then commenced the claim by those who had a selfish purpose—by those who had no other object than to gain for themselves what another man had—that these contracts that were let by bidding were collusive because they involved the exclusion from bidding of somebody who would have been a bidder. So we find ultimately, when the cancelation takes place, that the Postmaster General points to that ancient statute of 1872 and says that he is canceling these contracts for that cause. I think I have not noticed it as having been brought out at any previous time that the specific cause pointed to by the Postmaster General is the cause mentioned in that section of the act of 1872, and no other, despite the statements in public utterances, in political speeches, and talks about collusion and fraud at the meetings, whereas that statute relates only to letting by bidding; it is only for that cause that cancelation may occur; and then there is a great question whether the Postmaster General may presume the facts, whether he may assume the facts. If he may, then that is a case where it has been avoided as much as possible and where the statute itself, so far as I know, has never had an interpretation by a court of justice. So it becomes necessary to examine into what happened with respect to those two contracts, notice of which came into our investigation and which I have before me.

I noticed this hypothetical question in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I take this from a press copy, because I have not conveniently at hand the transcript on this point, namely—

"If an officer of your company testified under oath that his concern paid $1,400,000 to persuade another company not to bid", Senator O'MAHONEY asked, "and if it were established by the terms of the contract, would you consider that proof of the charge?"

"That is a hypothetical question", Lindbergh said, "and it is out of my field. I do not want to answer that."

And again, at a later place, as publicly reported, occurred this, according to the press:

"Do you know", O'MAHONEY asked, "that the company with which you are associated paid another company $1,400,000 not to bid on an air-mail award?"

Answer. I have absolutely no knowledge of that.

So twice that assumption has been made, and it calls for some examination of the record, does it not, because, unless the Postmaster General is able to stand upon that assumption, unless he is able to find that is a fact, where, in all the record, is there any evidence, any fact, that brings him within that ancient statute of 1872?

Let us examine the agreement relating to the subject. That ought to be the best evidence. These agreements came to us one attached physically to the other. The first one is between American Airways, Inc., Southwest Air Fast Express, Inc., and Erle C. Halliburton. As a matter of fact Southwest Air Fast Express, Inc., was a corporation owned by Halliburton, and Halliburton is tied in here as an individual as well as his corporation. That was August 23, 1930. Halliburton owns Southwest Air Fast Express, Inc., known as "Safeways", and that is in the central area of the country.

American owned at that time various lines. They agreed to bid jointly for the southern route and form a new company, the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, with 10,000 shares of no par value stock to be divided 5,000 to Safeways for its assets in escrow, with an option on the part of American to buy the 5,000 shares for $1,400,000. It will be noticed that that is an option. It depended upon American's decision, not upon Halliburton's decision, whether that option could ever be exercised and the $1,400,000 paid. I quote from the contract with respect to it:

Such option shall not be exercisable in part, but only as an entirety.

Why? Why should that provision be there, and what is the significance of it as bearing upon the issue here? It was there for the purpose of securing absolute and complete ownership and control in American Airways of through lines from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It was divisible because they were not going to allow Halliburton to impede or interfere with or block or obstruct that main purpose of having one control from ocean to ocean.

That disposes of 5,000 shares of the new corporation, the Aviation Corporation of Delaware. What about the other 5,000 shares? The other 5,000 shares were to go to American Airways, Inc., for $569,000. If the option to which I have referred were not exercised in 3 months, Safeways was to get the first 5,000 shares for the same sum—$569,000. Halliburton was to be chairman of the board and to have other duties. Coburn was to be president. A study of the agreement will disclose that three of the key operators of Halliburton were sold with the contracts.

The suggestion is made to me by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] that even if there was an agreement on the part of Halliburton not to bid, it could not justify cancelation of all the other contracts on the map. How could it affect any other contract whatever except that particular contract? That question tests of the merits of the whole gesture. That question shows what an un-American transaction this was to condemn a whole group, a whole class of citizens of the country, to smear them with the charge of fraud, to go out on the stump and accuse them and officials of the Government of being crooks, all in a blanket charge. There is no suggestion that the alleged Halliburton agreement had any relation to any other contract than that contract regarding Safeways and the southern transcontinental routes.

There was another agreement attached to it. It was referred to in the text and it was also physically attached to it, so that the two agreements were together. The other agreement was between American Airways, Inc., Transcontinental Air Transport, and Western Air Express, and dated the same date, August 23, 1930. It provided for mail to be carried in passenger ships, T. & W. A. to bid on the mid-transcontinental route and American Airways, Inc., to bid on the southern route through its subsidiary, Safeways. Western Air Express agreed to sell to American for $300,000—and I am going to refer further to this matter in a moment—the equipment operating between Dallas and Los Angeles. They having disagreed as to the value, the question of value was to be referred to the Postmaster General to settle. Also the airport and additional equipment at Tulsa for $284,500 was to be sold. American was to sell to T. & W. A. 20,000 shares of Western Air Express owned by American, or Aviation Corporation of Delaware, for $1,115,000.

Let us examine that and see just what was taking place. What was taking place disproved this charge of agreeing to limit or restrict the bidders who could bid on these routes.

Western Air Express owned a "wishbone", as it might be described, of airways that ran out from Los Angeles, one of them southerly between Los Angeles and Dallas, and one of them northerly between Los Angeles and Kansas City, both of them heading into the same point of origin and delivery of mail. The Postmaster General said to these gentlemen:

You cannot hold these two routes. You must sell one of them. You must unscramble. You cannot have an interest in two routes that land in Los Angeles. Those routes must be competitive.

In other words, the Postmaster General's policy was competition and service.

This agonizing about competition in bidding is absurd and ridiculous when we compare it with the fine objective of the Postmaster General, who said:

I have a scheme, a logical scheme, of three transcontinental routes, which shall be independent of each other, and which shall be evenly competitive at all points of contact.

It is ridiculous to shout about lack of competition in bidding when we are considering the building up of a grand system like this and maintaining that great objective of actual independence and competition in service. The facts refute the claim of limitation, and I say the circumstances speak more accurately and more convincingly than the testimony of any person who may have an interest and an ax to grind and an opportunity here to grind it.

"Sermons in stone; books in running brooks"—circumstances that shout so loudly that even one who does not desire to hear must hear!

There is that other transaction which proves the lack of collusion; namely, the compulsion, as it were; the thing which Crowley called "blackmail"; the compulsion upon American Airways to let go its 20,000 shares of Western Air Express and to receive $1,115,000 for those shares from Western Air Express.

Do you see the picture? There was American Airways coming down from New York to Atlanta, thence to Dallas, and thence over to Los Angeles. There was Western Air Express coming over to Kansas City, thence to St. Louis, and thence on to New York City; and there must not be any scrambling between those two companies. They must be independent.

In that situation let me ask any reasonable person what the record means. Does it mean that Western Air Express promised not to bid on the southern route? Does it mean that Halliburton agreed not to bid on the midcontinental route? Not at all. It means that they were undertaking to bid, and they promised to bid, and they understood they were bidding on the routes they were seeking to fly independently of each other. In the nature of that situation there could not be competitive bidding between those two companies any more than there could be competitive bidding by the New York Central and the Atchison, Topeko & Santa Fe Railroad. Why? Because this is not the flexible kind of a line which is invisible and which floats about in the air and goes anywhere that an airship may want to go. These routes follow airways built upon the soil in which millions and millions of dollars have been invested by citizens and villages and great groups of people. They make use of established airports and hangars and beacons and lighthouses and all of the equipment necessary to guide the ships in the air and make it safe for people to ride in the ships. Those airways run across the country in just as fixed and immovable positions as the steel rails that are spiked to the ties of a steam railroad.

Therefore, it is clear that the most absurd claim is made here. Therefore, it is apparent that it is absolutely ridiculous to make the claim here that Halliburton agreed not to bid on the midtranscontinental route or that Hanshue agreed not to bid on the southern transcontinental route. The fact is, they could have bid if they wanted to; but it was an entirely undesirable thing for either of them to do. The logic, the economics of the situation, prevented any such thing occurring.

Who else could have been interested in those routes? Does the record show any company or group of companies that could have been interested? The Avigation Co. was terrified lest it might have that great contract dropped on it; and it was lucky for the country and it was lucky for Mr. Letson that the Avigation Co. was put out of the running.

So, instead of the sinister character which has been attributed to the $1,400,000 paid to Halliburton to buy him out, we have a business transaction like that which occurs whenever there is a combination of institutions for the good of an industry, whenever there is the type of consolidation which was approved of in the Appalachian case. This transaction is right in line with the principle of the decision in the Appalachian case. Halliburton got a good price. Did he get more than his property was worth? I believe he did; but why did he get it? Anybody who has traded in one of these transactions knows that sometimes it becomes necessary to pay more than bricks and mortar are worth for the reason that your opponent has a nuisance value as well as an actual value, and this case proved that Halliburton did. Halliburton was all over the map with his claims, though he had never flown these other routes that he claimed.

If we look at the record of the meeting in May we find Halliburton's name attached to practically every route by number and description. Henderson testified that Halliburton was claiming everything in sight, and he was out to get something, and he wrote threatening letters; and that is one of the grounds advanced for attributing a sinister character to this transaction. It is said, "Why, this is the best evidence in the world that Halliburton was bought out, in order to bail him out and not have him bid." He wrote to MacCracken that he intended to bid. Nobody asked him not to bid. In fact, he testified under oath that he was not bound not to bid, and that he made his bid on the only line in which he was interested, and he got a marvelous price for his contract.

So the assumption—and it is nothing but an assumption—that this $1,400,000 was paid to Halliburton to keep him from bidding on the midtranscontinental line is in conflict with all the circumstances and it is in conflict with Halliburton's own testimony; and anyone who reads the record will see that Halliburton was not interested in saving Postmaster General Brown's administration from anything.

Mr. President, we have now arrived at the point in the record where Solicitor Crowley abandoned all these defenses and resorted to the charge of blackmail. We have arrived at the point where, when he was shown the contracts and the features I have mentioned were pointed out to him, he admitted that, instead of showing collusion, they showed just the opposite of it; they showed hostility between Postmaster General Brown and Halliburton; and finally he characterized the relationship between Postmaster General Brown and Halliburton as blackmail.

That is no more astonishing than many of the other things. It is entitled to just exactly as much credence as the charge of fraud, the blackening of the name and good repute of a great Postmaster General who knew his job, who had an ideal, and who devoted his life to it while here. The record shows that when Postmaster General Brown was before the committee asking for the powers given him by the McNary-Watres Act, he admitted to the committee that if he should exercise those powers it probably would add 6 years to his age. Believe me, he guessed right; for the exercise of those powers brought down upon his head the disappointment and the greed and the cupidity and the selfishness and the politics of all those who gathered at Armageddon and formed there a society without residence, without an agent upon whom to serve process—we cannot find what State it belonged to; we cannot find what city was its domicile—for the sole purpose of securing an opportunity to bid, on what? The contracts held by these contractors, some of them of 10 years' duration in the future!

That attack came down upon Postmaster General Brown, but that was not all. It became necessary, in the administration of his duty on behalf of the public interest, to compel these operators—there were nine of them, holding 24 contracts—to conform to certain regulations made by him with respect to their equipment, safety devices, number of pilots, and all manner of things with respect to their flying. He was obliged, in the administration of his duty as a Cabinet officer, to examine from time to time into the amount of their compensation, and—as has been pointed out so ably by the learned Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]—to reduce that compensation from time to time; and I call attention to the outstanding fact that he is the only Postmaster General who has reduced that compensation, because he considered it a fair thing to do from the Government's point of view, and because the carriers had so improved and increased in efficiency and enlarged their passenger traffic that they were able to stand the cut. He is the only Postmaster General who has reduced the rate for that cause.

Postmaster General Farley reduced the rate because he was obliged to do so on account of a cut in the appropriation.

Mr. President, I will say in closing for the day, if it is seen fit to suspend until tomorrow at this point in my address, that what I am trying to do is to point out that even those who received contracts felt that they were deprived of compensation, that burdens were added to their backs which they ought not to carry, and for these reasons, and various other reasons, even they were not friendly to Postmaster General Brown.

The record shows that always Postmaster General Brown was standing firm and erect, receiving a storm of criticism, showing not a single trace of fraud of any kind, nothing furtive, no interest in any of the private affairs of which he was accused—a perfectly honorable official, doing his duty constantly, and always having in view the public interest, even though it pinched and hurt the contractor. Never did that man tolerate the idea of so manipulating this law in the reduction of compensation as to effect virtually a cancelation.

Postmaster General Brown testified before the Appropriations Committees, and he testified before the special investigating committee of the Senate, that he still was obsessed by the old-fashioned American idea that every party to a contract, even when the Government was such a party, was bound by its terms, and bound by its spirit, and that it ought to be performed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wonder whether it would be agreeable to the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Tennessee, and also to the Senator from Vermont, to conclude the session at this time until tomorrow, the Senator from Vermont to continue tomorrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if we conclude today's session now, would it be satisfactory to meet tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock?

Mr. McNARY. I am quite certain that it will be very satisfactory to take a recess now and to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

During the delivery of Mr. AUSTIN's speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8471, the War Department appropriation bill, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 37 and 40 to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 6 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert: "$181,631, of which sum $8,000 shall be available exclusively for the several objects embraced by the appropriation contained in this act entitled 'Contingencies, Military Intelligence Division.'"

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 12 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "At a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers above the grade of captain."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 32 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For an additional amount for the improvement, development, and augmentation of aviation matériel, and for the training of military aviation personnel, to be immediately available, $5,000,000, of which not less than $3,000,000 shall be expended for the procurement of airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories for the Regular Army and the National Guard; not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be expended for aviation fuel and oil and for the repair and maintenance of airplanes and their equipment and accessories for the training of military aviation pilots; and not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be available for expenditure in the discretion and under the direction of the President, as follows: For airplane accessories for the Regular Army and National Guard; for the investigation and development of a national aviation program, including the employment of personal services without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and all other necessary expenses incident thereto; for the encouragement of development of types of airplanes, airplane engines, and aviation equipment, including the granting of awards; for compensation (not exceeding $10,000) for information to be obtained from an authoritative source in such form and manner as the President may desire as to geographic, meteorologic and weather conditions in northern latitudes, and for such other purposes related to civil and military aviation as the President may deem proper."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 43 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$23,966,645, of which sum $50,000 shall be available, under the direction of the President, for conducting a survey of Governors Island, N.Y., to determine its usefulness and adaptability as an airport and the cost of accomplishing all work incidental to effecting the change."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 12, 32, and 43 to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

After the conclusion of Mr. AUSTIN's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations and a treaty (the treaty was ordered to be printed in confidence), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock a.m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 24, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God of the ages past, enable us to abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good. Thus may we hasten the extension of Thy kingdom in human minds and hearts. We fervently pray that it may grow and become wide-spread wheresoever man is found. O keep us this day without sin, and may we experience in our own hearts the triumph of good over evil. Grant, our Heavenly Father, that our entire citizenship may be so united, so closely and fraternally bound together that war, strife, or rebellion among us may be forever impossible. Keep us, merciful God, in the peaceful, quiet, and happy pursuits of life which bless those who wait upon the Lord. O God, may the sword of enmity, the sting of envy, or the sharp weapon of hatred never put their cruel and destructive edges to our souls. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 21, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5075. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, numbered 6, 12, 32, and 43.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, and 30, disagreed to by the House, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. COOLIDGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPUBLICAN REACTION

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIEL A. REED].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, by permission granted me, I am inserting in the RECORD the following address delivered by Representative DANIEL A. REED, of New York, on Wednesday evening, April 18, over a national network:

Friends of the radio audience, this Nation has been and is still passing through a most trying time. This, however, is not the first crisis this country has had to face. Let us go back three quarters of a century. In May 1860 the National Convention of the Republican Party was in session at Chicago. Ten thousand people were packed in the historic old building known as the Wigwam. A platform was adopted. The paramount issue in that party platform was the preservation of the Union.

The third day of the convention came. Delegates were in their seats. Interest was at white heat. The first and second ballots had been taken. Lincoln was steadily gaining over Seward. When the third ballot was cast, the result was not announced. Not a sound could be heard except the scratching of pencils as the delegates added up the vote. But it was known Abraham Lincoln lacked only one and a half votes to place him in nomination for the Presidency.

Suddenly, from the great crowd a shrill voice that penetrated every corner of the Old Wigwam, announced, "Ohio changes four votes to Abraham Lincoln!" It was like an electric spark applied to a high explosive. Hats, coats, canes, umbrellas, and shawls were tossed into the air. Strong men embraced each other and wept. The band struck up, and the great crowd marched and yelled to the point of exhaustion.

When the excitement had subsided, a distinguished man walked up to the platform. It was William M. Evarts, chairman of the New York delegation. He said "Mr. Chairman, we came from a great State with a great candidate whom we had hoped to see nominated. In the name of that great State, and at the request of that great candidate, I move that the nomination of Abraham Lincoln be made unanimous." There followed another wild demonstration. Before the enthusiasm had subsided, some man in the gallery shouted, "Three cheers for Honest Old Abe!" That was the slogan of the stirring campaign that followed.

Persons everywhere and in all walks of life who believed in constitutional government rallied to the support of Abraham Lincoln. They knew they could trust him. They knew that when he made a promise, he would keep it. Because of the faith of the people in constitutional government and their firm belief in the integrity of Lincoln, he was elected President.

How different the scene when as President-elect he entered the Capital City, from modern demonstrations when the President returned from a short vacation. There was no military band, no crowds. Abraham Lincoln stepped off the train early in the morning. He was alone. Two men, and only two men, were there to greet him.

The task with which President Lincoln was confronted was to examine into the state of the Union. First he turned to the Army. There was no Army. It had been marched into Texas and to the Mexican border. The officers had been ordered to deliver the United States Army over to the States.

Next Mr. Lincoln turned to the Navy. All seaworthy ships except four had been ordered from northern waters to southern seas.

Then Mr. Lincoln inquired into the condition of the United States Treasury. It was empty. The credit of the United States had been destroyed.

These were the conditions that confronted Abraham Lincoln at a time when hostile forces were almost within sight of the Capitol. He had to organize an army. He had to rebuild the Navy. Abraham Lincoln organized an army. He built an invincible navy. He reestablished the credit of the United States. It cost the Nation the lives of 600,000 men and the sum of $10,000,000,000 to save the Union.

Lincoln required no "brain trust" to meet the crisis. A "brain trust" was proposed, and he scorned it. All the support he asked was the confidence of the people, and he received it in fullest measure. Why did the people follow the leadership of Abraham Lincoln throughout the great crisis? It was because he never made a promise he did not keep. The people knew they could trust him.

The same political party that left its heritage of debt and disaster in 1860 is the same political party in power today. Twenty years ago the Democratic Party asked the suffrage of the people "to keep us out of war." The people accepted that promise at its face value and placed the party in power. It was known by the Democratic Party when the "promise to keep us out of war" was made that the pledge could not be kept. When we entered the World War, our national debt was less than $2,000,000,000. In less than 2 years our Nation emerged from the war with an indebtedness of $26,000,000,000. Industries were closed. Six million men were idle.

Again the people turned to the Republican Party to rehabilitate the country. Within 1 year the unemployed were put back to work. Year by year for 10 years the national debt was being reduced about $1,000,000,000 a year. Taxes were reduced five times in this period.

Finally, a great tidal wave of financial disorder and social unrest, the backwash of the World War, swept across the nations of the earth, hurling them one by one upon the hidden reefs of communism and state socialism. Dictators became the last resort. That our Nation felt the impact of this backwash, that our people suffered no person can gainsay, but it cannot be successfully denied that our people suffered less from the great world disaster than did the people of other nations.

It is in the hour of distress that many people turn to political nostrums for relief. Such a time of acute suffering is a paradise for visionary theorists and demagogues. Promises are their stock in trade. No political party in this country ever made a more alluring set of promises to a distressed people to obtain their suffrage than did the Democratic Party in its party platform adopted at Chicago in 1932. The platform was expressed in the most convincing language. The platform had this to say:

"We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe."

The candidate, Mr. Roosevelt, who had become the idol of millions of people, inspired absolute confidence in the platform pledges when he declared: "The platform which you have adopted is clear. I accept it 100 percent."

President Roosevelt, by common consent, became the leader not alone of his party but of the whole Nation. Party lines disappeared. A hundred million people responded to the call for concerted action to carry out every pledge in the Democratic platform and every promise made by its Presidential candidate.

What was one of the first promises made in the Democratic platform? It was this:

"We advocate an immediate, drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices."

Has this promise been kept? It has not. Instead, a bureaucracy has been set up that rivals in size of personnel and in magnitude of expenditures any other bureaucratic government in the world. The alphabet is incapable of enough combinations of letters to designate the new commissions.

The Democratic Party, in its platform, said: "We advocate a sound currency to be maintained at all hazards."

The American dollar has been reduced to 59 cents. This reduced the debt owed to the United States by foreign countries 40 percent.

Why are the people bewildered? On April 24, 1933, Secretary Woodin offered for sale United States Treasury 3-year notes or bonds in the amount of $500,000,000, bearing 2½-percent interest. They were issued in small denominations of $100 each to enable the man or woman of average means to invest. Secretary Woodin issued an official statement to encourage the people to buy these bonds. Here is what he promised: "The principal and interest of the notes will be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value."

Why are the people bewildered? Let us see what happened to these bonds. Four weeks after Secretary Woodin issued the statement, Congress passed a resolution repudiating this promise. It repudiated the gold clause contained in every United States bond. The President signed this resolution. This is the first time in our history that the United States Government has repudiated its obligations.

An eminent psychologist has said, "He who makes himself the master of opinion may lead a people to perform the most heroic actions as well as enter upon the most absurd adventures." The cost to the taxpayer has received little consideration. The expenditure of billions of dollars to carry out the socialistic program that has been adopted must eventually be paid. This debt burden of the Government has already reached staggering proportions. Every day the credit of the Government is being driven nearer to the brink of printing-press inflation. The day of reckoning cannot long be deferred. The tax bill now pending in Congress does not reveal to the taxpayers the ultimate cost which they will have to bear for the present mismanagement of the financial administration of the Nation.

The cost of the "brain trust" experiments must not be measured alone in money. Loss of individual freedom may prove far more disastrous to the American citizen than the loss of property. A program of planned economy means that a man's least actions shall be directed by the State; the individual is to possess no initiative; all acts of his life are mapped out. Under this system the farmer is to be told where he shall live, what he shall produce and how much, when he shall sell, to whom he shall sell, and the price he shall receive for what he produces. Failure to obey the edicts of a bureaucrat sent out from Washington may hale him into court for any violation of the rules and regulations promulgated by a bureaucrat under such a program. It must be recognized that no man in government is infallible. This has been demonstrated in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. This official blunder resulting in almost complete paralysis of commercial aviation in the United States and in the death of 10 young men ought to be sufficient warning of the danger of vesting too much power in one man. Even when Col. Charles Lindbergh sought to advise of the danger, he was charged with seeking publicity.

Under a planned-economy program directed by fallible governmental functionaries individual liberty can be destroyed by an error in bureaucratic judgment, and from this mistake there is no appeal. Planned economy goes further than this, if carried to its ultimate conclusion. It means confiscation by the Government of capital, mines, and property, and the administration and redistribution of the public wealth by an immense army of bureaucrats. The Government, under the plan, would manufacture everything and permit no competition. The least signs of initiative, individual liberty, or competition would be suppressed.

To what extent has the Government attempted such a program, so far as industry is concerned? The Democratic platform contains this pledge:

"The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and national resources in the common interest." Regardless of this pledge, there was transferred to the Postmaster General from the Public Works fund $525,000 for the erection of a Government factory at Reedsville, W.Va. This attempted abuse of power and direct attempt to enter into competition with private business in the manufacture of furniture was defeated in the House by a vote of 275 to 110.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is another example of a definite move toward state socialism. Under this act, a corporation has been formed. Its charter contains these broad powers:

"To produce, raise, manufacture, buy, sell, deal in, and to engage in, conduct, and carry on the business of producing, manufacturing, buying, selling, and dealing in farm products, livestock, goods, wares, and merchandise of every class and description necessary or useful for the operation of the corporation."

It has the power under its charter to lend or advance money, to endorse the notes, and to guarantee the obligations of individuals, firms, corporations, or others with or without collateral security whatsoever.

This is only one of several corporations organized by the Federal Government under the Tennessee Valley Authority empowered to enter into competition with private farms and private factories.

Let me again repeat that the colossal national debt must eventually be paid by the American taxpayer. When the day of final reckoning comes, the task of the taxpayer will be like that of Sisyphus, who was condemned by the gods continually to roll a rock to the summit of a high mountain, whence it invariably rolled back again.

I do not believe American citizens will submit to a program that tends to reduce every individual to a common type and to place them under the guardianship of a strongly centralized government. Bertrand Russell, the mathematician, describes such an average type as a person "without passion or vices, neither mad nor wise, with average ideas, average opinions, he will die at an average age, of an average malady invented by the statisticians."

PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privilege of the House and offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 349

Whereas the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House met on the forenoon of April 21, 1934, and took up for consideration the bill H.R. 7908, which was not read; and

Whereas thereupon a motion was made in said committee to strike out all after the enacting clause of H.R. 7908 and substitute therefor the text of H.R. 9175, commonly known as the "Brown bill", and that the said H.R. 7908, as thus amended, be reported favorably to the House; and

Whereas the said Banking and Currency Committee thereupon adopted the aforesaid motion and proposes to report said H.R. 7908, as amended, to the House; and

Whereas the said H.R. 7908, which the said Banking and Currency Committee voted to report to the House, was at no time read in committee for amendment by section or by paragraph, either by the chairman or the clerk of said committee, as required by section 26, paragraph 412 of Jefferson's Manual; and

Whereas House rule no. 43 provides that "The rules of parliamentary practice in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable * * *"; and

Whereas House rule no. 12 provides that "The rules of the House are hereby made the rules of its standing committees so far as applicable * * *"; and

Whereas section 26, paragraph 412 of Jefferson's Manual, among other things, provides that in the case of "a bill, resolutions, draft of an address", etc., originating with or referred to a committee, "in every case the whole paper is read first by the clerk and then by the chairman, by paragraphs, pausing at the end of each paragraph, and putting questions for amending, if proposed"; and

Whereas the said failure of the said Banking and Currency Committee to comply with the rule as stated in section 26, paragraph 412, vitiates the committee's attempt properly to report out H.R. 7908, and vitally affects the regularity and integrity of the proceedings of the House itself; and

Whereas the right of said Banking and Currency Committee to report said H.R. 7908 to the House, for the reasons herein set forth, raises a doubt as to the regularity and validity of the proceedings of said committee and its attempt to make a report on H.R. 7908; and

Whereas the reception of said report by the House is objected to and disputed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the question whether the House shall receive said report be submitted to the House forthwith.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution that it does not set out a question of the privilege of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that it is an attempt to impeach the integrity of the action of a committee when every rule of the House is presumed to have been adhered to in the committee and followed, unless the records and the minutes of the committee itself show to the contrary and show that points of order were made in the committee that the rules were not being followed. There is no attempt here in this resolution to set out any statement to the effect that points of order were made in the committee that the rules were not being followed, and in the absence of such points of order, as shown by the minutes of the record, the presumption is and it always has been the presumption, that the rules have been followed in the committee.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the point of order has already been made that this is not a privileged resolution; and since that has been made, I shall not remake it, although I rose for that purpose. It is very clear, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has said, that this is an effort to impeach the action of a standing committee of this House by a recitation of facts which are not supported by any record of the committee or any statements which have been filed with the resolution. It seems to me that if it is possible for a Member of this House, whether he be a member of the committee or not, whenever a bill is reported, to rise in his seat and offer a resolution of this kind, it would be possible to disturb the whole committee organization of the House and would not guarantee that the action of any committee, whether it be the Banking and Currency Committee or any other committee, is to be given any force and effect.

I take it there is no precedent for a resolution of this kind. It is sprung here suddenly. No one had any intimation, at least on this side of the Chamber, that such a resolution would be proposed, and, I repeat, this effort to impeach the action of a standing committee which was taken in regular session of that committee, and by a majority vote, is not in order, and especially when the gentleman admits that he sat still and makes no question of the action taken at the time. I am surprised that the gentleman should have so deliberately taken advantage of his colleagues on the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is mistaken in stating that there is no precedent. There is a precedent, and I am sure the Parliamentarian can cite it to the Speaker, where Mr. Speaker Gillett held that in the House you could not attack the integrity of the proceedings of a committee by a mere resolution unless you show by the minutes of the committee that points of order were made in the committee and overruled and that the rules were not adhered to; that the presumption is that the rules were adhered to in committee, and you cannot attack it by such a resolution.

Mr. BYRNS. There may be such a precedent. I am sure if there is a precedent, it sustains the position taken by the gentleman from Mississippi, the gentleman from Texas, and myself, because I cannot imagine a situation where the integrity of a standing committee can be attacked upon the floor of the House in this manner.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the only question raised by the offering of this resolution is whether or not it sets out a proceeding which violates the integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives. In other words, to sustain the position of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], the resolution must set out on its face a question that goes directly to the integrity of the proceedings of the House. Such a question was raised on the floor of the House some years ago in a resolution which I presented with reference to the meetings of the Veterans' Committee. We went into the question thoroughly at that time.

For a resolution of this kind to be in order it must set out on its face a violation of the integrity of the proceedings of the House, or a question that goes directly and vitally to the integrity of such proceedings; and that, I submit, this resolution does not do. The resolution recites what took place in the committee and alleges violation of the rules that could have been taken advantage of in the committee. Now, if these proceedings were not regular the place to have raised the question, as laid down in Jefferson's Manual, was in the committee.

The rule referred to in the resolution does not mean that every section of every bill must be read in committee, but it does mean that the members of the committee have a right to raise that question in the committee and are entitled to be protected by the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that to uphold the contention laid down in this resolution, and to hold this motion in order, would be to establish a precedent which could be invoked to question practically every bill brought to the floor of the House.

The gentleman in his resolution has not raised a question that goes to the integrity of the proceedings of the House; and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, rule no. IX reads in part:

> Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings. * * *

I emphasize the words "the House collectively", because I believe the pending resolution does not properly raise a question of the privileges of the House itself.

If in a meeting of one of the committees of the House anything is done in violation of the rules of the House, the first place to protest or insist on compliance with the rules is in the committee itself; then if the procedure complained of is not in compliance with the rules, then the matter may be brought before the House on a point of order against the report of the committee, or the consideration of the bill or resolution reported.

I contend that the proper way to correct any action taken in the committee contrary to the rules is by way of a point of order against the consideration of that matter coming before the House, and that by no stretch of the language of this rule IX do the proceedings in the committee affect the rights of the House collectively so as to make the point "a privilege of the House."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, two issues are involved. The first one, to which I shall address myself briefly, is whether the resolution raises a question involving the privileges of the House.

As the rule states, anything affecting the integrity of the proceedings of the House raises a question of privilege. The word "integrity" means "soundness." That is the best synonym for it I can find in the dictionary. The question, then, is, Were the proceedings of this committee sound; did they conform to the rules of the House? And here, lest I forget it later, let me state what I believe we will all concede, namely, the fundamental proposition that there is never a moment when the House loses control over the conduct of its committees, which are a branch of the House.

There is a rule governing procedure involving amendments in committee, and it will not be contended that the rule was followed. It is contended that the one and only opportunity for the House to protect itself is through the acts of Members who happen to be in the particular committee at the moment. What a spurious doctrine that would be for the House to stand on! If that were to be the rule of conduct, then any recalcitrant Member who was not in sympathy with the legislation might sit idly in committee and by refusing to make an objection to any irregularity forfeit forever the rights of the House to have its committees function with regularity and under the rules. That cannot be so. But, so far as that goes, I objected to the whole proceedings in committee.

I made it very clear that I would have nothing to do with them because I did not think that the reporting of the bill in question by the committee was a move to procure legislation but was, rather, an attempt to interfere with the rights acquired by a minority of 145 Members of this House when the required number of signatures were secured and the petition completed. Therefore, I refused to have anything to do with the proceedings and voted "present." That is the broadest objection to everything that took place in the committee that I knew how to make.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Was there a member of the committee who raised the question at the time that the bill ought to be read, as the gentleman claims in the resolution?

Mr. BEEDY. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that if I had raised that point I should have said so. Instead I made a broader objection. I objected to the whole proceedings of the committee. I did not make any specific objections.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman in his resolution does not say that any member of the committee raised the question of whether the bill should be read.

The gentleman knows that in this House, unless request is made to the contrary, many bills are passed by unanimous consent. That is done on the floor of this House frequently; and if the gentleman, as a member of the committee, sat there and did not raise his voice in protest, he has waived his rights.

Mr. BEEDY. I did not; and I contend that I could not waive any rights of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BEEDY. Not at this time. I contend it was not the duty of any Member to raise specific objections, and that this House could not be foreclosed upon its right to insist, as I shall show presently by decisions, that its committees conform to the rules.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question only.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman knows that appropriation bills, bills involving hundreds of millions of dollars, are read scientifically from that desk frequently, with half pages skipped here and there. Does not the gentleman know he cannot raise a point of order to that procedure afterward unless the point of order is raised at the time of the reading? The presumption is that the bills are read according to the rules.

Mr. BEEDY. Whether that can be done or not, I submit, would be irrelevant to the issue here involved.

The rules in committee are analagous to the rules of the House. No bill which was not read for amendment in the House would be considered legally passed, and the same is true in a committee. But the question is asked, Was this point of reading the bill for amendment raised there? No; it was not. And I submit that the failure to raise it cannot forfeit the rights of the House to control the action of its committees in this or any other respect.

If the gentlemen will bear with me I will cite a decision which I think will disabuse anyone's mind of any doubt.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is a lawyer?

Mr. BEEDY. I used to be.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure the gentleman was a good lawyer. May I ask the gentleman what he thinks a Supreme Court would do on a general objection such as the gentleman just stated he made in committee? In other words, the gentleman voted present.

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman made no specific objection. What would a Supreme Court do under these circumstances if that sort of procedure were followed in an inferior court of law?

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires an answer, it seems to me that if the Supreme Court exercised good judgment and sound sense, as I think it would, the Supreme Court would say that my conduct was absolutely consistent, that by having objected to the proceedings and refusing to become a party to the proceedings by a vote either in the affirmative or negative, I very properly voted "present."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. If they were acting in equity, there would not be any doubt but what they would listen to the resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman state upon what specific grounds he is offering the resolution?

Mr. BEEDY. The grounds are stated in the resolution. I refuse to yield further; I desire to go on with my statement.

Whether there is a question of privilege involved in this resolution or not, I submit to the Speaker that, in any event, a Member of the House may at any time rise in his place; and if he objects to the receipt of a report of a committee by this House, the Speaker must put the question to the House, whether the House will receive the committee report or not.

I call the attention of the Speaker to a rule in the manual, which is to be found at the top of page 222, section 39, of the manual. The manual is here dealing with the putting of a question, whatever the question may be. The section is as follows:

> But in small matters, and which are, of course, such as receiving petitions, reports, motions, etc., the Speaker most commonly supposes the consent of the House where no objection is expressed and does not give them the trouble of putting the question formally.

If the Speaker will bear with me further, I will make myself a little clearer. It is very apparent from the reading of this section that for the convenience of the House the Speaker does not ask the House if it will receive a report every time one is offered. Yet, bear in mind that the House at all times is in full control of the actions of its committees. That is an inherent right of this House.

In small matters even the Speaker makes the same assumption if there is no objection, viz, that the House will receive the report, no objection being offered. The plain inference is that if there is objection raised the Speaker then must put to the House the question, Will the House receive the report of the committee?

I refer the Speaker to two decisions, one to be found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 938, section 4591. This decision was made by the eminent Speaker, Charles F. Crisp. On the 1st of February 1895, a Representative from Illinois, then a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, attempted to submit a privileged report to the House. One of the Members raised an objection to it, stating that it did not present fully or accurately the views of the committee. The Member claimed it was irregular in this respect. The Speaker stated this, and mark these words, Mr. Speaker:

> If objection were made, the question would be, Shall the report be received by the House?

The mere raising of an objection brings up that inherent right of the House to control the conduct of its committees, and the Speaker at that time stated that the question immediately arises, Shall the report be received by the House?

Permit me to make another point clearer here. I refer again to Hinds' Precedents, the same volume, page 937, section 4588. In this case there was an attempt by a Committee on Public Lands to bring in a report on a bill. It was contended that there were irregularities in the proceedings of the committee in passing upon the bill. There was a statement as to just what those irregularities were. A request was made that the question be submitted to the House whether the House would receive the report of the committee. Speaker John White, of Kentucky, stated:

> No question of order is involved. The question is, Shall the bill be received as the report of the committee? That is for the House alone to decide, and if the reception of the bill was objected to, that question would be put to the House.

Mr. Speaker, thereupon Mr. Cox, who was making the objection, said, "I withdraw the objection." I do not withdraw my objection. I make the objection that this report of the committee is not regularly made. It is born of an infringement of the rules of this House.

It is not necessary, however, that the Speaker now decide whether there were irregularities in committee, as I view it. If a question of privilege is raised by my resolution, then it is in order to be passed on by the House.

The Speaker must put the question to the House, Shall the House receive this report of the committee? And I ask, on my objection to this report, that the Speaker put to the House the question, Shall the House receive the report of the committee on H.R. 7908?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I am pleased now to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. The gentleman will recall that I was present in committee when this matter was under consideration. At that time, when the vote was being taken on reporting out this measure, the gentleman will recall that when the Clerk called his name he voted "no." The gentleman will also recall that when the Clerk said to him, "How did you vote?" the gentleman said, "Well, I had better vote "present", and the gentleman withdrew his vote of "no."

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, no.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I recall that, sir.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman does not recollect correctly what transpired.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I recollect that.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman is incorrect. I did not vote "no." I had no hesitation whatever as to my vote. I announced in advance to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER], who sat near me, that I was about to vote "present", and he it was who said, "I thought I might vote 'no'", or words to such effect, "because I am, in fact, opposed to this legislation, but I shall vote 'present.'" I take it the gentleman from Ohio did not wish to soil his hands with the procedure then being followed by the committee.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Oh, no.

Mr. BEEDY. The action of the committee was not to secure legislation but to defeat the will of the Membership of the House as expressed in a petition to inaugurate the discharge rule.

Mr. WEIDEMAN and Mr. KOPPLEMANN rose.

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, there is not any doubt that when this matter was considered before the gentleman's committee the Members who were most active in getting the McLeod bill before the House and the members of the Banking Committee were willing to accept most of the Brown bill as an amendment to the McLeod bill, and when the committee voted on that they knew the only way they could obstruct this legislation from coming before this House was by passing out some bill and amending the McLeod bill, and this was the only way it could be obstructed, was it not?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; but in my opinion the committee does not desire any action on that bill either.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield? I had not concluded my questions.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not care to yield any further.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. STEAGALL. Was the gentleman from Maine present at all the meetings of the Committee on Banking and Currency when the McLeod bill was under consideration?

Mr. BEEDY. Prior to Saturday's meeting I was not present for the reason, as the chairman knows——

Mr. STEAGALL. Then I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. BEEDY. For the reason, I was about to state, that I received notice of the meeting from the chairman, and as the chairman knows, the meeting was irregularly held, and the gentleman himself had to come into the House and try to remedy the error made in holding the meeting. I did not participate in it and I am pleased to say that I was not present. I had no part in those irregular proceedings, nor do I acquiesce in the irregularity of the proceedings of Saturday. I stand on my rights as a Member of this House fighting for the rights of the House to control at all times the action of its committees. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman understand that at a prior session of the committee the McLeod bill and the amendment adopted to the McLeod bill and reported were read in full and considered by the committee?

Mr. BEEDY. I have no such understanding; in fact, the bill was not even introduced until after that meeting was held.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman his failure to understand it grows out of the fact that he was not present. It is a fact that at a former meeting of the committee the McLeod bill was read, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] was read, amended, and adopted and ordered reported as a substitute for the McLeod bill, and the meeting on Saturday was simply called for the purpose of filing a subsequent report on the measures read and considered at a former meeting, as every member of the committee who was present will testify.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I think these facts should be cleared up for the benefit of the House.

I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the committee met and adopted what was presumed to be at that time the Brown bill on the 12th of the month. The bill which was substituted for H.R. 7908 on Saturday last was not introduced in this House until April 17, and that bill has never been read in committee, and the bill H.R. 7908 was not read in the committee when the substitute was adopted.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman in that connection, if he will permit——

Mr. BEEDY. I do not care to yield further.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will not the gentleman yield to me?

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. BEEDY. This is the regular order. I desire to conclude my remarks. The bill which was adopted on Saturday, the subject matter of the so-called "Brown bill", was never read before the committee for amendment, and this is the irregularity which I do not waive.

Mr. SISSON. How do you know—you were not there?

Mr. BEEDY. I stand on my right to object to and to question the legality of the report filed by this committee, and I ask that the question be submitted to the House, whether the House will receive the report of the Banking and Currency Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, a question has been raised which reflects upon the accuracy of one of my statements. The gentleman from Alabama, I believe it was, who cried out, without addressing the Speaker, and generally he is very much of a gentleman and obeys the rules of this House—if I am wrong the gentleman will correct me—I thought I recognized his voice, yet I thought it was quite unlike the gentleman. But somebody behind me said, "How do you know"—possibly it was the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] who said, "How do you know, you were not there at the meeting." My answer is that I know, because the bill in question, which was substituted on Saturday last, was not introduced until the 17th of this month. Therefore it could not have been read for amendment prior thereto.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was the gentleman alluding to me as the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BEEDY. I was. I alluded to the gentleman who I have found to be always decorous and always the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the gentleman, but the assumption that I made the remark is entirely in his imagination, for I made no such statement during the course of the debate.

Mr. BEEDY. I accept the gentleman's statement. It was the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON], I understand, who made the remark without addressing the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how the gentleman could pick me out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEEDY. I thought I recognized the gentleman's voice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. It is contended by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] that the resolution he has presented, of which he is the author, presents a question of privilege affecting the rights of the House and the integrity of its proceedings.

When Mr. Reed, of Maine, was Speaker of the House in 1891 a matter very much like this was presented to him. At that time there was no rule of the House prescribing a method of discharging a committee from the consideration of a bill.

A report had been ordered to be made by a committee. It was not made within a reasonable time, and a resolution directing the report to be made was decided by Speaker Reed to present a question of the privilege of the House.

Questions of privilege are, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

The ruling of Speaker Reed to which I have alluded can be found in volume 3, Hinds' Precedents, page 1085.

The Chair holds that the resolution presents a question of privilege, and it is for the House to adopt or reject the resolution. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. GOSS. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. If I vote "aye", does that mean——

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is out of order. We are discussing whether we will have a roll call.

Mr. RICH. Before I vote on this I should like to know——

Mr. BYRNS (interrupting). The gentleman is an intelligent Member of this House, and he ought to know the rules.

The question was taken, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan cannot interrupt a roll call.

Mr. McLEOD. The roll call has not yet begun. I should like to ask the Speaker what is the significance of an "aye" vote and the significance of a "no" vote?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 123, not voting 80, as follows:

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution for printing under the rules:

House Resolution 350 (Rept. No. 1297)

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 752, an act to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 5 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

THE WIRT COMMITTEE

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, recently there was created by resolution of the House a select committee to investigate certain charges made by Dr. William A. Wirt, of Gary, Ind. The committee held certain hearings and has concluded its activities.

The charges of Dr. William A. Wirt, which form the basis of this inquiry, may be summarized as follows:

Certain persons in positions of influence and authority in the administration hold these beliefs:

The depression demonstrates that the political, economical, and social organization of our country, heretofore accepted as the embodiment of American traditions and ideals, is inadequate to insure the temporal well-being and security of the people. The concept that American men and women constitute a free people must be scrapped.

In its stead must be erected a planned economy wherein the everyday activities of American citizens in agriculture, industry, transportation, merchandizing, and other pursuits, including labor, are controlled and regimented by the Government functioning through numerous bureaus. It necessarily follows that remuneration for such activities and the wealth invested therein likewise are in the control of the Government, even if the naked title to such properties are left in the present owners.

Inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States is the keystone of the arch supporting the concept of a free people, its provisions must be disregarded and allowed to fall into desuetude.

Dr. Wirt further charges that these persons holding the opinions above set forth are using their positions in the administration to draft measures, ostensibly temporary in character and purported to accelerate present recovery, which, in effect, operate to further the regimented economy plan. Such measures necessarily retard immediate economic improvement, which is all right with the economic planners, because the more serious the plight of the people the more readily will they submit to the proposed new order.

No suggestion was advanced that any such persons contemplate physical violence, or that the established agencies of the Government be forcibly overthrown.

This, in substance, is the contention of Dr. Wirt, the truth of which this committee was created to probe. The committee limited its activities to an attempt to ascertain the sources of information upon which Dr. Wirt based his statement.

This was an utterly futile proceeding. Every well-informed person knows from the speeches, published writings, and radio addresses by Government officials constituting what is commonly known as the "brain trust" that their political, economic, and social philosophy is substantially as set forth by Dr. Wirt.

Activities in furtherance of the establishment of a socialized economy seem apparent to an increasing number of our people. They view with misgiving a securities act purported to protect investors from cheaters, drying up sources of much-needed credit for industry struggling toward recovery; a proposed law to regulate stock and commodity exchanges, ostensibly to check insensate speculation, threatening to convert a business investment into a frozen asset by the destruction of its market; the absorption of available credit resources of our banking system by dumping upon it huge Government issues. The inability or unwillingness of the Government to stabilize our currency renders it prohibitive for business to engage in long-term commitments of international character. These are but a few instances that have engendered doubt and dismay.

This committee is not authorized to sit in judgment upon the relative merits of the old order of a free people or a Government-regulated mode of American life. Under a broad, common-sense construction of the resolution creating the committee, we were commissioned to investigate whether Government officials believing in a socialized American order were so functioning as to facilitate its establishment. In short, What are the purposes of the "brain trust" and what are they doing about it?

This the American people are entitled to know. This it was not only the privilege but the duty of the committee to ascertain.

Unfortunately, the committee booted away its opportunity. [Applause.]

PAYMENTS OF ASSETS IN CLOSED BANKS

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the motion to discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from the further consideration of the bill H.R. 7908, which is on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order and does not lie, because of the fact that the committee has reported the bill, and, therefore, cannot be discharged from its consideration.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for an inquiry?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot withhold the point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order and yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman, as Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, advise the House if it is the intention of that committee to call up that bill this week, which the committee has reported out?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that is immaterial.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan is out of order, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order should be acted upon.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman's question does not in any way involve the matter before the House.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] reserved the point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, no.

Mr. BEEDY. And yielded to the gentleman from Michigan for a question. That was the specific request that the gentleman from Michigan made, and the question is not out of order.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman attempted to answer the question when he was cut off.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that if a bill is improperly reported to the House—and I believe in this particular instance the Chair has already ruled, that where a committee sits during the sessions of the House without receiving permission of the House—the action of the committee in reporting out this bill is a nullity. It is void ab initio; that is, from the very beginning and for all intents and purposes the bill has never left the committee. In the case of other irregularities, not perhaps of a like nature but of equal importance, whereby members of the committee were shut off in the exercise of their rights, under the rules of the House and the committee, to offer amendments to perfect the bill, then that is of equal importance and effect and that bill as reported out and the report is equally void.

I call the Chair's attention to the rule, with which he is familiar, section 412 of Jefferson's Manual, which reads in part as follows:

> In every case the whole paper is read first by the Clerk and then by the chairman by paragraphs pausing at the end of each paragraph and putting questions for amendment, if proposed.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that if that were not done—and I want to say on my own responsibility as a member of that committee and as a Member of this House—that in none of the proceedings of the Committee on Banking and Currency neither the bill H.R. 7908 or the so-called "Brown bill", the number of which I do not remember, which was substituted for H.R. 7908, was read. If the bill was not read, and any right of any Member in his legislative capacity was denied to him to discuss each paragraph and offer amendments thereto, then that bill is not properly or legally upon the calendar, and the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency in reporting it out is void.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, there is but one question for the Chair to decide: Is the gentleman from Michigan privileged at this time to call up the McLeod bill on the petition that was signed? This is the sole question. There is no question here involving the integrity of the action taken by the Committee on Banking and Currency. This bill, reported by that committee, is on the calendar until the Speaker takes it off the calendar. It is properly on the calendar until the Speaker rules that it is not properly on the calendar.

Under the operation of the discharge rule, a committee can be discharged from consideration of a bill only for failure to act. Certainly a committee cannot be discharged from the consideration of a bill when the committee has finished its consideration of the bill and has returned it to the House with its report. The committee has brought the bill back here, has reported it, and the report is before the House. The committee has discharged itself and could not, if it wanted to, further consider the bill. The committee is through with it. The bill as reported is before the House; and this action of the committee absolutely nullifies every action that was taken under the petition to discharge. This is the sole question, so what is the use of wasting the time of the House fooling with a lot of infinitesimal, inconsequential points raised in an effort to impede business and to muddy the waters?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, the discharge rule provides for a special procedure.

The question now before the House is not on the rule to discharge; it is on the question of procedure after the petition has been signed by 145 Members. I call the attention of the Chair to page 435 of the Manual. I read therefrom the following:

> When Members to the total number of 145 shall have signed the motion, it shall be entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures thereto in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the calendar of motions to discharge committees.

Then follows the provision that such a motion can be called up on the second or fourth Mondays of each month; and from page 436 I read the following:

> When any motion under this rule shall be called up, the bill or resolution shall be read by title only.

Then the rule recites what the procedure shall be.

Mr. Speaker, the question now before the House is one of procedure. A petition has been signed by 145 Members, as required by this rule. The rule prescribes what the procedure shall be. The gentleman from Michigan has proceeded exactly in accordance with this rule, and there is no provision in the rules that the operation of the discharge rule can be interfered with by any action of any committee of the House. In other words, when this petition has been signed by 145 Members, the procedure shall be as prescribed by this rule, and the rule makes no exception whatever. Whatever any committee may do, the rule brings the matter directly before the House for its attention; and this rule was adopted for that specific purpose.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Does the rule state anywhere that the committee by any action can thwart the will of the 145 Members who signed the petition to discharge?

Mr. DOWELL. It does not. On the contrary, it affirmatively prescribes what the procedure shall be. We are now operating under this rule and the question here is one of procedure and is not on the action of the committee in reporting this bill or on whether or not a report has heretofore been made. As a matter of fact, when this petition was signed by 145 Members, this bill was lying in the committee. The action of the 145 Members in signing this petition immediately put into force this rule; and when the rule is put into force, no action of any committee can operate to nullify this rule.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, before the committee reported this bill, the petition had been signed by 145 Members.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And the committee report was not received until today. So, previous to the time the bill was reported the discharge rule had been invoked by the 145 signers of the petition, thus making the motion to discharge the committee in order today.

Mr. DOWELL. The rule states that whenever 145 Members sign a petition this rule is put into effect and jurisdiction is taken from any committee of the House having the bill under consideration. [Applause.] The House by that action took immediate charge of this bill and it is now before the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the motion on which the House would be called upon to vote under the contention of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DOWELL. There will be a motion here.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the motion?

Mr. DOWELL. It follows this rule exactly to discharge the committee.

Mr. BYRNS. I ask the gentleman—the gentleman has the rules before him—what is the motion upon which the House will be called upon to vote?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; it is to proceed in accordance with this rule to take it from the committee and to bring it directly before the House.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is begging the question. If the gentleman is not willing to be specific in his answer, I will state for him that the motion is a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill.

May I ask the gentleman how in all common sense he is going to discharge a committee when it does not have the bill before it?

Mr. DOWELL. The motion which will be before the House is for the immediate consideration of the bill under this rule.

Mr. BYRNS. No. May I read the rule to the gentleman?

Mr. DOWELL. That is exactly the effect of it.

Mr. BYRNS. May I read the rule to show that it is a motion to discharge the committee? The motion is first taken up for consideration, and then the bill, if the committee is discharged, will be taken up for consideration. The gentleman will find that at the bottom of page 435 of the Manual.

Mr. DOWELL. This rule specifically provides that nothing shall interfere with the immediate consideration of the bill under this rule.

Mr. BYRNS. Consideration of the motion, not the bill. The motion is to discharge the committee from consideration of the measure.

Mr. DOWELL. No.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call attention of the Members of the House to the fact that this rule embraces two distinct questions. One is the discharge of the committee and the next is the immediate consideration of the bill. We discharged the committee to get consideration of the bill. We cannot get immediate consideration of the bill under this rule unless we discharge the committee.

Mr. BYRNS. How is the gentleman going to discharge the committee on a bill which has been reported?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is not important whether the committee has made a report or not. The report of the committee should not be used to prevent an immediate vote on the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I get clearly before the Chair the very purpose of this rule.

This rule all the way through provides specifically for the immediate consideration and determination of this bill. The whole purpose of it is to take the bill from the committee and bring it before the House. As soon as 145 Members have signed the petition, the bill comes directly before the House on this motion without the action of any committee and under the rule of the House on a certain day this motion shall be called up and then certain definite procedure is outlined. This rule specifically provides for every means by which it can be immediately forced to a conclusion in this House. If there is a majority who do not want to consider it, that is another question, but the question now is on the rule for the consideration of this bill and the action of the committee has nothing to do with the matter.

The whole purpose of this rule and the whole reason for its existence is to get the immediate vote of the House on the bill. Everyone who has been interested in this rule knows that that is the purpose of the rule, and that is why it has been so framed that nothing shall intervene until a final conclusion is had on the bill under consideration.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman contend that the question before the House is not the discharge of the committee from consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOWELL. The question before the House is to follow the rule bringing this matter now to a vote. The bill was brought before the House by 145 names to the petition. That action brought it directly before the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman read the specific language of the rule?

Mr. DOWELL. This is a question of procedure. May I say that if this rule can be sidetracked or if this rule can be defeated by the action of some other committee or of some committee of this House after 145 names have been signed to the petition which brought the matter before the House, and if it can be taken back and defeated by a committee, then this rule is not what the House intended to have when it passed the rule.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa cannot yield to anyone.

Mr. DOWELL. I am not yielding the floor to anyone. I yield to the gentleman from Maine for a question.

Mr. BEEDY. Has any answer been made to the contention of the gentleman from Iowa other than that there is now on the calendar a bill which has been reported by the Banking and Currency Committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will answer if the gentleman will give us a chance.

Mr. BEEDY. Just a moment. I have asked the gentleman from Iowa a question. There is no other answer to the contention of the gentleman from Iowa than that there is a bill on the calendar from the Committee on Banking and Currency. Is that not the fact?

Mr. DOWELL. So far as I know.

Mr. BEEDY. Let me call the attention of the Members of the House to the incorrectness of the view of the gentleman from Tennessee, who claims the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported H.R. 7908, which is now on the calendar. It cannot be refuted here that there was an irregularity in the consideration of this bill by committee. On Friday, the 20th, when the gentleman from Alabama admitted that his committee had met during a session of the House and reported the so-called "McLeod bill", the Speaker, in answering his question as to the regularity of such a proceeding said that the bill was in effect still before the committee. That any irregularity in its consideration renders the committee action void. In the case of Friday, as well as in the case presented today, there is no denial as to the irregularity of the committee's proceeding. I now quote from the ruling of the Speaker on last Friday:

> In reply to the parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will state that the action of the committee in so reporting the bill is absolutely void, and the Chair will direct that the report and the bill be stricken from the calendar. The purported report on the bill H.R. 7908 made to the House on April 12, 1934, being invalid, the Chair holds that the bill is still before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill is never on the calendar if there is irregularity in the proceedings of the committee reporting it. There is no bill from the committee now before the House which can thwart the operation of the discharge rule. Therefore the way is clear, I submit to the Speaker, to bring up the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to discharge the committee.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, if the statements here relative to the action of the committee are correct, some other bill, as I understand it, has been presented to the House. To my mind, it is immaterial whether there is another bill or something else that has been presented.

My position is, and I want the Chair to understand it and I want to emphasize it, when the petition has been signed by 145 Members the bill is taken away, and it follows the procedure of this rule. This is my contention, and I believe it was the contention of the House when it adopted this rule, and I believe the rule should be followed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter upon which the Chair is about to rule. So far as I know it has never been ruled upon, and there are more situations possible to arise under the discharge rule (rule XXVII, subdiv. 4) than the McLeod bill; in fact, I think another somewhat similar situation will arise today immediately following the disposition of this matter.

If the contention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], were sound, the rule in its language would be ridiculous and meaningless.

First, however, let me say that the Chair or this House cannot take cognizance of the statements of fact made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], or the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], as to what happened in the committee. These facts are not before the Chair or before the House. There is up to this minute no proof of what happened in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

All through this rule is the reference to a motion to discharge a committee. That rule provides that such a motion as is called up today, is a motion to discharge the committee, and as has been said, the committee has already discharged itself. But to proceed further, the rule states that:

> If the motion prevails to discharge one of the standing committees of the House from any public bill or resolution pending before the committee—

Of course, this bill does not longer pend before a committee, and to read further from the rule at the bottom of page 436 of the Manual—

> Should the House by vote decide against the immediate consideration of such bill or resolution it shall be referred to its proper calendar and be entitled to the same rights and privileges that it would have had had the committee to which it was referred duly reported the same to the House.

And so on throughout the rule, the intent being that the rule does not reach a bill reported from a committee and only reaches a bill which has not been reported.

Further, as you know, in the past few years this question has been discussed many times informally, although the question has never come specifically before the House, as for instance on the bonus legislation and possibly in connection with some other legislation where a committee assumed that by reporting a bill adversely it could defeat the efficacy of the petition to discharge. That, of course, could be done, as was generally agreed among the parliamentarians of the House, to the effect that if the committee reports at all, favorably or adversely, it annuls the petition lying on the desk. In a proposed new rule not yet adopted it is proposed to provide that after a petition is lodged the committee cannot, under the existing rules, report adversely, but right now if the committee reports favorably or adversely it defeats the efficacy of the petition to discharge.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] has said—

> By that method any committee can strangle all legislation.

That statement is not correct under our rules.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman has used my name. Will not the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Was I not correct when I said that if 145 Members have signed a petition for a specific piece of legislation, after the completion of the petition, if a committee reports an amended bill, does not that defeat the purpose of the discharge rule entirely, if the committee sees fit to do this?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was just about to state that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Now, will the gentleman point out to me how I am mistaken?

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will permit me, I shall attempt to do so.

There are two features of this discharge rule which were carefully considered and debated upon its adoption. You ladies and gentlemen probably all know that the author was one of the greatest parliamentarians this House ever had, Mr. Crisp, of Georgia. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] says that if the committee reports a bill immediately after the petition is completed the House is helpless. Of course that is not correct.

The second feature of the rule provides that a petition can then be filed to discharge the Rules Committee from a resolution to consider the bill, and thus force the consideration of the measure, despite any action on the part of the Rules Committee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen anxious for the consideration of this measure do not succeed today, they will, and speedily, propose to do that very thing—petition to discharge the Rules Committee. After 7 days elapse the matter will be before the House. The bill having now been reported from the committee, and that destroying your petition, they can and will now file a resolution with the Rules Committee to make the bill a special order of business.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will that be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Please wait until I have completed my statement.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me? The gentleman is convincing me, or trying to convince me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not answered your question completely.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] says that when a committee amends a bill it defeats the purpose of some Members of the House. Of course, the committee does not and could not do that.

This bill as it comes in here reported from the committee or as it will be taken up under a discharge petition directed to the Rules Committee, has the McLeod bill in it. It is physically in the bill. It has merely been amended by the committee. If this House prefers the McLeod bill it can vote down the committee amendments and enact the McLeod bill. The McLeod bill has not been taken away from the House. The McLeod bill will be read to the House first. The committee amendments, which I understand are substantially the Brown bill, will be offered as committee amendments. Those Members who prefer the McLeod bill will vote down the committee amendments.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In the placing of a petition in the well it is required that a copy of the specific legislation be placed in there, so that the Members signing know they are signing for a specific piece of legislation immediately upon the completion of the petition. If a committee can report in an amended bill or a bill which does not correspond with the exact bill upon which the Members signed the petition, are they not in this way defeating the entire purpose of the petition?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They could do that if it had the power, which it has not. They reported the McLeod bill with committee amendments. They could not physically strike out the entire language of the McLeod bill. That is still in the bill for the consideration of the House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Let me correct the gentleman. They struck out all of the language. There is nothing left of the McLeod bill but the title. They struck out everything after the enacting clause.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The gentleman from Iowa stated that 145 Members had signed the petition, and that they were on the petition the day the report was made. My impression was to the opposite, and I ask the Speaker to inform the House whether the report was filed before the petition was completed?

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is going to pass on.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the parliamentary procedure, and in order that the Chair may have occasion to comment on one phase of the situation that has not been brought to the attention of the House, I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he is of the opinion that when passing on the application of the rule referring to the motion to discharge the committee, it is within the province of the Chair to pass judgment on the futility that such a motion may come to have? Can it be pressed to a vote that will be fruitless? I hope the Chair will see fit to answer the question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the point of order was that the motion is not now in order.

Mr. LUCE. But the discussion has covered the whole course of the procedure. I hope we may have it clear whether the Chair may pass on the futility of a motion that technically will still be valid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not the province of the Chair to undertake to construe the philosophy of the rule, but only as to the proper parliamentary procedure.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, in all this discussion of the parliamentary procedure, we are not passing on the merits of the McLeod bill or any other bill. There is no possible way for any individual or any committee of this House to prevent the ultimate consideration of the proposals contained in the McLeod bill or any other bill. A majority of this House can always function. That is as it should be, but it should function under the established rules of the House. To attempt to enact legislation in direct violation of the rules would be most disastrous to ourselves and our people.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to take but a few minutes. I hope Members will not forget that this is purely a question of parliamentary procedure. The merits or demerits of the bill have absolutely nothing to do with the present question before the House. The rule was adopted for one purpose, and for one purpose only, and that was to prevent a committee from undertaking to smother a report. It would be contradictory if this rule prevented a committee from making a report before a motion is taken up. Here is the proposition—you are asked to take 20 minutes under the rule on a motion to discharge the committee, when the committee has not the bill in its possession, and it is on the calendar. It seems to me the question answers itself.

The committee has discharged itself, and so the motion of the gentleman from Michigan falls to the ground. He has his remedy. This does not prevent him from introducing a rule and getting a discharge petition with reference to that rule, and that is what the gentleman proposes to do. I call attention to this one fact, and then I am through. This rule was introduced in a previous term of Congress by the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Crisp, at that time a Member of this House, a man recognized as a splendid parliamentarian, one of the best in the House at the time. That gentleman stated in his remarks on the rule with reference to the bonus bill which had been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, that it did not apply to the bill. Those favoring the bonus bill abandoned the intention of filing a petition to bring that bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, and adopted the course that I have outlined after 7 days had expired, and the Committee on Rules had failed to take action. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is purely a question of parliamentary procedure, and certainly the House does not want to put itself in the foolish position of debating seriously for 20 minutes a motion to discharge the committee when the committee has already discharged itself.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard briefly? I endeavored to interrogate the majority leader. It seems to me we all agree that the Speaker was correct on Friday last when he ruled the earlier action of that committee was illegal. That left the discharge rule in full operation. The Committee on Banking and Currency, therefore, had no parliamentary right to report the bill now, because it had been discharged from further consideration of that measure, and I hope the Speaker will rule accordingly.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard for just a moment on this. I think it is of tremendous importance. I have been listening attentively to all of these observations, and it seems to me that the question which the Speaker will be called upon to decide is whether if the Banking and Currency Committee came in at a quarter past 12 today with their report and before a quarter past 12 the gentleman from Michigan had moved to discharge the committee, the 145 names being signed, then the gentleman from Michigan would be entitled to bring up the motion to discharge the committee. I merely say this because I hope the Chair will pass on the question of whether the 145 names being signed to the petition gives the right at the moment the one hundred and forty-fifth signature is placed there to permit the gentleman to call up his bill or whether the committee, between the time the one hundred and forty-fifth signature is signed and the next second or fourth Monday, can report the bill and thus defeat the right of the gentleman from Michigan to call up the motion to discharge the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The discharge rule has not been construed in the House up to the present time. It provides:

> When Members to the total number of 145 shall have signed the motion it shall be entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures thereto in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees.

That has been done in the instant case. The motion is pending now on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. The question raised is one of procedure. Last Friday a parliamentary inquiry was submitted to the Chair with reference to this same bill. It appeared that the bill had been reported out by the Committee on Banking and Currency, or that that committee had attempted to report it out when the House was in session, that committee having no authority to sit when the House was in session, not having obtained that permission from the House. The Chair held at that time that the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency in reporting out the bill or attempting to report it out under those circumstances was absolutely void, and the bill was still before the committee. The question now arises as to whether the bill is still before the committee. If it is still before the committee, then it is in order to call up the motion to discharge the committee at this time. The question now is whether the committee has the bill yet or not. If the committee still has the bill, it can, of course, be discharged from the consideration of the bill. If the committee has discharged itself by reporting the bill out, another question arises. It appears from the argument that the bill has been reported out and that the committee no longer has the bill before it. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the report on the bill was filed in the House this morning, and the bill was placed on the calendar.

This matter is a rather important one, and the Chair thinks it deserves some consideration at length.

The question presented to the Chair for decision may be stated as follows:

Is the motion to discharge a committee from the further consideration of a bill, as provided in clause 4 of rule XXVII, applicable to a bill that has been reported by a committee during the interval between the placing of the motion to discharge on the calendar and the day when such motion is called up for action in the House?

The discharge rule is what its name implies; that is, a rule providing a method of taking a bill from a committee which has refused to consider or report it. The House has had one form or another of a discharge rule since the Sixty-first Congress. The purpose of all those rules was to provide a method of forcing a committee to report bills instead of pigeonholing them, the theory being that once a bill was placed upon one of the calendars of the House a majority of the House, if it saw fit, could consider it under the general rules of the House.

That was the purpose of the present discharge rule. Mr. Charles R. Crisp, formerly a Member of the House, in discussing the discharge rule on May 10, 1932, said:

> The smothering of bills in the committee is what led to the demands for a discharge rule. * * * The discharge rule is needed only to prevent a committee from smothering a bill in the committee room.

It will be clearly seen from the remarks of Mr. Crisp, who who was a very able parliamentarian and who drafted the present rule, that the fundamental purpose of the discharge rule was to provide a method of taking a bill from a committee that refused to consider and report it.

It will be apparent to those who read the present discharge rule that there is no prohibition attaching to a committee to the extent that such committee is forbidden or deprived of the right to report a bill merely because a motion to discharge such a committee from the consideration of a bill has been filed in the House. Nor is there any restriction upon a committee as far as reporting a bill is concerned, even after a motion to discharge has received the requisite number of signatures and the motion has been placed on the calendar of motions to discharge committees.

In other words, a committee of the House has it within its power to report a bill any time it sees fit, notwithstanding the discharge rule. Inasmuch as the purpose of the discharge rule is to compel reports by committees, it would be contradictory to say that the rule should be construed to prevent committees from reporting. Mr. Crisp, on May 10, 1932, addressing himself to this particular point, in reply to a question asked him upon the floor, said:

* * * Of course, the discharge rule now does not apply against the Ways and Means Committee which has reported the bill * * *.

In that case the Ways and Means Committee had reported adversely the bonus bill. As Members will recall, the proponents of the bonus bill at that time abandoned their original intention of filing a motion to discharge the Committeee on Ways and Means, and filed a second motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from a resolution providing a special order of business for the consideration of the bonus bill. Members recognized at that time—and the present discharge rule was then newly adopted—that the discharge rule could not apply to a case where a committee reported a bill, and thereby divested itself of any jurisdiction over it. Mr. Crisp at that time stated that—

The action of the Ways and Means Committee in reporting the bill adversely has in no wise taken away any of the privileges, rights, or opportunities of the proponents of the measure to bring it up if they can meet the requirements of the rules; and the rules are not adopted for this particular case, but the rules were adopted on the 9th of last December.

Under a fair interpretation of the discharge rule it would seem that where a committee had reported a bill and thereby divested itself of all its authority and jurisdiction over that bill, a motion to discharge such a committee would not be in order. After a committee has reported a bill, it has lost possession of it and it is then in the possession of the House. The House can take any action on such a bill as it sees fit; as a matter of fact, the rules provide an order of business, and the proponents of the bill may utilize the rules for the purpose of getting any reported bill up for consideration. Once a bill is in the possession of the House, the House can always dispose of it as it sees fit, under the general rules of the House.

In order to bring about a condition wherein a committee may be discharged, it is necessary to meet all the requirements of the discharge rule. First, a bill must be in a committee for 30 days before a Member may present a motion to discharge the committee; then such a motion after it is presented must receive 145 signatures of Members. When that is done the motion is placed on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. After the motion has been on that calendar for 7 legislative days any Member who has signed the motion to discharge may on the second or fourth Mondays of a month call up the motion for consideration in the House. If, however, at any time before the House begins consideration of a motion to discharge on the second or fourth Mondays of a month, the committee to which the bill has been referred reports the bill, then the motion to discharge falls by reason of the fact that the committee has by its own action divested itself of its jurisdiction over the bill.

The Chair thinks that inasmuch as the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported the bill, that the effect of that action nullifies the motion to discharge and makes it inoperative.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment to the McLeod bill, so called, was not introduced in the House until the 17th of April subsequent to the time when any bill of the kind was ever read for amendment in the committee. This fact is undenied.

The bill that was reported never was read for amendment in the committee. It is not legally or validly upon the calendar of the House. While the decision of the Chair well presents the fact, assuming that the bill were legally before the House, the Chair has not touched upon the question as to whether it may be in order to call up the discharge rule if the bill attempted to be reported by the committee concerned was not regularly before the House, not having been considered according to the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, therefore, that the bill alleged to have been reported is not legally reported, is in violation of the rules of the House and of the committees of the House, and has no valid standing in the House.

The SPEAKER. The House passed on that question a few moments ago in a resolution raising the question of the privileges of the House, and passed upon the question adversely to the position taken by the gentleman from Maine.

The Chair has no information as to what occurred in the committee. The only thing the Chair knows is that the McLeod bill, bearing the number it has always borne and with the same title, and with some amendments in which the Chair is not interested, has been reported out, is on the calendar, and can be taken up under the general rules of the House when an opportunity presents itself.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's appeal comes too late, intervening business having been transacted, to wit, a separate, distinct point of order having been made and ruled on by the Chair. Intervening business having been transacted, the gentleman's appeal comes too late.

The SPEAKER. From which point of order is the gentleman from Michigan appealing?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the point of order and the remarks of the gentleman from Maine were an interruption of the Chair in view of the fact that the Chair in ruling on the point of order of the gentleman from Maine reiterated the reasons why the Chair so ruled.

Mr. BLANTON. That was separate and distinct business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is from that, Mr. Speaker, that I respectfully appeal.

The SPEAKER. The time to have appealed from the decision of the Chair was at the time the decision was made. Since that time the gentleman from Maine presented another point of order, a very different point of order and argued it at considerable length, and the Chair made a ruling on that point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Which decision is the gentleman appealing from?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The decision of the Speaker on the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, on April 13, the gentleman from Michigan introduced a resolution known as House Resolution 332, which was referred to the Rules Committee. This is a resolution providing for the consideration of the McLeod bill, and in view of the proceedings here today may I ask now whether it is in order to file a petition to discharge the Rules Committee from the further consideration of this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the question of the gentleman from Connecticut by saying that it would be in order to file a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the resolution after 7 legislative days have passed from the time of its introduction and reference to that committee.

REFUSAL TO SERVE NEGROES IN THE HOUSE RESTAURANT

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry, which is similar to the one just decided by the Speaker.

On the 24th day of January I filed a resolution in the House. At the expiration of 30 legislative days I prepared a petition to discharge the committee, and laid it on the desk. I subsequently received the necessary 145 signatures on the 23d day of March. After that the Committee on Rules reported the bill out favorably, and I am glad they did.

Under the ruling of the Chair today, if my interpretation is correct, it is impossible to call up this resolution on the Discharge Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass on the gentleman's point of order. The Chair feels a different question arises here.

Mr. DE PRIEST. The rule was not enforced last Monday because I was out of the city and I ask that it be allowed to go over. The House very kindly postponed action until I returned to the city. I have been out in Illinois trying to be renominated, and I am happy to say that I succeeded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a rather important question and the Chair will pass on the matter.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I want to find out from the Chair whether the Rules Committee, or any other committee for that matter, can come in and block legislation? I am speaking on the broad, general question now. Can a committee report a bill out, after 145 Members of the House have signed a petition to discharge the committee, and block legislation in this way?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the question when the gentleman is through.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is propounding a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DE PRIEST. This is a very important question and upon the ruling of the Chair today will depend the validity and the effect of the discharge rule. The committee reported out my resolution by striking out the preamble, and I had no objection to that.

This is simply a question of Members knowing their rights in this House under the discharge rule. I understood that this was to come up next Wednesday, and that is perfectly all right with me. May I have a ruling so that we Members especially in the minority group may know where they stand on this rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on this point of order. The question here is not identical with the other situation upon which the Speaker has just ruled, in connection with the McLeod bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST] introduced a resolution which was referred to the Rules Committee. It could not have been first referred to any other committee, because that resolution provided for the setting up of a special committee to investigate a certain alleged situation in connection with the conduct of the House restaurant. While his resolution was pending in the Rules Committee, the gentleman filed a petition to discharge that committee, and obtained the necessary 145 signatures. Thereafter the Rules Committee favorably reported the resolution to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I want it distinctly understood by the House that there was no pressure that could have been exerted on the Rules Committee to report out the gentleman's resolution. The Rules Committee reported the resolution voluntarily because it felt that the matter should be submitted to the House, and, further, because it knew, as every Member should have known, that the gentleman's petition was not worth the paper it was written on. It was completely futile under our rules. No such petition could lie to discharge the Rules Committee from such a resolution. Therefore the action on the part of the Rules Committee was entirely voluntary and not compelled or influenced in any manner by reason of the petition to discharge. The gentleman has not moved to bring up the petition for the reason that undoubtedly he has been advised by his Republican colleagues, more learned in parliamentary procedure, that not only would such a motion not now lie, because the Rules Committee has reported, but further, and for the more vital reason, that his petition was worthless ab initio. Incidentally, such an experience might serve as an example to some Members who sign such petitions indiscriminately.

Under the rules the Rules Committee can only be discharged from consideration of either a special order of business or a special rule for the consideration of any public bill or resolution reported by a committee. The gentleman's resolution was a mere House resolution, which he could not have brought up on a discharge day if he wanted to, as, for instance, 2 weeks ago today or even today. The Rules Committee, realizing full well the futility of the petition and that it could not possibly serve the gentleman's purpose, reported out the resolution in fairness to the gentleman and the House, and for weeks have been prepared to bring up the matter. I personally reported the resolution, with pleasure. It bears my name. I have not called it up before, for the sole reason that the gentleman requested that it not be called up until after his primary election. He also informed the Speaker that he would not return to Washington until the 23d of April, which was yesterday, and did not want the resolution reported from the Rules Committee called up before that date. So all his hullabaloo here today comes as a surprise to us.

I have been trying to arrange to call up the resolution today, tomorrow, or Wednesday of this week at the latest. This arrangement is entirely agreeable to the leaders on the other side of the House.

But what I want understood, Mr. Speaker, is that no attempt has been made to block or sidetrack the gentleman's effort. On the other hand, I want it understood that the Rules Committee reported his resolution voluntarily, a resolution from which it could not have been discharged under the rules.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Will the gentleman kindly tell the Membership of the House when the resolution will come up, if the gentleman can?

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand, the leaders on both sides hope to take it up Wednesday. I would like to take it up today, but Wednesday has been more or less tentatively agreed upon as the first chance it will fit into the program.

Mr. RANSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. RANSLEY. It was virtually agreed to take it up the first free day this week.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it not also true that all rights are protected, because any member of the Rules Committee, whether a member of the majority or minority party, can call the rule up at any time?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Surely. The calling up of the resolution has simply been awaiting the return of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST], who made the specific request that we not call up the resolution until his return from the arduous duties of his primary. Now that he has been successfully renominated as the Republican candidate for Representative in the Congress of the United States, he has happily returned. We have patiently waited upon the pleasure of the gentleman and are now ready to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to answer the parliamentary inquiry submitted by the gentleman from Illinois.

The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois reads:

That a committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate by what authority the Committee on Accounts controls and manages the conduct of the House restaurant and by what authority said committee or any members thereof issued and enforced rules or instructions whereby any citizen of the United States is discriminated against on account of race, color, or creed in said House restaurant—

And so forth. The discharge rule we are considering this morning provides very specifically, as follows:

Under this rule it shall also be in order for a Member to file a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of any resolution providing either a special order of business, or a special rule for the consideration of any public bill or resolution favorably reported by a standing committee, or a special rule for the consideration of a public bill or resolution, which has remained in a standing committee 30 or more days without action.

The gentleman's resolution which the Chair has just read does not provide for a special order of business or a special rule for the consideration of any public bill or resolution favorably reported by a standing committee, or a special rule for the consideration of a public bill or resolution, which has remained in a standing committee 30 or more days without action, and, therefore, a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules will not lie, in the judgment of the Chair, under the discharge rule.

OLD-AGE SECURITY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4548) to provide old-age securities for persons over 60 years of age residing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentlewoman from New Jersey withhold that so that I may submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

THE SUGAR BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask a question. This is what bill?

Mr. JONES. The sugar bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered over the radio by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the radio address of the Honorable WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr., Chairman of the Committee on Labor, as well as my own radio address.

For the first time in the history of our Government, the Democratic majority and our Democratic President have passed legislation to conform to the Jeffersonian theories but contrary to the Republican legislation of the Hamiltonian theories.

For the benefit of the laboring man the Democratic majority has passed various labor legislation, and this has been brought on certain manufacturers owing to their unscrupulous tactics toward their employees.

Although stating they would cooperate with our Government in supporting beneficial measures, they have defied it in many instances. Therefore, in support of the 30-hour week bill, I wish to point out that because of the speed-up systems which are now being used in their factories by certain manufacturers, this legislation is very necessary in order to spread employment and to bring us such prosperity as we formerly enjoyed.

The addresses above referred to are as follows:

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR., APRIL 21 1934

Mr. Chairman and friends: It is gratifying to note the deep and sincere interest which those outside the ranks of industrial workers have taken in problems affecting the welfare of the worker.

The House Committee on Labor, a year ago, unanimously reported a 30-hour work bill to apply to all those workers employed in the manufacturing industries of this country. The Senate of the United States, twice last year voted in favor of limiting the hours of industrial workers to 30 hours per week. Last year we were prevailed upon to give industry an opportunity of putting its own house in order, with a direct promise that weekly hours of labor would be reduced to a point where the millions of unemployed industrial workers would be provided with gainful employment in industry. That promise has not been kept.

Those in control of manufacturing in this country have not only repudiated their implied promise to the Congress of the United States, but, they have ignored, or, refused the request of the President of the United States, publicly made on March 5, that hours of labor be shortened and wages of industrial workers be increased.

The House Labor Committee has again unanimously reported a 30-hour work week bill with wages to be paid to the workers for 30 hours which they now receive for 40 or more hours per week.

The industrial workers of our country, the Congress of the United States, and the President of the United States were promised by industry that, with the suspension of the antitrust laws, permitting industry to get together legally, that industry would find employment for millions of unemployed industrial workers. What do we find?

The vast majority of codes approved by General Johnson provide for a work week of 40 hours. We are told that the average hours prevailing in 1929 were 50 per week, and some persons try to create the impression that the reduction from 50 hours per week to 40 hours per week would absorb many of the unemployed. The truth is that with the added productivity per worker the average workers today produce more in 40 hours per week than they produced in 50 hours in 1929. The people of America are not blind. There may be some among us who follow the ostrich in the fable, who stuck his head in the sand, hoping that he would not be seen; but from our knowledge of the American people I have no hesitancy in saying that the sooner industry hides its body in the sand and places its head up where it can see what is going on, the sooner will its investments be safeguarded.

Not only are the codes in effect dominated by the employing interests, as they alone govern American industry through their control of code authorities, but contrary to the understanding and intent of Congress very few of these codes provide for any representation of the workers. In passing the National Industrial Recovery Act Congress and the American people understood that the N.R.A. would bring about real partnership in industry on the part of employers with bona fide representatives of the workers. The Connery 30-hour work week bill will make effective this understanding of real partnership in industry as it specifically provides that there shall be equal representation on all codes of both employers and workers.

I am particularly conversant with the industries of my own district, which happen to be basic industries, namely: Textiles, shoes, leather, and electrical products. What are the facts? The textile industry was placed on a 40-hour week under the code, with a minimum wage of $13 per week in the North and $12 per week in the South. The textile workers of Massachusetts were not averaging 40 hours per week when the textile codes went into effect, or for many, many months before it. I want to point out that the minimum wage of $13 per week provided for textile workers in Lawrence increased the wages of very, very few textile workers there.

The reason for this being that the minimum wages prevailing in Lawrence before the code took effect were in excess of the minimum wages provided in the code. In the case of shoes this industry normally employs some 205,000 workers. When the code took effect 160,000 were employees and 45,000 were unemployed. We were promised that the code would provide employment for the unemployed; and, after 6 months of operation, we find that only 4,000 of these unemployed shoe workers have secured employment.

As an illustration, on February 14 of this year I read the following telegram into the record of the hearings on the 30-hour work week bill before the House Committee on Labor:

Congressman WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.:

Forty-hour week has proved useless to leather-tanning industry. More workers unemployed now than at beginning of codes.

DANIEL J. BOYLE,
National Leather Workers Association.

I cite these cases simply as illustrative of what is equally true of all other industries.

After 10 months' trial of the N.R.A., dominated as it is by employers who have continued to exploit the worker and exploit the consumer—without any restraint on the part of the Government—the House Labor Committee unanimously demanded that if the eight or ten millions of unemployed workers of our country are to secure employment, it is essential that Congress enact the 30-hour-work week bill now on the House Calendar, with wages no less than they now receive, which we all will admit are too low.

The Congress, to my mind, fully realizes the necessity of forcing American industries to do that which the President of the United States asked them to do, and which they have not done. The farmers of America are suffering at the present time owing to the lack of purchasing power on the part of our industrial workers. In passing, I want to compliment the Washington representatives of the farm organizations for their foresight in endorsing the Connery 30-hour work week bill. They realize that they can hardly expect to receive the costs of production for their products with from eight to ten millions of industrial workers unemployed, or dependent upon private or public charities.

Incidentally, let me say that the Congress of the United States has never sanctioned the formation of company-controlled unions under the N.R.A. On June 8, 1933, under the leadership of Senators NORRIS and WHEELER in the Senate, and myself and other Members of the House, Congress specifically rejected an amendment which would have legalized company unions.

To all real Americans who desire to assist in promoting the welfare of our country, the one vital and absorbing question is that of providing our millions of unemployed with gainful employment at a fair living wage. At this time the only legislative manner in which this can be done is the immediate passage of the Connery 30-hour work week bill with the same wages for 30 hours that they now receive for longer periods.

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN LESINSKI, APRIL 15, 1934

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience—

I have been afforded the privilege to speak over this station and am taking the liberty to deliver my message to the listeners and endeavor to explain section 7–A of the National Recovery Act.

The feeling and the unrest among the labor ranks is due to the fact that many of the laborers have been exploited through the speed-up system in our industries inasmuch as the industries in their continuous competition have attempted to produce products at a continual reduction of price, so that not only the domestic trade, but also the foreign trade would absorb our products on account of the low price.

Industry has forgotten one fundamental part, and that is—that by constantly attempting to lower the price of the commodity that is manufactured, the cost must be taken out of labor and the industries knowing that the present Government's desire is to increase the wage-earner's income, many of them have cooperated with the Government to that extent; but by so doing, they have speeded up the production per man to such a point that today an employee in many of the factories is only a mechanical machine working at a top speed, which in no way aids the welfare of the worker but makes him a mechanical slave.

The average worker is only able to give so many years of his life to the industry; and by the time he reaches the age of 40 years he is no more wanted, as the industry has taken the best part of his life and no longer considers him efficient. There is only one solution to this—and that is, that the industry must be fair to its employees and slow down the production lines, which, of course, will put many more men to work and will naturally add to the cost of the product. I realize fully, that the industry is not willing to do this, and on account of its stand the present unrest and dissatisfaction among the employees exist.

The present government has done more for the laborer than any other previous government has done for many years. When section 7–A became a part of the National Recovery Act, it was not put there as a gesture. It was placed on the statute books of this country for the benefit of labor, and it is up to labor to use it fully, and the Government is willing to use its offices for the benefit of labor when such demand is made. This procedure, of course, is slow, but in a long run it is the best, because both the employee and employer should have a certain amount of time to settle their differences which arise when demands are made either by the employer of the laborer, or employee of the manufacturer.

Realizing that the unemployment situation in this area has been beyond the comprehension of many people, and knowing that the labor cannot constantly wait until all arguments between themselves and the employers are settled, many temporarily resort to strikes, as that is the only remedy left for the employee. Relative to this matter, I still would say to the laborer that before an attempt is made to force any employer to agree to the demands of labor by striking, that labor should first use the machinery of the Government to settle their differences before they resort to other means of forcing the employer to give heed to their demands.

Being an employer for many years myself, I have always followed a rule which I personally thought was best for my business, and that was by seeing that my employees were always paid fair wages, as by paying them a fair wage I knew that I was creating a power which not only helped my business, but helped merchants along the avenue, who in turn became customers of mine. I think that the manufacturers should do likewise and treat their employees the same way.

It is up to all of us to do our share to restore prosperity back to this Nation by following a certain course and willingness to cooperate fully with the Government for the benefit of both labor and manufacturer.

I know that the President is keenly interested to bring about the recovery of the whole Nation, and he is also greatly interested that the labor should be allowed the American standard of living. A few days before I left Washington I corresponded with him regarding the situation of the speed-up system of our factories and presented to him these matters as I thought were for the benefit of the laborers. His reply to me reads as follows:

"Thank you for your note of March 24. I know a good deal about the speed-up system and that in many cases it has been carried too far in certain industries. It occurs to me, however, that it would be more practical to ask the Department of Labor to make a preliminary study of the problem. I think the Department is equipped to do this. Later on, after such a study has been made, we could determine whether a congressional investigation was or was not desirable."

I have since taken this matter up with the Labor Department and have a promise that an investigation is going to be made. I fully realize that if the speed-up systems and mass productions are not checked, it will be a long time before we can expect a full recovery of this Nation.

I am attempting to show labor that everything possible is being done for its benefit; but, of course, we also realize that labor must be fair in its demands and should not overstep its bounds and create unemployment. At the present time, in this district, or in this territory, the major portion of our labor is not organized, and I believe that great consideration should be given the welfare of its families; and for that reason I am asking labor to go along cautiously, and believe that by using the proper agencies of the Government they eventually will not only gain their point but the manufacturer will also be satisfied to go along on a program of this type.

I also realize, of course, that all the employers do not want to abide by any actions of the Government, as evidenced by the facts in the coal industry. An agreement has been reached with the producers on hours and wage scale, and a statement made by Forney Johnston, coal operator, reads as follows:

"As between the civil war in the industry and subjection of the industry to three proconsuls working through a military ringmaster, we prefer civil war."

Speaking at the closing session of the Recovery Administration's coal-wage hearing, Johnston said:

"So far as we are concerned, we have definitely and finally determined that we will not conform any further to any one-man determination of policy and dictation in repudiation of essential basis and covenant of the code."

If industry will take this type of stand, then there will be nothing else left for Congress or the Government to do but to make a law enforcing all the laws, which would then upset the condition in this country of free speech and the collective bargaining between the employee and the employer.

The industry must realize that the Government has been very lenient not to upset the traditions of the Government; but if that employer will take a stand as the Alabama coal operators did, then there is nothing left for the Government to do but enact laws which will force the employer to abide by the law as it is written. When the National Industrial Recovery Act was enacted, it was not only to protect organized labor or the unions, but it was also intended for the benefit of all employees to have the right of collective bargaining. The employees of any individual plant, if they so elect, can form their own organization in that particular industry free from any intimidation of the employer.

The employer has no right to help organize nor has he any right to prepare bylaws for the employees. The employee in this case must stand on his own right and can demand in the particular industry in which he is employed that an organization be formed by the employees, and through their efforts only. The reason for this is so that the collective bargaining between employer and employee is free from intimidation or coercion.

I also wish to say that I am always at the service of both the laborer and employer, and my office is open at all times to all my constituents, be they laborers or manufacturers.

DISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL INCOME

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein certain figures compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board concerning the distribution of the national income and which are useful in the consideration of tax matters and public business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following figures, compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board, concerning the distribution of the national income, which are useful in the consideration of tax matters and public business.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD,
New York, April 19, 1934.

Total tax collection, Federal, State, and local, in the United States in 1932 were equal to 20.3 percent of the total national income of the American people, according to computations announced today by the National Industrial Conference Board in a study of The burden of taxation in the United States and European countries. In 1929, total tax collections in the United States were equal to 11.8 percent of the national income.

In the period from 1929 to 1932 the ratio of taxes to national income increased in three European countries as follows: United Kingdom, from 21 to 28 percent; Germany, from 19 to 22 percent; and France, from 23 to 25 percent.

American tax collections in 1932, the last year for which comparable data are available, were almost equal to the combined total of the three European countries, the figures being as follows: United States, $8,000,000,000; United Kingdom, $4,400,000,000; Germany, $2,400,000,000; France, $2,300,000,000.

Aggregate tax collections in the United States reached an all-time peak of $10,300,000,000 in 1930. Of this total Federal taxes accounted for $3,500,000,000; States taxes, $1,800,000,000; and local taxes, $5,000,000,000. In 1932, Federal taxes amounted to $1,800,000,000; States, $1,700,000,000; and local, $4,500,000,000. The principal factor in the decline in total tax collections after 1930 was the marked drop in Federal taxes, particularly income taxes and customs. Federal tax returns for the fiscal year 1933 were at the 1932 level, and for 1934 the indications are that collections will be substantially higher.

The ratio of taxes to national income was almost constant in the United States in the predepression years, 1926 to 1929, moving no lower than 11 percent nor higher than 11.8 percent. In 1929, taxes totaled $9,800,000,000, compared with total national income of $83,000,000,000. Taxes increased to $10,300,000,000 in 1930, while national income decreased to $70,300,000,000, with the result that the ratio of taxes to national income rose to 14.6 percent. In the next 2 years taxes fell off to $8,000,000,000, but national income dropped even more rapidly, to $39,400,000,000, and the ratio for 1932 rose to 20.3 percent, the highest figure on record.

LOCKS IN THE OHIO RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H.R. 9265) prescribing tolls to be paid for the use of locks in the Ohio River and its tributaries has been referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I am of opinion it should be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Parliamentarian agrees with me. I therefore ask that the measure may be withdrawn from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AIR- AND OCEAN-MAIL CONTRACTS OF THE SENATE

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing I send to the desk a privileged Senate concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 13).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on Air and Ocean Mail Contracts of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,500 additional copies of each and all parts of the testimony taken before said special committee during the Seventy-third Congress in connection with its investigation of air-mail and ocean-mail contracts: Provided, That 10 copies shall be distributed to each Senator.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 9, strike out the proviso reading, "Provided, That 10 copies shall be distributed to each Senator."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the lady from New Jersey is to take up a most important bill, and I think we should have a quorum present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 131]

Allgood	Disney	Hoidale	Oliver, Ala.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and nineteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to; and the doors were opened.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the following Members are in attendance on a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs: Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire, Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. JAMES, Mr. Goss, and Mr. KVALE.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—M'ANDREWS v. BRITTEN

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, presented a privileged report in the contested-election case of James McAndrews v. Fred A. Britten, which was referred to the calendar and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address made Saturday night by the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Tugwell, which gives his philosophy of government, which has been of so much interest to the minority side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to any of Mr. Tugwell's philosophy going in the RECORD. In my opinion, his so-called "Tugwell bill" would have closed up every country drug store in the United States, and would have put out of business every country newspaper. He did a great injustice to a high class, highly respected mineral-water business in my district, at Mineral Wells, Tex., which has been curing afflicted people from all over the United States for nearly a hundred years. He had this product in his "Chamber of Horrors" at Chicago until we forced him to take it out. I do not like his philosophy.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I will renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4548) to provide old-age securities for persons over 60 years of age residing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. And pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER] and one half by myself.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, the bill is of so great importance it ought to be debated generally under the rules of the House, and I shall be forced to object to the unanimous-consent request.

The motion of Mrs. NORTON was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the District of Columbia an Old Age Security Board, hereafter referred to as the board, to be composed of the three Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who will serve without additional compensation during their term of office.

SEC. 2. The board shall perform all the duties imposed upon it by this act and shall have authority to appoint such persons and to make such rules and regulations consistent with the provisions hereof as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. The board shall meet at such times and places as shall be fixed by its rules.

SEC. 3. Every person (man or woman, married or single) shall, while residing in the District of Columbia, be entitled to a security in old age, subject to the restrictions and qualifications hereinafter noted.

SEC. 4. The amount of said security shall be the amount which when added to the income of the applicant will make the total income of an applicant not to exceed $9 per week.

SEC. 5. A security may be granted only to an applicant who (a) is a citizen of the United States; (b) has attained the age of 60 years or upward; (c) resides and has his domicile in the District of Columbia, and has so resided and had his domicile continuously therein for not less than 10 years immediately preceding the date of the application for a security: Provided, That continous residence in the District of Columbia shall not be deemed to have been interrupted by occasional absences therefrom where the total period of such absences does not exceed 4 years; (d) that the claimant is not at the time an inmate of any prison, jail, workhouse, insane asylum, or any other public reformatory, or correctional institution.

SEC. 6. The income of the claimant from all sources at the date of application for relief shall not exceed $468 per annum; and the value of his property or the value of the combined property of husband and wife living together shall not exceed $3,000.

(a) The claimant must not have deprived himself, directly or indirectly, of any property for the purpose of qualifying for old-age relief.

(b) The aged person must have no child or any other person legally responsible for the support of the aged person under the laws of the District of Columbia fully able to support the applicant.

(c) At the death of the person to whom the security is granted, or of the last survivor of a married couple, the total amount of the security since the first grant, together with 3 percent of interest, shall be deducted and allowed by the proper courts out of the proceeds of his property as a preferred claim against the estate of the person so assisted, and refunded to the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia Relief Aid Fund, leaving the balance for distribution among the lawful heirs in accordance with law: Provided, That upon sufficient cause, such as mismanagement, failure to keep in repair, or the inability to properly manage such property, the board may demand the assignment or transfer of such property upon the first grant of such security or at any time thereafter that it deems advisable for the purpose of safeguarding the interest of an applicant or a security certificate recipient or for the protection of the funds of the State. The board shall establish such rules and regulations regarding the care, transfer, management, and sale of such property as it deems advisable, and also provide for the return of the balance of the claimant's property into its hands whenever the pension is withdrawn or the claimant ceases to request it.

SEC. 7. The annual income of any property, inclusive of a homestead, shall be computed at 3 percent of its determined value.

(a) In ascertaining a claimant's income and the amount of security, his income for the past preceding year shall be deemed his annual income, and the property owned at the end of that year as his accumulated property: Provided, That when the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the board the loss of personal income derived from personal earnings it shall be deducted from the income of the preceding year in considering the amount of security to be granted.

SEC. 8. A claimant for an old-age security under this act shall deliver his claim in writing to such person or persons as may be authorized by the board, the same to be forwarded to the board within 10 days, together with such recommendations as are considered consistent with the rules and regulations of the board, or said application may be filed with the board.

SEC. 9. When the claim is established and the rate of the first year's old-age security is fixed the board shall, in the manner it may prescribe, certify same to the Secretary of the Treasury, together with the claimant's name, residence, age, the amount of weekly payments, the date of issuance, and who shall draw his order on the United States Treasury.

(a) The old-age security certificate shall be required each subsequent year, to be renewed after satisfactory investigation.

SEC. 10. The old-age security shall commence on the date named in the certificate issued to the claimant. A decision shall be made within 30 days after claim is filed.

(a) All old-age securities shall be paid in monthly payments by warrants drawn on the District of Columbia Aid Relief Fund thereof.

SEC. 11. If at any time during the currency or continuance of an old-age security certificate the recipient, or the wife or husband of the recipient, becomes possessed of any property or income in excess of the amount allowed by law in respect to the amount of security granted, the board may on inquiry either cancel the security or vary the amount thereof during the period of the certificate, and it shall be the duty of the recipient immediately to notify the board of the receipt and possession of such property or income.

(a) If on the death of any recipient of an old-age security it is found that he was possessed of property in excess of the amount allowed by law in respect to the amount of security granted, double the total amount of the relief granted in excess of that to which the recipient was by law entitled may be recovered by the board as preferred claim from the estate so found in excess. The Attorney General shall take the necessary proceedings to recover such claims and the amount so recovered shall be paid into the United States Treasury.

SEC. 12. On the death of a recipient of old-age security the installments then accruing, and such other reasonable funeral expenses as are necessary for the burial of such person, shall be paid to such person or persons as the board directs: Provided, That these expenses do not exceed $100: Provided further, That the estate of the deceased is insufficient to defray the expenses: And provided further, That these provisions for providing old-age securities shall not be construed as a vested right in the security recipient.

SEC. 13. During the continuance of the old-age security no recipient shall receive any other relief from the District of Columbia except for medical and surgical assistance.

SEC. 14. All securities shall be absolutely inalienable by any assignment, sale attachment, execution, or otherwise, and in case of bankruptcy the old-age security shall not pass to any trustee or other persons acting on behalf of creditors.

SEC. 15. If at any time the board has reason to believe that any security certificate has been improperly obtained, it shall cause special inquiry to be made and may suspend payment of any installment pending the inquiry. If, on inquiry, it appears that the certificate was improperly obtained, it shall be canceled by the board, but if it appears that the certificate was properly obtained, the suspended installment shall be payable in due course.

SEC. 16. Any person, who by means of a willfully false statement or representation, or by impersonation, or other fraudulent device, obtains or attempts to obtain, or aids or abets any person to obtain (a) an old-age security certificate to which he is not justly entitled, (b) a larger amount of assistance than that to which he is justly entitled, (c) payment of any forfeited installment grant, (d) or aids or abets in the buying or in any way disposing of the property of an old-age security recipient, without the consent of the board, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

SEC. 17. Where on old-age security recipient is convicted of an offense under section 16, the board may cancel the security certificate in respect to the issue of which the offense was committed.

(a) When a claimant has received a notice that his claim for a security has been denied he shall have the right to personally appear before the board to defend his claim for a security after due notice has been made to the board of such desire.

SEC. 18. In case of forfeiture of any old-age security certificate the person whose security is so forfeited shall be disqualified from making an application for a new certificate until the expiration of 1 year from the date of forfeiture.

SEC. 19. The funds for the payment of old-age securities shall be furnished by the District of Columbia and all expenses incurred in the administration of the act by the board shall be paid from the funds of the District of Columbia Aid Relief Fund, which shall be established, the funds to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States. The sum of $—— is hereby appropriated for said purposes.

SEC. 20. Within 90 days after the close of the calendar year the board shall make a report of the preceding year to the President, stating (a) the total number of recipients; (b) the amount paid in cash; (c) the total number of applicants; (d) the number granted securities, the number denied, the number canceled during the year, and such other information as the President may deem advisable.

SEC. 21. All methods of procedure in hearings, investigations, recording, registration, and accounting pertaining to the old-age securities under this act shall be in accordance with the rules and regulations as laid down from time to time by the board.

SEC. 22. Every old-age security granted under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be granted and shall be held subject to the provisions of any amending or repealing act that may hereafter be enacted, and no recipient under this act shall have any claim for compensation or otherwise by reason of his old-age security being affected in any way by any such amending or repealing act.

SEC. 23. That whenever in this act the masculine pronoun is used, it shall be held to include the feminine pronoun also.

SEC. 24. This act shall be named and cited as the Old Age Security Act of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 25. This act shall take effect January 1, 1934: Provided, however, That said Old Age Security Board shall be appointed on or before July 1, 1934, and thereupon said board shall perform all the duties required by this act from date of said appointment.

During the reading of the foregoing bill the following occurred:

Mrs. NORTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. This is such an important bill that we should have the provisions of the bill printed at length in the RECORD at this place, so that the membership and the country may know its provisions as they are read. It is only 10 pages long, and I object.

The Clerk continued the reading.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. TABER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present, a quorum, and the Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk continued with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, it is very evident that there is not a quorum here now. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, so that we may get the Members in out of the cloakrooms.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members present, a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. May I ask the Members who are now present please to stay here and make a quorum so that we can dispose of this humanitarian piece of legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that its count can be impeached from the floor in committee. The Clerk will continue with the reading.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. I find it very difficult to understand why every committee in this House is treated courteously until the Committee on the District of Columbia comes in with a bill that is not approved by certain Members of the House. Two weeks ago I had this bill on the calendar. I was asked at that time by a certain Member not to bring up the bill on that day. We had a great many other bills of importance on the calendar and we thought that we would dispose of those bills first. I did so, with the understanding that the bill would be brought up today, that it would be a special order of business. I ask no concessions from any Member of this House, but I do want plain, simple justice. [Applause.] This certain Member who objected to the bill came to me and the reason he gave me for objecting—and please bear this in mind—was that he did not have any such law in his State and that as it was a congressional year, and he was coming up for election it would probably put him in a very embarrassing position there. Of course, I feel very sorry for any Member who is having a hard time in the election. I may have a hard time myself and I would want all the cooperation that I could get from the House to support me, if I deserved it, but does any Member of this House think that that is a fair reason for depriving the old people of the District of Columbia of a pension bill? Does any Member of the House think that is the proper procedure? I cannot believe it. I want to know if this House is going to support the Members who have worked very faithfully on District matters, or if it is possible that one Member can frustrate the work that we are trying to do? I have tried to be absolutely fair in my dealings with every committee.

I recall last week, when the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the Committee on Appropriations had under consideration the District appropriation bill here, there were many parts of that bill that I strongly objected to and which I should like to have seen amended. I could have done, or any Member could have done, exactly what is being done here today, namely, filibuster all day long and make it impossible for the committee to finish its work, but I did not believe that that was the fair way to proceed. If a bill is to be rejected, let it be rejected by the Membership of the House on its merits, but it is not fair to reject it because one or two Members in the House oppose it for personal reasons. Therefore I did not make points of no quorum when the District appropriation bill was under consideration, although I may say that there were many times when I should like to have done so. I did not consider that that was a fair way to proceed. Today I think we have been subjected to the most unfair treatment that has ever been witnessed in this House and I appeal to the membership to sustain the Committee on the District of Columbia and to give this bill a chance to be voted up or down upon its merits.

I want now to explain something about the bill. I do not think it is necessary to call the attention of the membership of the House to the importance of this bill. We have here a bill taking care of old people. In 28 States of the Union at the present time there is a similar bill, and in every State which we have investigated we have found that it costs less to keep the people in their own homes and give them this so-called "pension" than it does to send them to institutions. If for no other reason than that, the bill should pass; but there is another reason, and I think a very much more humane one, why the bill should pass. I do not know whether any of you have ever had experience with aged dependent people. Before I came to Congress I gained some knowledge of this question as chairman of the county institution in my own county, and I saw many sights that led me to believe that while institutional care is very good and at times absolutely necessary, particularly in case of illness, it is not in any sense to be compared with keeping these old people in their own homes.

This bill merely provides $35 a month in order to keep these people in their own homes. You know and I know that in these days of stress many people have found it necessary to apply for help who never dreamed of doing so before. We are living in a different age, under different conditions; and none of us knows when the day may come that we, too, may have to appeal for support from somebody. If you have children who are able to support you, that is very fine; but there are many children today who, with all the good intentions in the world, find it impossible to help their fathers and mothers. If they could do so, they should be obliged to do so. If, however, they cannot help them, surely these aged people should not suffer in this, the Capital of the wealthiest Nation in the world. If the Government contributes $35 a month, that father or mother, instead of being a liability, becomes an asset; and certainly they can be very much happier surrounded by their dear ones than they can when sent to Blue Plains or any other institution where old people are kept together.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. PARSONS. From what source will come the funds to establish this relief?

Mrs. NORTON. From the District of Columbia funds.

Mr. PARSONS. How will it be raised?

Mrs. NORTON. In the usual way that all District funds are raised.

Mr. PARSONS. In the regular tax rate?

Mrs. NORTON. Exactly.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. I notice on page 3 of the bill the committee struck out this language:

> The aged person must have no child or any other person legally responsible for the support of the aged person under the laws of the District of Columbia fully able to support the applicant.

Will the lady give us the reason why this language was stricken from the bill?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; the language was stricken because there is no such law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ARNOLD. Should there not be such a law in the District of Columbia?

Mrs. NORTON. I think so; but, of course, such a bill would have to be reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think the bill should carry language which would eliminate those who have children able to support them.

Mrs. NORTON. The committee did not feel that it was proper to leave that language in the bill, inasmuch as there is no law to compel children to support parents. However, I shall be very glad to accept an amendment covering the point the gentleman has in mind if he will prepare one.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will keep that in mind. If the gentlewoman will permit a further question, the gentlewoman said, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that funds to provide for this relief must come from taxes levied against property in the District of Columbia.

Mrs. NORTON. Exactly. Of course, the gentleman knows the Government makes a small contribution to the District funds.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And is no part of it to come from Federal contributions or Federal appropriations for the operation of the District?

Mrs. NORTON. It will come from District of Columbia funds.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And no part will come from the Federal Treasury?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not know exactly what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I should like to know definitely whether any part of the funds for the support of these pensioners is to come from the Federal Treasury?

Mrs. NORTON. My understanding is that it does not. When the Federal Government makes a contribution to the District it belongs to the District.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. A provision should be inserted in the bill specifying that no part of the funds shall come from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GLOVER. I am vitally interested in this principle of legislation both for the District of Columbia and for the States. I was just wondering if the gentlewoman had made a survey of the city and is able to inform the House about how many persons would be cared for, and whether or not the District funds at this time are sufficient to carry the amount that is proposed in the bill?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the District funds are not now sufficient. We would, of course, be obliged to authorize the District to use additional funds for this purpose.

Mr. GLOVER. How many people would be affected by the bill?

Mrs. NORTON. According to a recent survey and estimate 1,240 men and women would be eligible for this pension.

The estimated average annual cost per person is $200. The total cost, therefore, would be $248,000 on the figures at present available; and this is much less than the cost per person at Blue Plains.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I am interested in the rate. The State of Michigan recently passed legislation of this character and fixed the rate at $30 per month. Could the gentlewoman inform the House why it was fixed at $35 in the District of Columbia? Is it because of higher costs of living?

Mrs. NORTON. Living costs are higher in Washington. Living costs in Washington are comparable to those in New York and most of the eastern cities.

Mr. DONDERO. One more question: I notice that the tax rate has been reduced to $1.20.

Mrs. NORTON. No; it has not been reduced. An effort was made to reduce it, but the rate was not reduced.

I may say that in my own State, New Jersey, we have found that it is considerably cheaper to keep people in their own homes than it is to maintain them in institutions.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia endorse the principle of this legislation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentlewoman inform the House a little more fully with regard to the operation of this law in her own State? What is the amount per person, and what is the age at which the relief starts?

Mrs. NORTON. For the present year the annual appropriation for my State per person was $177.60.

That was the rate in New Jersey.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Fifteen dollars in New Jersey; and $35 is the amount in the pending bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; but we provide in this bill that the $35 includes all of the income that an applicant must have. In other words, if an applicant had $2, $3, or $10 a month income from some other source, this would be deducted from the $35 granted by the District.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did I understand the gentlewoman to say that in New Jersey the average was $177 a year?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. That would be a little less than $15 per month.

Mrs. NORTON. That is the average annual pension.

Mr. McFARLANE. And $177 a year is a little over $14 per month.

Mrs. NORTON. That is about the average for the State; the counties make their contribution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentlewoman explain the New Jersey provision inasmuch as she has brought the matter up? What is the minimum age in order to obtain a pension in the gentlewoman's State?

Mrs. NORTON. The minimum age in my State is about 65 years. That is the minimum age in this bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. How do they get $24 when the total amount on the average per year is less than $180?

Mrs. NORTON. I presume that is the average. They have not applied probably for more than that. I am merely quoting the average.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What does the investigation show as to the amounts paid in other States?

Mrs. NORTON. The Department of Labor has furnished these statistics.

State	Average annual pension	Average annual cost of poor-house care per inmate	Sav'ng to taxpayer per pensioner
California	$275.28	$484.12	$208.84
Delaware	113.91	495.62	381.71
Idaho	132.21	528.52	396.31
Kentucky	60.00	295.95	235.95
Maryland	332.38	459.79	127.41
Massachusetts	312.00	539.33	227.33
Minnesota	192.36	631.86	439.50
Montana	158.35	634.19	475.84
Nevada	300.00	949.16	649.16
New Hampshire	232.79	503.72	270.93
New Jersey	177.60	479.86	302.26
New York	302.88	405.59	102.71
Utah	116.76	512.33	395.57
Wisconsin	236.04	399.99	163.95
Wyoming	170.66	908.68	738.02

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the age?

Mrs. NORTON. I cannot tell the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What are the minimum property qualifications?

Mrs. NORTON. I cannot answer that question. Perhaps the gentlewoman from California can tell us something about that.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We would like to have some information.

Mrs. KAHN. I do not know anything about that feature.

Mr. BLACK. The minimum rate shows the cost on the taxation basis as against the cost on the poorhouse basis.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

In Wisconsin the average has been $236.04 for the year. The average cost of the poorhouse care in that State was $399.99. It is contended that they have saved $163.95 through having this pension.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I appreciate that and understand the principle involved, but what I am trying to ascertain is the amount allowed pensioners who have no property, income, or children responsible for their support in the various States where the pension law has been adopted.

Mrs. NORTON. I have not that information. If the gentleman would like to have me secure the information, I will do so and include it in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Has the gentlewoman any definite information for any particular State?

Mrs. NORTON. What is the particular question that the gentleman wishes to ask?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. My particular question is the amount allowed a person 65 years of age in New Jersey or any other State.

Mrs. NORTON. The amount allowed in my State is $14.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The amount allowed in Pennsylvania is $30.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. For what age?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Seventy.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the average amount paid?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I may say that this law has been passed, but does not take effect until December.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am wondering if someone can give us the information as to the definite amount allowed pensioners 65 years of age or over.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. May I say to the gentleman that I have sent for a book which will give the information as to all the States.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What was the poorhouse charge per person?

Mrs. NORTON. The poorhouse charge—and this is a comparison per inmate—is $42.13.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The gentlewoman quoted the amount paid out and the amount allowed by law?

Mrs. NORTON. That is correct.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentlewoman quoted figures from the State of Wisconsin?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. May I ask the gentlewoman where she obtained those figures? I should also like to get the amount given, and to learn where she obtained the figures.

Mrs. NORTON. This shows the number of pensioners as of December 31, 1933, for Wisconsin as 1,760. I obtained them from the most recent poorhouse investigation made by the Department of Labor.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Old-age pensions paid in Wisconsin?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. By the State?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. The average pension per annum is $236.04. The poorhouse cost in the gentleman's State was $399.99—a saving to Wisconsin taxpayers of $163.95 per pensioner.

Mr. O'MALLEY. May I inquire where the gentlewoman obtained these figures, because I did not know that the pensions were paid by the State? I thought they were being paid by the county.

Mrs. NORTON. It may be that the county is contributing to the State fund. My statistics are from the Department of Labor.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In my State the situation has been that the counties are supposed to be helped by the State, but, the State not having the money, the counties are still paying it.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman I think that is true in a great many States.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And I cannot believe those figures are reliable, and I should like to know where they were obtained.

Mrs. NORTON. I received these figures from the Department of Labor.

Mr. PEYSER. Under the provisions of the bill providing $35 a month, is it not fair to assume that in many cases the person applying for help may receive $5, $10, or $15 a month from a member of the family, so that the average expenditure may be less than even $20 a month?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; every dollar contributed to the pensioner from any other source will be deducted from the $35.

Mr. DONDERO. I am interested in the age limit that has been placed in the bill. Can the gentlewoman from New Jersey give the House any information why it was fixed at 65 years of age? In my State it has been fixed at 70.

Mrs. NORTON. The original bill called for 60, and it seemed to be considered that a person of 60 was just as needy, if destitute, as one older. Then we had some discussion to raise the age to 68, and we compromised on 65.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the age limit in the various States?

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman, I am sure, will admit that a person needy at 60 is in just as difficult a position as if he were older, and today, with prevailing conditions, it is difficult for any man or woman to secure a position when past 60 years of age.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentlewoman give the House any information as to what is the average age in the States that have adopted this kind of law?

Mrs. NORTON. I am not sure I have that information, but I think the average age is about 65. There are some States under, some States over this, but I believe from the evidence brought out in the committee that the average is about 65, and this is one of the reasons we arrived at this particular age.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentlewoman from New Jersey will permit, I believe the average is about 63½ years, to be exact.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In my own State it happens to be 65.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. I presume the gentlewoman knows there are about 28 States in the Union giving these old-age pensions?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes; I stated that at the beginning of my argument. There are 28 States with such legislation, and I think there are about 10 other States with pending legislation which they hope to complete within the next year or two.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. HENNEY. In regard to the State of Wisconsin, I may state that previously it has been optional with the counties as to whether they would take care of their aged people or not, but at a recent election the vote was 531,915 to 154,726 to make it compulsory on the State, and it is proposed to raise the money through a tax on incomes of over $15,000 and also on labor-saving machinery.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I have here an editorial from one of the Washington papers which I should like to read into the RECORD:

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 4, 1934]

THE MODERN WAY

Old-age pensions are no longer a novelty. Twenty-seven States are now caring for indigent aged people in their own homes. From experience over a considerable period they have found that old folks who are unable to support themselves can be saved from the humiliation of going to a poorhouse without any additional expense to taxpayers. The average cost of old-age pensions runs from about $8 to $24 per month, depending upon local conditions and the terms of various State laws. The average cost of maintaining a person in the District Infirmary at Blue Plains is $22.50 per month, exclusive of interest on a large capital investment.

No one questions the need for some action to relieve aged indigents of Washington. Blue Plains is always overcrowded. The enactment of an old-age pension law appears to be the only alternative to the investment of more money in institutions of this kind. The principle that aged people without means of support must be assisted by the State is no longer open to question. The real issue is whether Congress shall adopt for the District the most modern as well as the most satisfactory system of discharging this inevitable obligation.

May I say in this connection that we have held hearings on this bill and it has received the unanimous support of all the associations of the District as being the very best way of taking care of the poor people.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey if she does not believe that the passage of an old-age pension bill for the people of the District of Columbia will advance the enactment of a national old-age pension law in this country?

Mrs. NORTON. I think so, but I do not know that that is important in the consideration of this measure. It would appear to be a matter for the States to decide, and I should like to see every State in the Union adopt its own old-age pension bill. I believe in State rights.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentlewoman from New Jersay will now yield, as I understand the figures she read a moment ago of the average rates in the 28 States that have old-age pension laws, they range from $8 to $24 a month?

Mrs. NORTON. That is about the average.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I ask why it is necessary to make it almost twice the average in the District of Columbia?

Mrs. NORTON. The people in the District seem to think this is a fair amount, and, after all, they should have something to say about spending their own funds.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. All the States should have that right.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. BLACK rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey desire to yield the balance of her time?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that under the rules someone opposing the bill should now be recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition first.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon his motion?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not fair. The gentleman intends to try to close the debate. We must vote that motion down.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON and Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 30, noes 47.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I make a parliamentary inquiry? It is of course permissible under the rules for the chairman of the committee, or anyone else, who has an hour, to yield a part of their time to others.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather the gentleman would get his time in his own hour. If he is recognized he has an hour. I want to use all of my hour.

Mr. TABER. I wanted to ask the gentleman one question, and it is very important. I went to the desk and asked for a copy of the hearings on the bill and there are none. I was wondering whether the gentleman knew whether there were hearings on this important bill.

Mr. BLACK. That inquiry should be directed to the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Since the committee does not answer, I will state that I have not been able to locate any hearings, and I do not believe there are any hearings. Mr. Chairman, as long as I remain a Member of this House, whenever I think a piece of legislation is unwise you are going to find me here on this floor doing everything within the limits of parliamentary law to stop that legislation. I am going to do it whether the chairman of the committee is a man or a woman. I am going to do it whether the chairman likes it or not.

When anyone is elected to Congress he takes his seat in this House as a Member of the House to abide by the rules. The rules of this House permit every Member to use to the utmost all his skill, if he has any, to fight for legislation which he thinks ought to pass and to fight against legislation which he thinks ought not to be passed, and no one has any right to become peeved when he opposes such a bill. You will find me opposing all bills that I deem bad as long as I am a Member, and nothing is going to stop me.

When we had a former District day there were about 15 or 20 bills on the calendar. This bill was up near the top. I went to the chairman of this committee, and I went to the chairman's straw boss, Mr. BLACK, and I also went to the assistant straw boss, Mr. PALMISANO, and told them all that if they called up this bill they would not pass many bills that day on the calendar, that I was against it, and that I was going to use every bit of parliamentary knowledge of the rules that I had to stop it. And after consultation they sidetracked this bill, and put it down at the bottom of the list, and I helped them to pass quite a number of noncontroversial measures that day. They knew then that I opposed this bill, and intended to do everything within my power to stop it.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I cannot yield. I want to have the lady obey the rules as the men have to do. I cannot answer the lady like I could a man, and I do not want to be placed at a disadvantage.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is reflecting on a Member of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am not. I am simply protecting my own rights.

Mr. BLACK. I do not mind the gentleman calling me a straw boss.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman from New York has been very active in helping to guide District legislation through this House. The proponents of a measure should never become personally offended because other Members disagree with them, and see fit to oppose their measure. The District of Columbia Committee has always brought some bad legislation, once in a while, on the floor ever since I have been here. I see a former chairman of the District Committee now on the floor. I helped to kill scores of bad District bills when he was chairman of the committee every year during the time I served on this committee in the House. I helped to kill about half the bills he favorably reported.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Name him!

Mr. BLANTON. It was Fred Zihlman, who sits over there smiling. I know that it seems natural to my old chairman, Fred Zihlman, to see me on this floor vigorously fighting a District bill. For several years while he was chairman of the committee I was the ranking Democratic member, and we had it back and forth across the table.

Members here have already expressed their great surprise that respecting a bill of this importance the committee has furnished us no hearings whatever. And question after question was propounded in an attempt to obtain pertinent information, all to no avail. At least we should have been informed of the fact that the District Commissioners reported to the chairman of this committee that the District budget cannot possibly carry the financial load of supporting old-age pensions in the manner prescribed by this bill at this time. When the Commissioners said that, they in effect said that this bill should not be passed. If their District budget cannot possibly carry the financial load which the provisions of this bill places on them, then how is the financial load to be carried? Are we Congressmen to ignore their warning? They say they cannot carry the financial load of this bill. Are we going to put on them a load they cannot carry? Or is it expected that the Government will carry the load?

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Something was said about somebody being afraid of votes at home. I made no such statement. I never have been afraid of votes back home since I have been a Member of this Congress. If this Congress is in session when my primary comes up you will find me still here very busy and working hard on this floor, 2,000 mile away.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I would prefer for the gentleman to use his own time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am going to use my own time. I have such confidence in the people I represent back home that I know that if I do my duty here on this floor and help to kill bad bills they are going to look after me when election time comes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman be kind enough to yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute, then I will. I have confidence in my constituents, and they have confidence in me, and that is the reason they take care of me, whether I am there or not. They know that when I am here they can depend on me to fight to stop bad bills.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. It is about time the gentleman said something about the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not a point of order, Mr. Chairman, and if I desired, I could omit it from my remarks. It so happens that under the rules I can use my time in discussing any subject that suits me.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman be kind enough to yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to let any of these "side swipers" on the side lines interject anything I do not like into my remarks.

Mr. BLACK. Why reduce me from a "straw boss" to a "side-swiper"?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, as the gentleman changes, I change. What he says here is futile when I have the floor, because I am going to use my hour in my own way. Do you know what the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] tried to do, Mr. Chairman, when they had had all of the time used in debate—this gentleman who talks about being fair? He knows that this is a very controversial measure, and I think that when the other gentleman over there from New York [Mr. TABER] in his own proper time moves to strike out the enacting clause, there will be enough votes here to strike it out. The gentleman knew that this is a controversial measure, and when his chairman had used all of the time in debate for the bill and there had been none against it, he made a motion for the committee to rise, so as to go into the House. He was then going to make a motion to close debate and keep the opposition from being heard at all. Oh, I am on to that, I will say to the great chief justice from New York.

Mr. BLACK. Chief justice? That is better. Now, I shall not make any points of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I was interested in hearing the gentleman say that he did not feel worried about how his constituents in Texas felt.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, let us get away from that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman spent 2 weeks in his legislature when they were considering the redistricting bill when Congress was in session.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that is absolutely not true. I did not leave Washington and did not go near my Texas Legislature. Politicians down there gerrymandered my district and tried to frame me by stealing away 10 of my best counties. The gentleman does not know the facts but has been misinformed, and yet he is a pretty good scout at that. Somebody has misinformed him; and will not the gentleman take that back, since he has been misinformed?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I now want to talk about this bill. The very first paragraph in the bill provides that the three Commissioners shall constitute the Board. Suppose we should do away with the Engineer Commissioner. I am not going to vote to do it. I want to see Major Gotwals or somebody like Major Gotwals kept there. I am for Major Gotwals. I believe in him and I believe he is honest, but there is a move here on both sides of the Capitol to do away with the Engineer Commissioner and have only two. Why don't you strike out the word "three" and leave it to the Commissioners if you want a good bill?

Mr. BLACK. We will accept that amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well, I shall offer an amendment to that effect. So gentlemen can see that I am helping the committee frame a good bill. Let us take the next paragraph, which gives those three Commissioners carte blanche authority to employ just as many employees as they want to. There is no limitation on it; they can appoint 500 if they want to; they can appoint 5,000 employees if they want to. There is no limitation.

I have been in this House long enough to know that it is advisable to put a limitation as to the number of employees on these bills, or you will have several times the proper number of appointments.

There is no limitation on salaries. The Commissioners can fix the salaries just like they want to by calling the positions certain designated names, and then under the act of 1923 the Classification Board fixes those salaries automatically, with certain sums for certain positions. It is the name of the position that fixes the salary.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I cannot. The lady can use her own time.

I do that because no matter what the lady says to me I have to smile and bear it, because I am a gentleman and I cannot talk back. I never say anything unkind to a lady. They can say anything they want to me, but I always smile. Unfortunately, sometimes, when we are fighting a bill that a lady wants we cannot yield to them. [Laughter.]

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I yield to my good friend, because I am her friend, and the gentlewoman knows it. I am going to try to kill her bill, but I shall be pleased to yield to her.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows that in the end he will probably vote for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Never will I vote for it until the gentlewoman puts in the bill all the people of the United States. Then I would vote for it. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. This is a District bill. I have no authority to insert such a provision. Please do not designate me as "the lady." I am a Member of the House, with exactly the same credentials as the gentleman from Texas, and I want no concession because of my sex. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Then everything will be lovely, and all of us who do not believe that this is a wise measure to pass at this time may oppose it without fear of anyone taking offense. It would be an unthinkable situation if Members of Congress were denied the privilege of opposing measures they deemed unwise and unsalutary because they were afraid it might be considered discourtesy to a lady chairman in charge of some bill. I try to be courteous to everybody, but I reserve the right to oppose bad bills, to object to them [laughter], and fight them from the floor.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman evidently thinks that he is the only Member in this House who has the interest of the country at heart.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are lots of others here. When the vote comes on the motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, it is going to be a surprise to my friend.

Mrs. NORTON. It may be a surprise to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me discuss this bill; then I will yield to my friend. I want to get the facts before the committee. Are you gentlemen in favor of letting three Commissioners select all the appointees they want and fix their salaries?

Mr. STUDLEY. Will their salaries be fixed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BLANTON. Their salaries will be fixed by designating them by names of jobs, calling them director of this or chief clerk of that, or assistant director or assistant chief clerk. That fixes the salary under the Classification Act, and they have found it out. I am not in favor of it.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Please let me proceed a little.

I am going to insist on Congress holding the purse strings. I am going to insist on this Congress saying how many employees shall be appointed and what their salaries shall be; and then you will not put a dreadful burden on my splendid friend and colleague from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], as head of the Appropriations Committee, to pass on these matters himself. You are placing a great burden on him to make him assume the responsibility to hold them in line. The Congress ought to hold them in line. And that is a vicious part of this bill. I will never vote for the bill as long as this matter is left indeterminate as to the number of employees and their salaries.

Now let me get to another point. Did you know that during this fiscal year, in addition to $6,500,000 in cash that your taxpayers have given to this District for its running expenses, that the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. have given to the District of Columbia out of your tax money, out of the Treasury of the United States, $9,000,000 more?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry. I know more about it than my friend from Maryland. I have been checking this up.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I cannot yield. I want to get these facts before the Committee. Now, that is what they got in the District. Do you know who got this relief money? I am told that the records show that about 91 percent of it has been received by the colored population of Washington. Now, if it were a legitimate population I would have no objection. I am one southern Congressman who has never had any prejudice against the colored race, when they conduct themselves properly. I am their friend. Why, DE PRIEST will come to me for a favor lots quicker than he will to some of his Republican colleagues over here. The colored men in this building know I am their friend, and they come to me when in trouble. Why, when our man Coates, back here in the cloakroom, had to have some money for an operation on his eye, did he go to WOODRUFF, MCFADDEN, or SNELL? No; he came to me. [Laughter.] I let him have the money. He knew where he could get it. They know who are their real friends.

The colored people in all the States around here have found out that it is an easy thing for a colored man to live in Washington and they have been drifting in here for years, and lots of them are so no account you could not make them work if you used a long prod pole. Some will not work. They have been getting this relief here; 91 percent of all these millions we have spent here has gone to them; and your taxpayers back home are paying for it.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. I wonder if the people of Washington who are insisting upon so-called "local" self-government remember their experience of the years 1871 to 1874, when Congress yielded to their importunities and established a territorial form of government in the District of Columbia, and for 3 years the National Capital had one of the most corrupt governments ever maintained in the United States, so venal, extravagant, and wasteful that the people of the District came to Congress and begged it to abolish the territorial government and again take over the administration of District affairs.

Mr. BLACK. That was in a Republican year.

Mr. LOZIER. And during this period of self-rule, one Sheppard was the political boss of the District. His statue stands in front of the District Building. During this orgy of self-government he ruled the District and managed its affairs with unprecedented prodigality. Taxes were high, and the District became hopelessly insolvent.

Mr. BLANTON. And Congress came along and paid off all their debts and has been paying their debts ever since.

May I tell you how good newspapers misrepresent? The Washington Star is one of the most reliable newspapers in the United States, except when it gets into a discussion of District matters and the Federal contribution. It is a little bit biased and prejudiced then. The other day I called attention to the fact that the Government had spent lots of money on various things here. For instance, I stated that our Government had spent lots of money on this million-dollar bridge on Connecticut Avenue, and on the $2,000,000 Key Bridge. I did not say the Government paid all of it. Then I referred to this new Memorial Bridge that goes over to Arlington, and said the Government spent $14,000,000 on that bridge and I said that it all came out of the Treasury, and it did.

The Star had a long statement in yesterday's paper to the effect that I had said the Government spent all of the money on all of these bridges. I did not say that. I referred to the Memorial Bridge. The Government did spend a great big sum on the million-dollar bridge on Connecticut Avenue, and on the $2,000,000 Key Bridge, and on the bridge down next to the Southern Railroad, and they spent a large sum on every other bridge which has been built in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I was interested in the gentleman's statement that the appropriation for the District of Columbia as fixed last year by the Congress was six and a half million dollars and that the Civil Works Administration and the Public Works Administrator came along and gave them more.

Mr. BLANTON. The P.W.A. and the C.W.A. have given the District $9,000,000 this year.

Mr. MAY. Allotments have been made to a lot of these projects without Congress knowing anything about the matter and projects, too, are being withdrawn. I am wondering if they would not have the power to bring it back in here and give it to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. They may. You have to watch them. They are fixing to bring up a $20,000,000 bill now. Secretary Ickes and these Commissioners had their pictures taken the other day, and they have arranged with the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] to bring in a bill to permit the District of Columbia to borrow $20,000,000 from the Public Works Administration. Are you going to vote for that bill? I am not. I do not propose to permit them to do that when this District is now out of debt, when the tax rate was reduced to $1.50 per $100 last year, and the taxable values were reduced $80,000,000, with a rate of $1.50 to cover all taxes. They have a $5,000,000 surplus in their treasury this year. I do not intend to vote to permit the District to borrow a cent to be wasted down here in the Municipal Building. I know too much about this Municipal Building. I have been checking up on it for nearly 20 years, and I am not going to give them any leeway by my vote. I want you to help us kill this $20,000,000 bill that they are fixing to bring in here.

Mr. BLACK. I wonder if the gentleman will say a few words about this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the gentleman does not like for me to tell you his plans; but we have to anticipate. The gentleman is a member of two of the worst committees that I ever saw—the Committee on Claims and the Committee on the District of Columbia—but he is a good fellow after all. Whenever we get tied up here and feel like the world is going backward and we want to relax, the only thing is to get him up on the floor for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is quite a help himself.

Mr. BLANTON. May I say that this bill pays $35 a month to every man and every wife over 65 years of age. You notice that it does not just pay this sum to a family. It provides for $35 for the wife and $35 for the husband. Most people who are 65 years old are married yet. Most of the spouses are about the same age. There is $70 a month to be paid one family; $14 is paid in New Jersey and $24 is the highest average for the States, yet in the District of Columbia they are going to pay $35 to each person, man and wife, totaling $70 a month to the two of them. They are going to let them own a $3,000 piece of property for a residence and also nearly $1,000 of personal property.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Under sections 2 and 3 the two spouses might have $930 of property and still get $70?

Mr. BLANTON. And they may also have a $3,000 home and still get $70 a month.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman understands that under the present poorhouse system they would get $76 a month?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; not in any State. May I say that a committee, when they bring in a bill like this, ought to be able to tell us all about it. I was surprised at this committee. Question after question was asked to obtain some definite information and they could not tell you a thing except that this bill carries $35 for each individual per month. They ought to know something about it. They ought to know all about this subject of old-age pensions in the various States.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have just asked for a copy of the hearings and I find there are no printed hearings on this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That was called to the attention of the committee a few moments ago by our friend from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. RUFFIN and Mr. LEE of Missouri rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield first to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUFFIN. Would the gentleman mind referring to section 19 and telling me, if he can, the source from which the funds that are going to make up this relief fund will come?

Mr. BLANTON. All the tax money that comes from taxation on District property here goes into the Treasury to the credit of the District. Then it has a water fund which goes to its credit although the Government spent millions of dollars on that water system and the Government today owns the old, original water conduit itself, and paid for it, and yet the District gets the water. It has been getting so much from its water fund, that has gone into its general treasury this year, that the water rate has been cut another 25 percent so that now the ordinary family will only pay about $6 a year per family for the finest water in the world. We do not get that back home for $6 a year per family.

Then there is the gasoline tax. Tennessee has a 7-cent gasoline tax, while the District has only 2 cents; but that is another source of revenue that goes into the General Treasury to the credit of the District.

Then the Government came along last year and gave them $6,500,000 cash in a lump sum, which went to their credit. Then the P.W.A. and the C.W.A., which is nothing in the world but the money of the taxpayers—your constituents and mine—they like to call it "P.W.A. money", but it is nothing in the world but Government money out of your Treasury—they gave them $9,000,000, and it went into the Treasury to their credit. All this is to their credit in the Treasury, and they pay their obligations from it, but that does not keep your people back home from realizing that they will be paying part of this pension to the colored population of 150,000 that has drifted in here from every part of the globe.

Mr. RUFFIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. RUFFIN. Is the gentleman in position to answer the question of whether any part of this fund I have asked about will come from the citizens of the District directly?

Mr. BLANTON. It will be such part as comes out of that general fund in the Treasury, which comes from the sources I have mentioned, coupled with the $6,500,000 we gave them and the $9,000,000 the P.W.A. gave them. They have this money to draw on, and they will draw on it. That is the way the money comes.

Mr. RUFFIN. In other words, am I to understand that all of it will come from the Federal Government, directly or indirectly? Is that a fair inference to draw?

Mr. BLANTON. No; it is not. I tried to explain that their taxes on real and personal property is used also.

Mr. RUFFIN. I wish the gentleman would cover that, because that is something I have been trying to get information on.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill provides these pensions shall come out of District funds. They will take this out of the actual taxes here in the District, but then they will use the Government fund of $6,500,000 which we gave them for something else. This is the way they will get around it. They will just beat the devil around the stump and shift it about. If you will get the hearings on the District appropriation bill, you will find where Chairman CANNON and myself made one department admit they had been taking money appropriated for maintenance and raising salaries during the past year.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. The gentleman from New York, who is a member of the committee, stated that this bill would mean a saving in that it costs more to feed them at the poor farm than the pensions would amount to. If it is true that this would cost over $31 a month, then that is a dirty graft, because in my county we feed them for $10 a month better than you can feed them in this town.

Mr. KELLER. What do you feed them?

Mr. LEE of Missouri. We fed them everything that is right, and we do not ask the Congress to pay for them, either. We pay them ourselves in our State.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to one of the champions of the bill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I do not know about that. I want the District to pay for this, but I want to ask the gentleman a question. If I remember correctly, the gentleman advocated a reduction of the tax rate from $1.50 to $1.20. If we had left it at $1.50, we could have had the local people paying more taxes. I want to raise their tax rate and employ it for such purposes and take it off of the country as a whole and let the District support itself.

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer that statement. I have found out that money is wasted down here in this Municipal Building. If they have a surplus of money they waste it extravagantly, and when I found out that if you kept the tax rate at $1.50 they were going to have a surplus of about $6,500,000 to draw on, whenever they wanted it, for this or that, I decided it was best to earmark it and give the people of the District the benefit in a reduction of taxes. That is the reason we tried to provide for that rate, and I may tell you this. It is the most remarkable phenomenon in the world that you find the District papers here fighting a reduction of taxes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Of course, that covers a lot of territory.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe that the people I know here and the people that my friend from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] knows in Washington, the real taxpayers, 99 percent of them, were in favor of this reduction in the tax rate and a saving of their money, but the newspapers caused this 30-cent tax raise to be put on the people here. The newspapers did this, coupled with the help of the Commissioners.

If you will get the hearings, you will find that the first question I asked was if they were going to oppose a reduction of taxes. I said, "Mr. Commissioner, are the papers correct yesterday and today in saying that you are not going to stand for reduction of taxes? How about that?" I asked the auditor if he had given out any such statement. They reluctantly denied it, but you could see that they were against reducing taxes, and they came in here and caused it to be stricken out.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield? They cannot operate the city in a proper way—the schools are among the worst that I ever saw.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for that.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I know more about this than the gentleman. The fact is you have the finest school system here in the whole world.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not talking to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not have to talk to the bill. This is general debate. I can discuss any question from Maryland to Mesopotamia. [Laughter.]

Now, I am going to tell you about the schools. They have the finest school system in Washington there is in the world. They pay the highest salaries of any school system in the United States. They have the finest buildings; they have the finest playgrounds; they have the finest equipment. They teach the boys every kind of industrial work so that they can do something when they get out in the world. They have the finest cooking schools for girls, and they teach them sewing; they give them every kind of industrial instruction, and there has not been a single day in Washington during the depression that any teacher has had to wait 5 minutes for their money. They have it paid to them on time. When in Chicago their teachers have not been paid for 3 solid years, the teachers of Washington got it right on time.

Another thing—they have free schoolbooks here; some schools furnish lunches to them. I want to say that all this poppycock you hear about the schools not being good is pure rot, pure and simple rot.

They have the best teachers in the world, and one of the finest superintendents in the United States, Dr. Ballou, who gives the schools everything on God's earth that they can think of, and yet they are always complaining and coming to some Congressman, dissatisfied about something and making complaints, and having the Congressman get up and say that the school system is not what it ought to be.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not true that under the bill a husband and wife can get $840 annually and in addition burial expenses and doctor's bills?

Mr. BLANTON. And can be the owner of a $3,000 home and drawing $70 a month between them.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry; I cannot yield. I am for old-age pensions. I should like to see the people of my State some of these days, when other States and the Government can do it, be provided for in their old age. But I do not want them taxed to help put $5,700,000 in the Treasury in a lump sum and then have the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. put $9,000,000 more into the Treasury to pay old-age pensions in Washington while my State is without it. Whenever you get to voting the Federal Government into an old-age pension law, let it be a general law; a law that applies to all of the 48 States in the Union; and then you will find me supporting and fighting for it on this floor.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to yield to my delightful colleague from Pennsylvania, who is one of the great proponents of this bill.

Mr. DUNN. I thank the gentleman. Can the gentleman tell me of any more economical way to provide relief than by the old-age pension system?

Mr. BLANTON. This District has taken care of its indigent people for many years, and there are fewer indigent people in Washington than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. BLACK. Then how is the bill going to be so expensive?

Mr. BLANTON. But because there are a few shacks in some alleys here—and have you not got them in all of your cities and towns—a great hullabaloo is raised. Have you not got them down on the Mississippi Delta, shacks that people live in? Oh, these Washington papers do not want any shacks in Washington at all. They want every colored sniper that slips in here from some farm to get an easy living, to live in a three-story house with basement, and they want to have the living provided for him, with two or three servants and a cook and washerwoman also.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, who has had many years of experience along these lines.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Does the gentleman not know that there will soon be before the House a national old-age pension bill?

Mr. BLANTON. We have a committee studying that subject now.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry that I cannot.

Mrs. NORTON. Will not the gentleman please yield for a question? I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, if you put it that way.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman believe in State rights?

Mr. BLANTON. I used to, but I have been voting for so many things in this Congress that I have been taught against ever since my childhood that I have gotten all mixed up.

Mrs. NORTON. If the gentleman believes in State rights, there is nothing in the world to prevent his going back to Texas and seeing to it that his State passes a law taking care of the poor people there. I shall be glad to aid him in doing so.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that when normalcy gets back, and when this depression is over, you will find the gentleman from Texas on this floor fighting against every kind of measure he thinks is unsound.

Mrs. NORTON. That is not answering my question.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry. I want to use the remainder of my time. The gentleman can get his own time.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. I do not know whether the gentleman understood my question; but if he did, I did not hear his answer.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought I had answered the question, but I shall answer it now. I know what the question is.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman know of any more economical way to provide relief for the aged than through an old-age pension system?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. If you will inquire up in New Jersey, you will find out that the pensioners there under the old-age pension law are three times in number what they thought they would be when they passed the law. If you will check it up in California, you will find that they are paying three times as many as they expected to when they passed the law; and if you check it up in every other State, you will find the same thing. When you once pass a law that gives people easy money, you will find a lot of them coming in that ought not to come in. You will find a lot of them who are willing to live on the State and the Government and get something for nothing.

Mr. DUNN. Does not the gentleman believe it will cost a great deal more to construct and maintain poorhouses than to come to an old-age pension law?

Mr. BLANTON. We have been carrying on poorhouses for a long time, and I think we will do it much more easily in the future. But of course, we do not want to force indigent people to go to the poorhouse if we can help it. I am in favor of the principle. If the President right now would say to us that his financial policy would permit it, if he would say that it would not disrupt his policy, I would vote right now for a national old-age pension law that would take care of every person 70 years old in the United States, but the age ought to be 70 years.

Oh, they talk about 60 and 65. Why, most of the most valuable men and women in the Nation are 65 years old.

Mr. MEAD. Sam Insull is about 75, is he not?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; Insull has stolen more money from the American people than any other grafter, and he is 75 right now, and we are having a terrible time catching him and bringing him back here. We have citizens over all the United States 75 and 85 years of age, men who are doing service to their country and to their State. We have them in this House. I saw Uncle Joe Cannon when he was 85 years old do some of the best service ever performed on the floor of the House.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Then we have that Turk, who is 116 years old, still doing good service.

Mr. BLANTON. And we have a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk out here, Mr. Andy Smith, who has been holding that job down with this Government for 55 years, and there is not a more capable man in the Capitol.

I hope that he will be here for 20 more years. Why, take Tyler Page, one of the leading men of this country, the author of the American's Creed, one of the brightest men in the Nation, has served this Government here for 50 years; and I will guarantee he will be with you Republicans for many more years [laughter]; and if you ever should get back into power about the only thing that will recompense us Democrats is that we will have him again for Clerk of the House.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman has cited the cases of Capitol employees, but under existing law it is the policy of the Civil Service Commission to retire people from service after they have given a lifetime in the service. The Civil Service Commission demands that at a certain age they retire. We have those people to deal with and to provide for.

Mr. BLANTON. I am one of those who believe that if Congressmen were allowed to make a few selections of the employees in their districts [laughter and applause] they would pick lots better ones because they would know them and would be responsible for them.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman has made the statement that he favors a national policy of old-age pensions rather than the policy of local administration?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I do; I will vote for a national policy.

Mr. MEAD. I should like to have the gentleman develop this thought: The gentleman also brought out the fact that under local administration there are conflicting delegations of power and authority, and there are many rates in conflict one with the other; the rates are high in some places and low in others; is it the thought of the gentleman from Texas that a centralized administration of a national law would be so far removed from local politics that it would be better administered and more uniform in its application throughout the country?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly. It would cost the taxpayers of the Nation much less money; and my friend knows that it could be regulated better as a national law and there would be more justice in its administration than if it were left to the States, because there are 48 Governors and 48 State administrations to administer local laws, and they would not be administered in the same way. We should have one system centralized in Washington. When our committee gets through with its study and investigation of the national old-age pension system you will find me on this floor fighting for such a law.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. ELTSE of California. To come back to the bill, may I ask this question: Under section 6 (a) and (b) will not shiftlessness increase? I should like to have the gentleman's reaction to that.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is self-evident. If the gentleman will check up on the relief that has been going on in the District and check up the opportunities that recipients of the relief have had for getting work, of which they have not taken advantage, he will see there is lots of shiftlessness.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will there not also be a tendency for them to skin out their property under this law?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; and we will see property values go down. A house that has been worth $6,000 or $7,000 will be reduced overnight to $3,000.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Just this one question and I shall be through. With regard to national rather than local administration, does not the gentleman believe it would be helpful for the country if we made of this bill a model for the District of Columbia that would be copied by the States and would eventually become the national law?

Mr. BLANTON. I may say to the gentleman from New York that there is not a single paragraph in this bill that is a model, with all due respect and regard to the committee. It has been drawn for them by somebody else; I am not reflecting upon them. I do not believe it is a model. To pass this bill would be to pass the wrong kind of bill for the States to adopt. It is my belief that the committee now studying the question from the national viewpoint will bring in a much better bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. I understood the gentleman to say that he preferred a national law to a State law?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a booklet that we ought to pay more attention to on this side of the aisle—the Democratic platform of 1932.

It says:

We advocate unemployment and old-age pension under State laws.

That is what we are doing right now in working out a bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The gentleman knows that I favor a national old-age pension law, and that I am the author of a resolution under which a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor is investigating this subject.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: He got his idea from foreign countries?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman brought that over here from a foreign country?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I may say to the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman bring that over from a foreign country?

Mr. FLLENBOGEN. No. I will answer the gentleman's question if he will give me an opportunity. I believe that the number of old people in the country is increasing. According to the figures available, and they are available to everyone, not only the total number of old people is increasing in the United States but also the proportion of older people to the rest of the population. I am in accord with the gentleman, and I believe in the end it will be too expensive for the old-age pensions to be paid out of the Public Treasury; therefore, I believe in a contributory system on a national basis, and I believe the gentleman has a somewhat similar idea, but in the meantime we should pass this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. I think the gentleman from Texas is sincerely in favor of a national old-age pension law when it can be applied universally and there is a means to finance the proposition. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Treasury cannot stand it, and I am not for the contributory system. I say it should come from the wealthy of the country and from the public utilities.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, while there was not much logic and there was not much social philosophy indulged in this afternoon, there were plenty of errors made as to what this bill is really intended to do. A great many medieval social suggestions have been made on the floor. The bill itself is to take care of the aged in the homes, if possible, instead of sending them to a poorhouse, the poorhouse system being more expensive to the taxpayers than the other and more modern system. That is all there is to this proposition.

It is true, probably, that the national old-age pension bill should have come before this one as far as some Members are concerned, but it is no fault of the aged of the District and it is no fault of the taxpayers of the District that they have to get their legislation from the Congress and that Congressmen come from States which have no old-age pension systems. However, the fact that Texas does not have an old-age-pension system should not keep the Congress, because it has Congressmen from the State of Texas, from legislating along advanced sociological lines for the good of the District of Columbia. The people of the District of Columbia have by force of law to depend on Congress. They would probably rather not do this, but that is the situation they find themselves in at this time. It is to be regretted that all the States of the Union have not an old-age-pension system, but 22 out of the 48 States have this modern method of taking care of their aged.

I was astonished to hear one gentleman here in an offhanded way—and I am sure if his remarks were carried back to his district, he would be defeated—state, "Oh, we feed them for $10." Imagine that statement on the floor of this Congress in this day and generation. As a matter of fact, it is costing the District of Columbia and the Federal Government as their contribution toward the District finances $38 a month for each inmate in the poorhouse. This system will cost about $20 a month, and instead of ultimately being a great charge on the taxpayers of the country and the taxpayers of the District there will be a saving by this bill.

There is another situation in connection with this bill, and that is that an old, indigent couple in the District under the system now prevailing cannot live out their old age together. They must be separated and put into separate institutions. Under this bill, if indigent, they will be allowed to live together during their declining years.

Of course you can use your imagination about any piece of legislation. You can see ghosts in any bill. You can say that any bill will be crookedly worked, and that any bill will not properly work; but this bill, with proper and decent administration, will work out the way it is intended to work out. We have no right to assume that a piece of legislation passed by the Congress will be improperly administered. The proper assumption to make is that any bill passed by the Congress will be prudently and efficiently taken care of in its administration.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLACK. Surely.

Mr. SNELL. I am not opposed to the system of old-age pensions; but as I look through the bill, it is much more generous than the one we have in our State, and it seems to me it would be pretty expensive to start it at 60 years of age. Does not the gentleman think that is rather young?

Mr. BLACK. No; and I will tell the gentleman why I do not think so. Insurance companies have reported, after a conference, that 84 percent of people over 60 years of age are in need of support by somebody other than themselves.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] mentioned 60 years of age.

Mr. BLACK. My bill was 60, but the committee amended it to start at 65 years of age. There are other things to be taken into consideration, such as the conditions surrounding them and the ability of their relatives to support them, and all these things will be investigated. Everybody over 65 is not going to get $35 a month under this bill. This is not the thought of anybody. It is highly unfair to take what might be possible under the most extravagant and imprudent system of administration and charge that up to a bill.

Mr. Chairman, there is a filibuster going on——

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

Mr. BLACK. Surely; I am always pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Under the provisions of the law in our State, if a person applies for such a pension and has any property, he must turn it over to the county.

Mr. BLACK. There is a provision in this bill that such property ultimately will be turned over to District aid.

Mr. SNELL. That is after they die.

Mr. BLACK. After they die, but the fact they hold property is taken into consideration in the administration of the act.

Mr. SNELL. The experience has been in our State that there are a great many people who apply for an old-age pension and when they find they must give up their own property they are not willing to do this but go on and support themselves and I think this is a pretty good provision.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I did not care to take the floor at this time, but in view of the fact that the gentleman from Texas, the watchdog of the Treasury, has constantly refused to yield to me, I thought it would be more appropriate that I should at least take 5 minutes.

The excuse of the gentleman from Texas for not yielding to any Member of the House at the beginning was his suggestion that every member of the committee may have an hour to discuss this bill. This means 435 hours to kill time, as he stated, at the expense of the people of the country. This would mean a whole session. We have not an hour each allotted to us during the entire session of the Congress, and why the gentleman from Texas, with the experience he has had as watchdog of the Treasury should suggest a ridiculous proposition of this kind I cannot understand.

Furthermore, if there is objection to this bill, if there is a clause or paragraph in the bill that is not right, the bill has been before the House for some time, and the gentleman from Texas or any other Member of the House has the right to prepare such an amendment; but let us get down to the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule. If he wants to strike anything out entirely or to correct any matter in the bill, that is another matter.

Oh, the gentleman says that the Federal Government is going to pay for this. I agree with the gentleman in that I do not want the Federal Government to pay a cent toward this pension, and I say that on the same principle the Government has no right to be matching its funds for State functions. I say let us go right down to the root of the whole matter and cut out all Government allotments, and let us tax the people solely for Government functions and not for State propositions, and this would include State roads, schools, and everything else.

The gentleman referred to the fact they are going to strike out the enacting clause. Of course, they are going to move to strike out the enacting clause, if the gentleman has his way, and this means that the gentleman is against old-age pensions, because if he were not against old-age pensions, notwithstanding what he may say about being in favor of them in some form or other, striking out the enacting clause would demonstrate to the Members of this House that he is utterly opposed to them.

So far as I am concerned, I was opposed to this bill originally, not because I did not believe in the principle of the bill, but because I did not want anyone from the Virginia line or the Maryland line to come here and make the people of the District pay them a pension. I want the District people to take care of their own people instead of putting them in the poorhouse.

Now, with all due respect to the Members here, anyone who would suggest that every Member of this House should take an hour and kill time, if you please, at the expense of the Government——

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think that somebody on the committee ought to take the floor and explain what this bill does before the House is asked to consider it? No such explanation has been made.

Mr. PALMISANO. We were trying to explain the bill, but the gentleman from New York, as well as the gentleman from Texas, has taken the position that he is going to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. TABER. I have not taken any such position, and I refuse to permit the gentleman to say that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition against the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill for old-age pensions in the District of Columbia, because I think it is a just bill. I am especially for it because Congress has the entire right to legislate on this matter in this District. I am for it because if it is passed, an old-age pension law in the District of Columbia will be a guide to us when we come to pass a Nation-wide old-age pension law, which we are certainly going to do. It is for these reasons that I am for the bill. Whether minor changes should be made in it is another matter.

I want to call your attention to these simple facts: Every poorhouse in the United States is a disgrace to our intelligence, to our courage, and to our national spirit. We ought to wipe it out, and we ought to wipe it out by providing something better than it is.

The United States is the only civilized country in the world that has not already recognized nationally the duty of providing old-age pensions. Every other civilized country in the world has done it, and why should we stand here quibbling over whether it should be $35, $32, or some other amount per month? We ought to open our eyes to these facts.

The time was when our fathers and mothers could save something and provide something for old age, but conditions were not what they are now. Those conditions have changed beyond the possibility of solution so far as individuals are concerned. Time was when if a man, or a woman, lost his job he could go West, take up land, and grow up with the country. It was an easy matter to take up land back in those days.

There is no land now in the West to take up. Today when a man loses his job he is out. He cannot go anywhere else and take up land, or get another job if he is past 40.

It is true here in the District now. Here is where we ought to provide the first pension law, because it will give us something of an experience in our National Government that will be a guide to us hereafter when legislation is undertaken to give Nation-wide old-age pensions.

Industry is no longer confined to localities, States, or regions. It is purely and simply national in its scope; and if we would get the proper vision, we must recognize it nationally.

Granting old-age pension is not charity—it is a just reward to the man or the woman who has served in industry up to the time he can no longer serve because of age. The mother who has struggled out on the farm or in the home of the factory town, in the great cities, or the villages until she is 65 ought to have a pension if she needs it, because every day of her life she served her country as much as any man or woman can serve it anywhere in any way. The men who have produced the wealth of the country by their labor, whether in field or factory, in mines, or over the whirring wheels of transport, wherever you go, in whatever industry, have earned enough more than they have received to assure them a pension as a reward for their service, if they need it. There are about 500,000 men and women over 65 who would be eligible for old-age pensions under the average conditions recognized by the State laws already granting old-age pensions. If we grant old-age pensions, it would cost about $172,000,000 a year, which would save a tremendous amount of money over the poorhouses and other systems of caring for our old people at present in use, quite outside of the rights of humanity.

Mr. Chairman, the property taxes in our States cannot stand the necessary burden to carry old-age pensions. Let us not deceive ourselves by thinking that they can. I was brought up as a strict State rights man, but I have sense enough to know that even the great State of Illinois cannot carry its part of the burden as it should be done. This burden of old-age persions does not belong to the States. It belongs to industry as a whole, and ought not to be placed anywhere else. Industry, properly carried on, is abundantly able to carry old-age pensions, as it does in every other civilized country. We ought not to deceive ourselves; we ought to open our eyes to the plain facts in the case and see that it is good economy as well as good humanity. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not a fact that every old person who has been a good citizen of this country, whether or not he has accumulated enough for himself in his old age, has all during his life contributed to the economic welfare of this country?

Mr. KELLER. I answer, "Yes, certainly", to that splendid question. I am glad the gentleman asked it. I endorse every word it implies.

Having been granted the right to revise and extend my remarks, I embrace the opportunity to quote the statements made in justification of my own national old-age pension bill introduced in the Seventy-second Congress and reintroduced in the Seventy-third Congress as H.R. 1623, and which is under consideration by a special subcommittee of the Committee on Labor. These statements are a part of the bill itself:

Modern industrial conditions have made old age a definite economic hazard. Specialized and standardized production has eliminated most of the need for skill and experience. The swifter pace required in modern industry produces greater nervous strain and tends to wear out workmen more rapidly than ever before. Many employers of labor, not being legally bound for the protection of their workers, feel no obligation for their support in old age.

American industry and commerce today are no longer confined to one locality, one State, or one region. Mergers and trusts have extended our major industries all over the Nation. Workers also move freely from one State to another and from one occupation to another. The problems which arise out of our industrial development are, therefore, no longer local or State-wide but National in scope. The questions of wages, hours of labor, employment and unemployment are questions for the Nation as a whole to solve rather than for each community or State. No one State can advance to a solution of these problems alone for fear of competition from neighboring States without such protection for their workers. This is best illustrated by the plethora of legislation now pending in Congress on these various subjects.

Old-age dependency is obviously a national problem, to be solved only by national or congressional action. State solutions of this problem, as of any other industrial problem, only aggravate the conditions in each particular State and leave a great portion of the problem unsolved.

The national character of old-age dependency has now been recognized by all industrial countries of the world except the United States. Everywhere else it is acknowledged that the honest and industrious workman or farmer who by industry and labor has added to the wealth of the Nation is entitled to humane consideration when, through no fault of his own, he is deprived of his earning power. He must not be made an object of charity, which serves only to embitter his declining years when his only crime is age and poverty. Industry has failed to deal with the question successfully. It is too directly interested in profits to consider men as they should be considered. Only the Nation acting as a whole can do this.

The maintenance of old men and women in their own homes on the basis of a self-respecting reward for their services has everywhere been found to be not only humane and honorable but also more economical than any other method of providing for them. This has been the case abroad and is also the experience of the 17 States which have already placed old-age security laws on their statute books. The average cost of a pension in California is $23.10 per month as against a cost of $44.74 in an almshouse. In New York the average pension amounts to only $26.30 per month as against $39.61 for almshouse maintenance.

It is estimated that within the United States there are about 500,000 men and women 65 years of age and over who are entitled to old-age relief as provided under the existing State laws. Less than one fifth that number, however, are now in receipt of this security. Many of our States are unable to raise their taxes and therefore cannot follow the lead of the 17 States now having more or less limited old-age pension laws. It is indeed a question whether even these wealthier States can continue these pensions, because the real-estate taxes are consuming the property. But if this burden were distributed equally over all industry it would relieve this menace to property and be easily borne by industry.

Since the problem of old-age dependency is essentially a national problem, it is obviously the duty of Congress to make such humane provisions for the aged citizens of America as they are justly entitled to.

It is in view of our national obligation to the aged who are least able to help themselves in these hard times that the following bill is presented.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, as my colleague from Texas, [Mr. BLANTON] is diligent in obstructing matters that he thinks bad, and in pushing matters that he thinks will do good, I want to inform him that there is another petition on the Speaker's desk to bring out the McLeod bill from the Committee on Rules and I want to put that in the RECORD here so that everybody is charged with that knowledge. All we want is a vote on that bill. If you vote it down, we shall be satisfied, but we want a day in court on this bill just like any other bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman from Michigan think that the Rules Committee, both the majority and the minority members, were entitled at least to have a request made by those in favor of the McLeod bill for a hearing on that rule before the motion was filed to discharge?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Normally, yes; except that at 4 minutes after 12 today a report was filed by the Banking and Currency Committee on this bill. If they wanted a vote on the McLeod bill, as amended, all the gentlemen needed have done who supported it was not to have filed a report, and we would have had the bill up today. We do not care whether it is the McLeod bill that passes or a good Democratic bill. All we want is the principle of this legislation voted on, and inasmuch as we are in parliamentary procedure, and as my friend from Texas says, it is just give and take, I want to say that I respect the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and think he is the greatest leader on this side of the House. I have gone with him many times, and I shall go with him again, but on this matter I just cannot follow him, and in the future, on other issues, we are going to be fighting side by side.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want to get into any controversy with the gentleman, but in all candor it does seem to me that where a committee is charged with the responsibility of acting on matters of this sort, in good courtesy to that committee and to the precedents, it was at least entitled to have an opportunity to hear the resolution presented before you filed a motion to discharge.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Normally I would agree with that, but these are days of emergency, just as when my good friend from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] filed the bonus petition, and in these emergency matters we have to be diligent. To be of any value to the country this bill must be passed at this session.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I think no one in this House has greater respect than I for the Chairman of the Committee on Rules, but I think the gentleman from Michigan takes the same position that I do, namely, that when 145 Members walk up to the desk and sign a petition to discharge a committee from further consideration of a bill, they are entitled to a prompt vote on that measure, just as we secured a prompt vote on the Patman bonus bill, and that we should vote it up or down.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I agree with the gentleman, and I refuse to yield further. In other words, 145 Members of this House want to do just what 1 Senator can do on the other side of the Capitol, and that must be music to the ears of my friend from Texas. We fought side by side in favor of another bill, and he said at that time that all we wanted was to give 145 Members of this House the same right that 1 Member of the other body had.

Mr. BLANTON. I think our good friend from Michigan is one of the most promising Members of the House. I admire all his splendid work he has done here, and I am his good friend, even when he is against me, and I think he is doing good work now, for he is doing his very best. But he did not answer the question my friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], Chairman of the Committee on Rules asked him. That was a proper question, and that committee is a responsible committee of the House, and should have been shown some consideration.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I agree with the gentleman. I came just about as close to answering it as my good friend from Texas did to answering the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] as to how you are going to improve on the old-age pension proposition, so that we are about even there.

Now I want to divert and talk about the school system in the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said that he has watched these schools for 20 years, and they are among the best in the country. The gentleman's line of travel must have been over one line, Abilene to Washington and back again. I would like to have my friend go to the city of Detroit and see what a real clean school is and what a real playground is. The trouble is that he has seen that same school in the District for 20 years, and if he had traveled the route for 30 years he would still see the same school, because in 1908 a commission was appointed by this House and condemned many buildings still in use. One school which they had been using for 50 years in this District was condemned in 1908, but it is still being used.

We must help the schools. The Jefferson School in southwest Washington is only 50 feet from a railroad where trains are switched day in and day out, hour in and hour out; and the children cannot study on account of the noise. If you go up into the auditorium on the third floor of that school building, every time you take a step the floor bends under your weight.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan to resume our colloquy. He is under the impression I have never been to Detroit, when as a matter of fact I have visited there several times.

In 1907, in company with 168 Texans, I spent quite a nice sojourn in Detroit. Our party was royally entertained by the Detroiters, and we were shown everything you had, from your fine aquarium to your schools; and we were carried up to Marblehead on a fine boat, with an orchestra and dancing; and, oh, we were most royally entertained.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman did not sample all the wines they had at Marblehead, I hope.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we had a good time, and picnicked all day at Marblehead. And I still think that our Washington schools, as a whole, are the finest in the United States.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. To complete my time, I am intensely interested in the schools in the District. I am not finding fault with the teachers; they are fine teachers and are doing the best they can. I do not find fault with the administration—and I have no patronage in the District; there is not a thing they can take away from me and there is not a thing they can give to me. I am fighting for the interest of the children. I want to see clean rooms for the little children to go to, and clean playgrounds for them to get their recreation in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATMAN. Is that motion in order unless the gentleman withholds his point of order that there is not a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to rise is a preferential motion and is always in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4548) to provide old-age securities for persons over 60 years of age residing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES OF FRAUD AGAINST WAGE EARNERS EMPLOYED OF FEDERAL BUILDING PROJECTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I offered a resolution calling for an investigation into charges of fraud against wage earners employed on Federal building projects in the District of Columbia.

Since publication in the Washington Herald of the first charges of improper handling of pay rolls, I have been visited by many workers and have received letters from others, all indicating a sickening condition of coercion and extortion among the building-trades craftsmen employed on Government work. While my first information concerned only conditions in the District of Columbia, evidence brought to me since Friday indicates that these abuses are national in scope.

In appropriating the vast sums now being expended in public-works construction it was the clearly expressed intention of the Congress and the Executive that these undertakings were primarily designed to relieve unemployment and to restore in some measure the purchasing power of American labor. I do not think that many of us were in real opposition to such a worthy objective.

In awarding contracts for the construction of those buildings it was very definitely specified by both Congress and the Executive that the prevailing rate of wages in each community should be paid on Government work. The Bacon-Davis Act, which became a law at that time, was most explicit on this point.

When contracts were awarded costs were figured on the prevailing rates of wages and the contractors handling these projects are today collecting from the Treasury the money to pay such wages—but the prevailing rate of wages is not being paid in Washington. The contractors receive the money to pay them from the Treasury, but the employees do not get that money from the contractors.

The difference, Mr. Speaker, is going into pockets where it does not legally or morally belong. To speak with reserve, Mr. Speaker, that is graft. To give it its right name, it is theft—theft from workingmen who dare not protest lest their wives and children be again forced to sit down at bare tables, shiver in cold rooms, or walk abroad in rags and broken shoes. The Government building program was and is a splendid gesture in the fight against that sudden poverty which has conquered America. It was and is an honest gesture on the part of Congress and the part of the Executive. It was no part of our plan that thieves should enter the house and steal the benefits from those for whom we intended them—but the thieves are here and we must put them out. I for one have little stomach for years of taxation to pay off the great increase of our public debt, if the money so borrowed is to be spent to fatten the strange sort of people who can steal from hungry men.

In the last few days I have seen evidence of things that I never imagined could happen. I have seen letters between contractors, speaking frankly and in detail of contributions to a slush fund raised for the purpose of squeezing Washington labor for the benefit of the contractors and their associates—not squeezing them, mind you, to reduce costs to the Government but squeezing them to increase profits for the contractors beyond the fair and legitimate profit allowed in the contracts signed by the Government.

These contracts were awarded in competitive bidding. One of the conditions of every bid was that the prevailing rate of wages should be paid. Every bid included funds to pay those wages; in awarding contracts the Government is paying for the prevailing rate of wages; but, I repeat, the employees are not getting the money that is intended for them.

Nor is this all. Not only are the prevailing rates of wages being ignored in public work here and elsewhere in the United States but employees drawing the reduced rates cannot even collect those reduced wages. Men working for subcontractors receive checks which are refused by the banks upon which they are drawn. Employees in desperate need have been prevailed upon by their employers to turn those checks back for small amounts of cash, the balance being paid in earnings certificates, which have proven to be entirely worthless. If they complain, they are discharged; not only discharged but they cannot secure similar employment on other Government projects in Washington. I know that the blacklist is illegal, but that is what is being done.

I have a verified statement from one carpenter who received alleged pay checks to the total amount of $333.42. On these checks the contractor paid him only $49.37 in cash, the balance of $284.05 being given in these fictitious earnings certificates. I have a photo of one of these earnings certificates here in my hand as I speak.

Now, this is not the charge of a disgruntled workman, nor is it an error in accounting, nor can it be questioned upon any other ground. When evidence of this transaction was presented to the Treasury of the United States, that Department forced the general contractor, under whom this subcontractor was working, to pay this man in full to the amount I have just recited. Not only was this man paid what was due him, but so were others who collectively received some $15,000 in restitution for their losses in this swindle.

Thousands of other men did not dare protest for fear that they would lose even the weekly pittance that they were receiving for their work. If they dared to object they were told, "You want your job, don't you? Then keep your damned mouth shut"!

When the Treasury forced those refunds, they convicted the contractors of guilt. When that tiny restitution was made it was evidence that far more restitution remained to be made. Mr. Speaker, that restitution still remains to be made.

I do not indict all contractors on Government work. I recite a condition which calls for a full investigation, in which the innocent can have a fair opportunity to clear themselves and in which the guilty can be convicted. I hope that most contractors are innocent. I sincerely hope that because of my own self-respect as a member of the human race. I hate to think that many creatures bearing the form of manhood can do the things that have been done in this terrible business.

I have been told of workmen being herded into a shanty in groups of a dozen or more on pay day, where a foreman dealt cards around the table and each worker laid down $15 as his stake in the supposed card game. Without even turning up the cards, the foreman would announce that the workmen had lost their money and they were hustled out to make room for another dozen victims of their employers' rapacity. In the perverted minds of these grafters, to be able to say that the men had lost their money gambling, gave some color of legality to the extortion of $15 per week from each man as the price of his job.

On one contract in Washington, I am told that bricklayers were hired by the wife of the superintendent of the job. This contract was on Army property and an Army officer was designated to inspect each pay envelop as the bearer of it left the grounds, to be sure that these envelops contained the full pay to which they were entitled. Evidently the Army had reason for suspicion. The envelops contained the proper amounts, but after they had been inspected, I am told, each workman had to meet this woman extortionist and pay her $4 out of his envelop for each day for which he had been paid. The penalty for failure to comply with this demand for $20 of graft money every week was immediate discharge and this other procedure which has seemingly succeeded the now illegal blacklist.

I could continue these stories for hours, but I have said enough to make plain the tenor of what has been told to me. This condition is a wanton insult to the President and to Congress. It is a revelation of cynical disregard for the decency which is supposed to characterize the human race. It is a cold-blooded overturning of our motives, of our efforts, and of the people's hopes for a return of reasonable prosperity. If recovery is to be bled at every step by these leeches she will never be able to complete the journey we are all hoping she will be able to make.

Men who do things like this are public enemies. We cannot deal with them, because there is no common ground upon which our minds can meet. All that we can do is to investigate them, identify them, and turn them over to the law to punish.

This is a question above partisanship. No question of politics enters into it. It is one absolutely necessary proceeding into which men of all parties can enter without jealousy or self-seeking.

Mr. Speaker, this investigation must be made. If it be thought necessary to have any number of these workmen appear before the Rules Committee, that can easily be arranged. The Rules Committee can also have such written and photographed evidence as it desires to establish the fact that these conditions do exist.

If it be desired to conduct this investigation under some other resolution than mine, I have no pride of authorship. This investigation must be made, and I urge upon you that we do not permit any unnecessary delay. This horrible state of affairs is undermining the confidence of the whole working class in the good faith of government. We owe it to ourselves as well as to the Nation to show that nothing like this will be permitted to continue after it has been brought to our attention.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, Congress should, and will eventually, enact legislation that will provide a sustenance for aged people who are without property or income sufficient to enable them to at least be provided with the bare necessities of life.

The minimum age, both in States wherein old-age pension laws have been enacted, and in the minds of legislators who have given this subject considerable thought, is 65 years. In my judgment, the limit should be reduced to 60 years. The reason for this suggested reduction is twofold. First, it gives the needy individual 5 additional years in which to enjoy, if he can, the fruits of hard toil and industry during the earlier years of his life. Hence, I choose to call all such measures as the one under discussion "old-age rewards." Second, under the system of government which has permitted ultra-rich individuals and wealthy corporations and trusts to accumulate 95 percent of the wealth of this country, under a system which has created a mortgaged and bonded indebtedness, public and private, of approximately $230,000,000,000, largely controlled by the international Wall Street bankers and their fellow pirates, the mortgage-loan companies and 36-percent loan sharks, under a system which has resulted in massed finance, massed industry, and 10,000,000,000 idle men, it is impossible for a man 60 years of age to obtain work, even though he be able-bodied and willing to work.

The average longevity of persons reaching the age of 65 is about 11 years. Eleven short years of picking what few crumbs of happiness and contentment that may be gleaned from the festal boards of the modern Dives by the modern Lazarus. Surely, every human being reaching 65 is entitled to 11 short years of relaxation and contentment before being struck down by the withering hand of death.

In Ohio we passed, by a majority of 861,000 votes, an initiated old-age pension law at the November 1932 election. The funds to finance the pensions will be derived from the general revenue fund. It is estimated that approximately 14 percent of the aged population in Ohio will secure pensions; that the normal load of pension cost will not be reached until about 1938; and that in 1938 there will be nearly half a million people in Ohio who are 65 years of age and over. If 14 percent of the 482,000 aged pensioners in Ohio in 1938 receive a pension, there will be 68,908 pensioners on the rolls. If each of these pensioners receive $25 a month, or $300 a year, the annual normal cost of pensions in Ohio will be approximately $20,000,000. This maximum pension load of nearly $20,000,000 will not be reached until a pension law has been in effect for 5 years.

Mr. Speaker, that a comparatively small class of the men are absorbing the wealth of the country as fast as it is produced, leaving to those who create it scarcely a bare subsistence, is apparent to all.

The people I plead for are the struggling masses, the farmers, the wage workers, small business men and producers, who for 45 years have toiled with hand and with brain, toiling away day by day, month by month, and year by year, creating the wealth of the country, paying the taxes of the country, to have that wealth accumulated by the favored few of special privilege and grand larceny.

During the recent winter, one of the severest in history, practically all of the opponents of old-age legislation were happy and comfortable in their own homes. They were warm. Yet thousands and tens of thousands of little children shivered because of the inability of their parents to buy coal or gas. People still are hungry in a land of plenty. People freeze in a country that abounds in coal and oil. People are homeless because there are too many homes. Ten million men are still unemployed because there are too many men who want to work.

What shall be done with these distressed people? Why, give them the reward of a fixed annuity or retirement when they become 60 years of age.

You who have a home, who sit by the warmth of your fire in winter, in the coolness of your spacious porch in the summer, who are blessed with an income, it is you who must be your brother's helper in this great crisis. It is easy to be happy and contented when you have a good job or a good income.

Someone has said:

> It is easy enough to sail with wind and tide, to float over fair seas 'mid purple isles of spice, but the captain who goes down with his ship 'mid tempest dire, 'mid wreck and wrath, may be a far better and braver sailor than the master who rides his vessel safely to port with ensigns flying and rigging all intact.
>
> 'Mid the boast of heraldy and the pomp of power
> And all that beauty, all that wealth, e'er gave.

It were easy enough to be a good citizen and a consistent patriot. But it is poverty and economic slavery, suffering and distress, sorrow and disappointment that try men's souls, that proclaim to the world the kind of stuff of which they are made.

Mr. Speaker, we seek to rescue and rehabilitate, with old-age pensions, the human derelicts beached on the sands of misery and despair by the tidal wave of legalized burglary, organized plunder, and bloody racketeering of the Morgans, the Kuhn-Loebs, the Mellons, the Wiggins, the Lamonts, and all the other high priests of the money aristocracy and scavengers of human misery.

Oh, we have clipped the claws and fangs of the Wall Street wolves. For the first time in the history of the country we have a President who has had the courage to tell Wall street to "go to hell" and stay there. Franklin D. Roosevelt is a humanitarian. He lives, thinks, and acts for all the people. His heart throbs and his humanitarian motives are synchronized with those of the people who work for a living.

He has destroyed the pagan god of gold, worshipped by the Wall Street infidels. In comparison with the god of gold, the gods of Buddhism, Brahmism, Islamism, Confucianism are good and just gods. They are immutable gods. They can harm no one by themselves. But the god of gold is mutable. In times of great economic distress his ugly head rears itself from its golden shell, and like the sword of Damocles, hovers over the heads of the poor and distressed. His viperous tongue darts out at the unemployed worker and his home is gone. His fangs sink deep into the bankrupted farmer and he loses his farm. His sibilant hiss freezes in mortal terror the small business man and producer, until finally, like the human boa constrictor that he is, he destroys all of the debtor classes for the further enrichment of the capitalistic creditor classes.

Oh, they said it could not be done. They said we could not go off the gold standard. But the man of the hour, Franklin D. Roosevelt, like the mythical Hercules when he was invited by Anteaus, mighty giant and wrestler, son of Terra, the Earth, to grapple and wrestle in mortal combat, Hercules threw Anteaus repeatedly with ease, but each time when his feet came in contact with his Mother Earth, Anteaus arose with renewed vigor and energy, until finally Hercules seized Anteaus by the throat, raised him up, and strangled him in mid-air. Thus has our modern Hercules, Franklin D. Roosevelt, strangled the Wall Street money kings, and dragged them now and forever from their golden idol and pagan god, the gold standard.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has voiced his support of old-age pensions. Mrs. Roosevelt also heartily supports old-age pensions. So let us all join hands and fight for the old-age security of millions of men and women who have given their all for the supremacy of their country.

If we were to pass the proposed bill to benefit the aged of the District of Columbia without making the same provision for 120,000,000 people who are living elsewhere in this great country of ours, we would be guilty of a gross injustice to these 120,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, moreover, without question, the residents of Washington, D.C., have suffered less during the depression than any other community in the land. With upward of 74,000 Government employees, most of them under civil-service rules and regulations, which means a life job and a life meal ticket, Washington hardly knew that a depression existed.

The Government has always been kind to the District of Columbia. The Franklin D. Roosevelt administration and the Seventy-third Congress have been exceedingly kind to the citizens of Washington; but we must all remember that those sturdy citizens on the rolling prairies of the Corn Belt, in the semiarid regions of the Northwest and Southwest, on the magnolia-bedecked plantations of the Southland, and on the rock-bound cliffs bordering the Atlantic are entitled to equal consideration, equal compensation, and equal justice.

Unfortunately this bill, if enacted, means an extension of unbearable and obnoxious bureaucracy, in that it confers unlimited power upon a commission to administer the law and the funds and to make appointments without consulting Congress or the President as to the number of such appointments to be made, the qualifications of individuals for said appointments, and the salaries to be paid those receiving appointments.

Of necessity, then, those of us who have the constituency of our districts and of our States uppermost in our consciences and our hearts must condemn the weaknesses herein mentioned.

What about the farmer who lost his farm? What about the unemployed home owner who had his home cast upon the bloody altar of the money lender? What about those of us who have a home and means of livelihood? How many of us can sleep soundly tonight, secure in the knowledge that when we reach the age of 60 we will have a roof for shelter and an income sufficient to provide food and warmth for our bodies?

What about the father who wielded the pick, the shovel, the hammer, the saw, that communities might be built? What of the humble tiller of the soil who blazed the trail and made the desert to blossom as the rose?

What of the men who have gone down into the bowels of the earth to bring forth the natural resources for the enrichment of the coal barons, the copper kings, the oil monarchs, the steel magnates, and the electric-power barons.

What of those who have gone down into the factories and shops to feed the roaring blast furnaces, to operate the turning lathe, the punch press, the trip hammer, to become mere cogs in the mechanistic equipment of the gigantic industrialists, only to be kicked out like yellow dogs when they reach middle age. Oh, the Fords, the Schwabs, and other great industrialists boast of high wages and short hours. Yet, with their mammoth conveyor systems the strain is so great, the toil so devastating, that men are worn out and crushed at 45 and 50 years of age.

What shall we do with these millions of toilers, with this so-called "surplus" of men? We cannot plow them under as Secretary Wallace is doing with the farmer's cotton. We cannot advocate birth control, as Wallace advocates for pigs. These men are here. They have been potent factors in the upbuilding of a great Nation. There is one solution, and one only. Retire them at three score with a living compensation.

What about the aged mothers who have gone into the shadows of death that the captains of industry, commerce, and finance may have an ever-increasing supply of young men and young women to feed into the insatiable maw of swollen incomes and fortunes. What about this mother, who nursed at her breast and fondled on her knee the same blue-eyed boy and the same curly haired girl, as did the mother of the multimillionaire spawn?

What about those mothers who sent their boys to defend the honor and glory of our country—those boys, who crossed the tossing, foaming billows of the Atlantic, who went down into the blood-soaked trenches, who fought arm to arm and shoulder to shoulder, who heard the roar and shriek of the bursting shells, the yells and crying of the dying and wounded, who closed their buddies' eyes in that eternal sleep that knows no awakening, 3,000 miles away from home—those mothers, who fell down on their knees when the armistice was signed, who welcomed back home with outstretched arms and streaming eyes those boys?

Today, thousands of these boys are jobless, partially or totally disabled. Their pensions have been reduced. They cannot support the mothers who gave them to their country.

Should these fathers and these mothers, now in their declining years, be consigned to the poorhouse, or left to beg, starve, or steal? Is that the reward of the richest, the greatest, the most powerful nation the sun ever shone upon?

Today these distressed people are penniless—not through any fault of their own—but through the vicious system that has permitted 4 percent of the people to amass 96 percent of the wealth. These toilers, the backbone of the Nation, in war and peace, should be rewarded with a competence sufficient to enable them to spend their declining days in contentment and happiness. This reward should be paid for by those who have profited most from their slavery and serfdom—the capitalists.

Mr. Speaker, I propose a plan that will mean a decent living for every American citizen:

A DECENT LIVING FOR ALL

First. A capital-tax levy on all fortunes of $1,000,000.

Second. Limit all incomes to $100,000 per year.

Third. Tax all inheritances of more than $1,000,000 95 percent.

Fourth. Enact the Truax moratorium bill and stop foreclosures of real estate.

Fifth. Pass the Frazier-Lemke bill to refinance farm mortgages at 3-percent interest, which includes amortization.

Sixth. Pay the soldiers' bonus with new currency, as provided for in the Patman bill recently passed by the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority. Pay off depositors in full in all closed banks, up to $2,500.

Seventh. Nationalize the currency and credit. Restore the power to issue currency to the Congress of the United States.

Eighth. Enact old-age pension laws so that every aged person shall receive a minimum of $30 per month.

Ninth. Tax wealth to the limit, to provide Federal relief funds, instead of issuing and selling tax-exempt bonds to the Wall Street bankers.

Tenth. Tax public utilities, the huge bank accounts of the millionaires, and the millions lent to farmers and wage-workers by personal-finance companies, commonely known as "36-percent loan sharks."

If we, as a nation, are to countenance and condone a system that creates classes—the strong and the weak, the educated and the illiterate, the high and the low, the rich and the poor—then the strong must lend a helping hand to the weak, the educated must inform the illiterate, the high are in duty bound to help the low, and the rich must take care of the poor.

A SUMMARY OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIAN AFFAIRS AND OTHER MATTERS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, under permission given me by unanimous consent of the House, I take this opportunity, in view of my inability to visit the various communities of my district, to bring a brief summary of Choctaw-Chickasaw affairs and other matters to the attention of my constituents. As Congress has not yet adjourned, my official duties will not permit me to leave Washington.

As ranking member (or vice chairman) of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it has been my duty and privilege to secure important data direct from the departments, and to make a close study of Indian affairs. Since the Choctaws and Chickasaws are practically all located in the third district, which I have the honor to represent, I have spent some time in gathering and compiling definite data and figures to show the exact standing of these two tribes and their connections with the Government of the United States.

PER CAPITA PAYMENTS

Following is a list of per capita payments made to the Choctaws and Chickasaws to date, and the years in which those payments were made:

Year	Chickasaw	Choctaw
1904	$40	$40
1906	35	35
1908	20	20
1911–12	50	50
1914	100	----------
1916	200	300
1917	100	100
1918	200	200
1919	200	140
1920	100	100
1921	30	50
1924	----------	25
1929	----------	10
Total per capita	1,075	1,070

Number of Chickasaws participating	6,304
Total amount received by Chickasaws	$6,776,800
Number of Choctaws participating	20,799
Total amount received by Choctaws	$22,354,930
Total cash per capita payments to Chickasaws and Choctaws	$29,031,730

The amount now on deposit with the Treasury Department to the credit of the Choctaws is $101,966. Commissioner Collier says that after the salaries and expenses of tribal officers are paid, and other necessary funds are expended, it will be an insufficient amount to warrant a per capita payment at this time. (Indian schools are no longer maintained by tribal funds.) These payments have been made principally from accumulated coal royalties, and you will note that since 1918 the payments have gradually diminished, owing to the discovery of a great wealth of oil and gas and a consequent drop in the coal business. Of course, the Choctaws and Chickasaws are not located in oil territory and have not reaped the riches from this source that the Creeks and Osages have. Therefore, anyone who tells the Choctaws and Chickasaws they have a lot of money and should have a per capita payment is either afflicted with colossal ignorance or is a demagogue of the first water, and is willfully and maliciously misrepresenting facts for political purposes. It is to be hoped that certain suits pending in the Court of Claims will be decided favorably at an early date. If so, the Choctaws and Chickasaws will get some money, but of course Congress has no part in the decisions of the Court of Claims.

INDIAN SCHOOLS REMOVED FROM TRIBAL FUNDS

When first elected to Congress, I promised to do what I could toward relieving the Choctaws and Chickasaws of the financial burden of keeping up their Indian schools. As soon as I had been in Washington long enough to have any influence, with the cooperation of Congressman HASTINGS, who is on the Appropriations Committee, we succeeded in getting Government appropriation for the maintenance and support of Jones Academy and Wheelock Academy in the Choctaw Nation, and Carter Seminary in the Chickasaw Nation, so they are no longer supported with tribal funds.

BILL TO SELL COAL LANDS

I have worked incessantly from year to year on my bill to sell the Choctaw-Chickasaw coal and asphalt deposits to the Government at the Government's appraised value, the proceeds thereof largely to be distributed in per capita payments, but the administration has always opposed it. I have secured passage of numerous bills to re-lease the coal lands, thereby replenishing the tribal treasury to some extent.

LEASED DISTRICT

In 1932 we were successful in securing passage through Congress of the Pine-Cartwright leased district bill, authorizing the Choctaws and Chickasaws to sue the Government in the Court of Claims for approximately $7,000,000 in payment for certain western Oklahoma lands taken away from them in early days. Unfortunately, the bill was vetoed by President Hoover. But a special Senate resolution placed the claim in the Court of Claims for a finding of facts, where attorneys say it will be reported on before the next session of Congress. As Vice Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I shall be able to bring prestige and strong influence to bear on the final passage of this bill through Congress if it receives a favorable report from the Court of Claims.

OTHER CASES IN COURT OF CLAIMS

Numerous other cases totaling about $32,000,000 in behalf of the Choctaws and Chickasaws are also pending in the Court of Claims. Some of these are about ready for trial and some are expected to be won. If and when they are won, the money is expected to be distributed in per capita payments. These claims, however, are out of the hands of Congress and in full charge of tribal and special attorneys.

$400,000 REIMBURSEMENTS TO OKLAHOMA

Again, in cooperation with Congressman HASTINGS, I have aided in securing $400,000 per year in reimbursements to the State of Oklahoma for nontaxable Indian lands. When I came to Congress the State was receiving only $250,000 per year for nontaxable Indian lands, and much complaint was being made from certain school districts affected.

LET INDIANS HANDLE INDIAN AFFAIRS

It has always been my belief that Indians should hold Indian jobs, and that matters pertaining to the welfare of the tribes should be decided by the Indians themselves. It is therefore my policy to act on the the Wheeler-Howard administration measure as directed by the Indians of my district. I will say that recent amendments relieving the bill of certain strict and compulsory features have made it more acceptable, but I still find much opposition to it.

REPORT OF EMERGENCY CONSERVATION AND P.W.A. FUNDS ALLOTTED INDIANS OF MY DISTRICT

Following is a summary of the emergency conservation funds, road funds (P.W.A.), and construction funds (P.W.A.) allotted to the various Indian agencies in my district within the last year:

Agency	Emergency conservation	Public Works construction	Public Works roads
Carter Seminary	$1,350
Choctaw and Chickasaw Sanitarium	30,000	$23,400	$3,000
Jones Academy	12,000	10,800
Wheelock Academy	2,000	41,100
Five Civilized Tribes	82,000	18,000	100,000

Out of the last-named item, funds are being used for such purposes as to establish subsistence homesteads for Indians, such as the project now being established at Wilburton, Okla., on 2,200 acres of tribal land, giving Indian families a chance to earn a livelihood in desirable surroundings with certain educational advantages. If these prove successful, more such projects will likely be established.

CONGRESSMEN ENTITLED TO COMMUNICATION WITH CONSTITUENTS

I have given you these facts and figures as valuable information on the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians and an outline of my endeavors to serve them as one of their representatives in Congress.

Fortunately, this United States Congress many years ago provided by law the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a bulwark for its Members against base misrepresentations made to the people back home by designing politicians, while Congressmen were busily engaged in their duties at Washington with no means of communication with their constituents except through the mails. It was found that highly respected and able Members of Congress, while hard at work in Washington, were being ruined by false charges down home, because they could not leave their posts of duty and had no means of keeping their records before the people. Therefore, they passed a law providing that any Member of Congress, by paying the full Government printing charges, could send excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the people in his district. My great trouble has been that owing to the tremendous amount of daily mail and business before the departments, my office clerks do not have time to send such material out, and in order to get it out occasionally, I must pay extra employees out of my own pocket, besides the printing charges.

MISREPRESENTATION AND ABUSE OF PUBLIC TRUST

Strange to say, such base misrepresentations and false charges often come from opponents who are holding public office, but who will neglect or desert that office and misuse their salaries, paid by the taxpayers, to travel around over the district and in public speeches lambaste and misrepresent the Congressman who is laboring 16 hours a day in Washington. This unfairness and abuse of public trust is going on in my district at the present time by opponents of mine who are holding public office, but spending their time at the expense of the taxpayers to the tune of $8 and $15 per day; proclaiming in public speeches such charges as, for instance, that I have my wife on the Government pay roll; that I voted to raise my own salary; that the Choctaws and Chickasaws have a lot of money and should be given a big per capita payment; all of which are either utterances of colossal ignorance or willful and malicious misrepresentations.

CHARGE WIFE IS ON PAY ROLL ABSURD

The charge that my wife is on the pay roll is too absurd to answer, because the records are wide open and anyone can see that she is not on the pay roll, and, although she works daily in my office, she does not draw a penny from the Government.

CHARGE VOTED TO RAISE SALARY FALSE

The statement made by Democratic Floor Leader BYRNS, found on page 6786 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, 1934, should set at rest any doubt in the minds of the people on the salary-raising charge. Mr. BYRNS said:

I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I think we all realize that if we had not overriden the President's veto there would have been a full salary restoration on the 1st of July.

In other words, we voted to reduce our salaries rather than to raise them, but folks did not understand that until they had a chance to read the bills involved.

WOULD REPLACEMENT BE WISE?

I am doing the very best I can for the people of my district, and it is that confidence and esteem they show by returning me to Congress by overwhelming majorities that remunerates me for my work. It would take any new man, no matter how able and industrious he might be, at least 7 years of hard work and study to gain the influence and knowledge I now have of Government business. In case of my defeat, the State of Oklahoma as well as the Third District would lose the chairmanship of the Roads Committee in Congress; and the Choctaws and Chickasaws, particularly, would suffer the loss of the vice chairmanship of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Owing to the scramble among new members for committee assignments, it is doubtful if a new Congressman from the Third District could even get on one of these important committees, and then if he were successful in getting on one of them, he would be placed at the foot of the committee where it would take years to work up to a position of influence.

However, should the time ever come that my constituents would feel that another would give them better service as their representative at Washington, I feel safe in saying they would never choose a man who could not stand on his own merits. I think I know the good people of the Third Congressional District well enough to predict they will never honor a man who abuses public trust and who takes advantage of my absence from the district to besmirch my good name, falsify and misrepresent me. Anyone who will misrepresent facts to obtain an office will misrepresent the people if he gets the office.

Above all, I believe in honesty and hard work. I shoot straight from the shoulder, give the plain facts, and keep my promises. I know my record will stand the test.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the old-age-pension plan, now adopted by 28 States, has been given a sufficient test to demonstrate that it is the most practical and humane method of caring for aged, dependent people.

The District of Columbia adopted this principle a few years ago when three faithful horses, long connected with the fire department, were retired with a guaranty of food, shelter, and freedom from toil for the remainder of their lives, and again when it provided for dependent children by the mothers' pension plan, thus enabling them to be cared for in their own homes rather than to be placed in institutions at greater cost.

Dependent age and dependent youth should and does make a deep appeal to all of us. Those in between these two extremes usually can and do take care of themselves, except in periods of long-continued depression.

Almshouses will always be needed for the care of certain persons unable to care for themselves, but the old-age-pension plan will enable us to avoid inflicting a punishment more dreaded than death upon worthy citizens who have spent the best part of their lives providing for others.

To imprison an intelligent, worthy citizen, simply because he is old and out of money, among the insane, the idiotic, the feeble-minded, and the incurable, in a county poorhouse should be classed among the cruel but unfortunately not unusual punishments prohibited by the Constitution.

Aside from all sentiment, however, and disregarding the established fact that the old-age-pension plan is the most humane method of providing for the aged dependents, there is a financial phase to be considered which should appeal to all of us who represent tax-paying constituents.

Aged people who are in need must and are being cared for, either through public funds or private charity. The old-age-pension plan does not put an additional burden on the taxpayer, but, as the following table indicates, where adopted it has materially lessened the cost of this phase of relief.

State	Average annual pension	Average annual cost of poorhouse care per inmate [1]	Saving to taxpayer per pensioner
California	$275.28	$484.12	$208.84
Delaware	113.91	495.62	381.71
Idaho	132.21	528.52	396.31
Kentucky	60.00	295.95	235.95
Maryland	332.38	459.79	127.41
Massachusetts	312.00	539.33	227.33
Minnesota	192.36	631.86	439.50
Montana	158.35	634.19	475.84
Nevada	300.00	949.16	649.16
New Hampshire	232.79	503.72	270.93
New Jersey	177.60	479.86	302.26
New York	302.88	405.59	102.71
Utah	116.76	512.33	395.57
Wisconsin	236.04	390.99	163.95
Wyoming	170.66	908.68	738.02

[1] The poorhouse statistics are taken from a report of the most recent poorhouse investigation by the United States Department of Labor. They include the cost of maintenance, plus the annual investment cost of the buildings and land figured at 6 percent. Depreciation has not been included.

I quote briefly the following facts cited by the Old Age Security Herald and append hereto a table showing chief provisions of the principal old-age pension laws in the United States compiled by the national old-age pension commission for the Fraternal Order of Eagles:

1. Old-age pensions have been definitely established as the cheapest form of relief.
2. Public leaders, officials, and newspapers, formerly opposing this form of relief, are now favoring it.
3. The old-age pension law is working out better than any other plan heretofore tried for rendering aid to old persons from public funds.
4. Self-reliance and greater independence, not pauperization, has resulted from the adoption of old-age pension laws.
5. The prediction that old-age pension laws would remove the terrors of the poorhouse and lead to the eventual abolishing of most of those relics of barbarism, is being borne out by pension experience.

United States citizen, 15 years (or born in United States); State, 15 years; county, 15 years.	Value of applicant's property (or combined property of husband and wife) must not exceed $3,000.	70	Annual reports to be filed with State board of control and secretary of state.	County judge under supervision of board of control.	County levy; each town to levy tax if required.	County pays two thirds; State, one third (county may cause towns to reimburse it for county's share).	$1 a day.
Wyo	1929	Mandatory	June 1, 1930.	United States citizen, 15 years; State, 15 years; county, 5 years.	Applicant's income must not exceed $360 annually.	65	State auditor to receive annual reports.	Board of county commissioners.	County levy	County paid	$30 a month.

[1] Governor required to budget annually, and legislature required to appropriate from receipts of inheritance-tax department, sufficient sum to pay State's share. After this pension appropriation is made, $12,000,000 from the inheritance receipts shall be set aside for general State purposes. All surpluses over these two amounts shall be placed in a capital fund, until such fund alone will yield interest sufficient to pay all the State's share of old-age relief. Each county board of freeholders will annually appropriate a sum sufficient to pay county's share.

SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of Subsistence Homesteads and to include therein an answer made to Dr. Wirt by the First Lady of the Land, also a telegram I sent to her and a copy of a letter she received from the Morgantown real-estate board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following newspaper article quoting Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in answer to charges of Dr. Wirt; also a telegram, and letter relative to charges of Dr. Wirt against subsistence homestead projects:

WIRT CHARGES BRING ANSWER BY FIRST LADY—DEFENDING SUBSISTENCE HOMES SHE ASKS "WHEN HAS WORK BEEN HELD COMMUNISTIC"

Shattering tradition that the First Lady should avoid controversies, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday struck back vigorously at Dr. William A. Wirt in defense of the subsistence homestead projects which he labeled "communistic."

Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"Dr. Wirt said that the Reedsville project was communistic and would take 200 families out of Morgantown who are now paying rent in Morgantown and would therefore mean that taxes would be harder to collect and would upset the general economic situation in town.

FEW RENT PAYERS

"I should like first of all to point out that not many, if any, of the people who eventually will move into the 125 houses instead of 200 have paid any rent for quite a long while. Most of them were on relief or they would not have been employed there or had an opportunity to say they would like to move out there.

"I hardly think it would be found that people on relief were paying much, if any, rent. Most of them were out of mining camps and I doubt if mining camps will feel that they are losing any rent from these people.

"I do not understand how he considers it communistic to give people a chance to earn their own living and to buy their own houses. It is a fact that the Government will provide the initial capital, but I hope that many private enterprises will do it, for the Government is simply attempting to point the way for what may be done by many industries throughout the country in the future.

DROP IN BUCKET

"Never in this country, to my knowledge, has it been considered communistic for an opportunity to be given to people to earn their own living and buy their own houses.

"What the Government is doing in this homestead project is but a drop in the bucket in a big country like this, and its value, while it may be helpful to a few people, really lies in the suggestions it is making to the industry of the country that by decentralizing and moving out of large cities, it may make it possible for great numbers of people to have more in their lives than they otherwise would have."

[Telegram]

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D.C.:

Please accept my sincere admiration and approval for the courageous answer you have made to what I believe to be unfair and faulty criticism by Dr. Wirt relative to the subsistence homestead program under way among stranded population groups in our Nation. The Roosevelt administration is actually planning in behalf of humanity. These mountaineers of West Virginia have been down for the count of 9, but through your active interest and that of the new deal leaders these discouraged folk will stand on their own feet again and not continue to be kept on an unsatisfactory dole which destroys initiative. As First Lady of the land, let me assure you that you are first in the hearts of the men and women of the West Virginia hills whom you are aiding. When you visit them on June 7 they will again express their gratitude.

JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Member of Congress.

APRIL 21, 1934.

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
White House, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MADAM: Our local real estate board has learned through newspaper reports of the testimony of Dr. Wirt before the congressional committee which is investigating his charges, that Dr. Wirt said the removal of 200 families to Arthurdale would greatly disturb the economic situation in Morgantown, especially in reference to real estate. This is somewhat amusing to us.

So far as we have been able to learn, but one family accepted for the Arthurdale project, resides in Morgantown. If every family accepted had come from Morgantown the result would be a relief in the housing situation. There is at this time a distinct shortage of small homes here which we see no way to relieve until mortgage money for construction is available.

If Dr. Wirt's accusations have generally no more basis in fact than the specific part here referred to, they do not, in our opinion, deserve serious consideration.

Very truly yours,

THE MORGANTOWN REAL ESTATE BOARD,
By R. C. SMITH, President.

ELECTION CONTEST—ELLIS v. THURSTON

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, submitted a report in the contested-election case of Lloyd Ellis v. Lloyd Thurston, from the Fifth Congressional District of Iowa (Rept. No. 1305), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

ELECTION CONTEST—LOVETTE v. REECE

Mr. HANCOCK of New York, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, submitted a report in the contested-election case of O. B. Lovette v. B. Carroll Reece, from the First Congressional District of Tennessee (Rept. No. 1306), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. SNELL. How long will this take? It seems to me this request comes rather late in the day.

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not think it will take very long.

Mr. SNELL. The committee should have risen earlier if we were to consider this conference report today.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman from New York that there are two or three matters of emergent necessity in this conference agreement that should be taken care of at once. There is no controversy to speak of with regard to the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. It is a privileged matter; but I say that as a general proposition a conference report should not be called up at this late hour. If a conference report is to be brought in, the committee should rise earlier to give proper time for consideration of the report. Why cannot this matter be put over until tomorrow noon?

Mr. LUDLOW. If the gentleman insists, it can be done.

Mr. SNELL. I cannot insist, for it is a privileged matter.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think it can be disposed of very briefly. As I say, there are some urgent matters in the bill, some appropriations, for instance, in which the State Department is greatly interested, to equalize pay of employees in the Foreign Service. This is important, and it is of emergent necessity.

Mr. SNELL. Do the minority members of the conference committee know the gentleman intends to call it up at this time? Who are they?

Mr. LUDLOW. They are the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR]. I called up their offices, but they were not there.

Mr. SNELL. As I pointed out, we are acting hurriedly in this matter. I think it ought to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. LUDLOW. There is no difference between the conferees. As far as I am aware we are unanimous.

Mr. SNELL. I think the minority members of the conference committee should at least be given the opportunity of being here.

Mr. LUDLOW. As I said, I notified their offices, but they did not happen to be in.

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to object, but I am bitterly opposed to bringing up conference reports at this late hour of the day.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. GOSS. I will withhold it for a moment; yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he contemplates maintaining his position in reference to the matter?

Mr. SNELL. I have made all the statement I care to make. It is too late in the afternoon to call up a conference report. I think the gentleman should have given notice or else have taken them up earlier in the day.

A 12-POINT PROGRAM

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by Hon. Homer Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, before the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution at Washington, D.C., on April 19, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

Madam President General, ladies, and gentlemen, permit me, at the outset, to express my deep appreciation of the honor you have done me in inviting me to address the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It is not only a delightful privilege in itself, but it affords me an opportunity to renew, in very pleasant fashion, a semiofficial tie of long standing between the Department of Justice and the D.A.R. The history of your society records that, shortly after its organization in 1890, the national board of management selected as its first legal adviser a distinguished lawyer of St. Louis, the Honorable George H. Shields, who was, at that time, an Assistant Attorney General during the administration of President Harrison.

Since its inception your society has devoted itself with enthusiasm to patriotic causes. You have, as enjoined by your constitution, truly perpetuated the memory and the spirit of the men and women who achieved American independence. You have erected monuments to commemorate those whose heroic deeds have lighted the fires of patriotism within the hearts of the American people. You have caused to be introduced into the public schools patriotic exercises to celebrate the anniversaries that are closely connected with our national history. You have sponsored the writing of essays upon historical subjects. You have carried on educational work among applicants for naturalization, to the end that they might be instructed regarding the great figures and the important events of American history. You have sponsored legislation to protect the dignity of the flag from disrespect at the hands of the thoughtless and the irreverent.

In these ways, and by many other means, you have consistently stimulated disinterested service and fostered reverence for the glorious traditions of our Nation. By so doing you have made a vital contribution to the public welfare; for, as an ancient Greek statesman once said, "Through admiration of what is heroic, men rise to higher levels."

Therefore, knowing full well your devotion to our common country and your deep concern for its welfare, I speak to you tonight of certain matters of wide and immediate importance.

The suppression of crime has become a national problem of the first magnitude. Hundreds of millions of dollars are expended each year in efforts to arrest, to prosecute, and to restrain the criminal classes. Moreover, large sums are spent annually by private individuals and corporations in the maintenance of guards and industrial police forces and for insurance against loss by criminal acts. The yearly toll exacted of society by predatory criminals, in the form of property destroyed, values converted, money stolen, and tribute enforced, constitutes a ghastly drain upon the economic reserves of the Nation. Undoubtedly crime costs our country several billion dollars each year, and it is conservative to say that there are more people in the underworld carrying deadly weapons than there are in the Army and the Navy of the United States.

Clearly the institutions and agencies upon which we have relied for the enforcement of the law have not adequately performed their proper functions.

In many localities there exists an unholy alliance between venal politicians and organized bands of racketeers.

Then, too, certain unworthy members of the bar maintain a close contact with the criminal classes and prostitute an honorable profession by resorting to improper practices in order to save their clients from the legitimate consequences of their crimes.

These recreant members of the legal profession take skillful advantage of the cumbersome and archaic procedural rules governing criminal cases which still persist in many of our jurisdictions. Trials are delayed, witnesses die or disappear, and appeals upon frivolous grounds are all too frequent.

As Mr. Justice Holmes once very shrewdly observed: "At the present time in this country there is more danger that criminals will escape justice than that they will be subjected to tyranny."

In many parts of the country law enforcement officers are not selected primarily because of their training and general qualifications, but are given positions on a basis of political preferment. Where this is true, each change of political administration is accompanied by a reorganization of the local constabulary. It is impossible to build up an efficient and courageous force of officers so long as they are constantly subject to the whims of political fortune.

Another difficulty grows out of the unfortunate situations which result from a lack of cooperation so often characteristic of the activities of the various law enforcement agencies of the country.

Another serious phase of the problem has to do with the relative uncertainty which exists with respect to the dividing line between the jurisdictions of the Federal and State Governments. Here lies an area of relative safety—a twilight zone—in which the predatory criminal takes hopeful refuge.

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States there was little need that the Federal Government should concern itself with the problem of crime. Due to the isolation of the different settlements, the operations of criminals were, of necessity, local in their nature. You will recall that when John Adams first went from Boston to Philadelphia, his wife, the famous and delightful Abigail Adams (who, by the way, has been called the "patron saint of the D.A.R."), made note of the fact that it took 5 weeks to receive a return letter from that "far country."

We are no longer a nation whose problems are local and isolated. The growing density of our population and the development of high-speed methods of transportation have resulted not only in a large increase in our crime rate but also have given to many offenses an interstate character. As a celebrated American jurist has said, "The maintenance of an organized society has come to involve much more than repression of local offenders against local laws. Where 100 years ago the chief concern was the common defense against foreign aggression and savages, today it is rather a common defense against organized, antisocial activities extending beyond State lines, operating without regard to political boundaries and threatening any locality where there is possibility of plunder or profit."

Crime today is organized on a Nation-wide basis, and lawbreakers extend their activities over many States. In a well-remembered kidnaping case, which occurred during the past year, the operations of the criminals took place in 7 States; and it was necessary for the agents of the Department of Justice to go into 9 additional States in their successful efforts to solve the crime and bring its perpetrators to justice. The seven States referred to have an area of about 683,000 square miles, which exceeds in extent the combined areas of Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, England, Scotland, and Wales. This illustration indicates the extent of the difficulties involved and accentuates the need of Nation-wide approach to the problem. The Federal Government has no desire to extend its jurisdiction beyond cases in which, due to the nature of the crime itself, it is impossible for the States adequately to protect themselves. In response to this manifest necessity, and entirely within constitutional limitations, the Department of Justice is urging the Congress to pass certain important bills now pending before that body, as follows:

First. A law dealing with racketeering which will make it a felony to do any act restraining interstate or foreign commerce, if such act is accompanied by extortion, violence, coercion, or intimidation.

Second. A law making it a Federal offense for any person knowingly to transport stolen property in interstate or foreign commerce.

Third. Two laws strengthening and extending the so-called "Lindbergh kidnaping statute."

Fourth. A law making it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or the giving of testimony in felony cases.

Fifth. A law making it a criminal offense for anyone to rob, burglarize, or steal from banks operating under the laws of the United States or as members of the Federal Reserve System.

Sixth. A law making it a criminal offense for any person to kill or assault a Federal officer or employee while he is engaged in the performance of official duties, and a law to provide punishment for any person who assists in a riot or escape at any Federal penal institution.

Seventh. A law to make the husband or wife of a defendant a competent witness in all criminal prosecutions.

Eighth. A law to limit the operation of statutes of limitations by providing that such statutes shall not prevent the prompt reindictment and prosecution of a person after a prior indictment has been held to be defective, and a law to prevent dilatory practices by habeas corpus or otherwise.

Ninth. A law to provide that testimony on behalf of the defendant to establish an alibi shall not be admitted in evidence unless notice of the intention of the defendant to claim such alibi shall have been served upon the prosecuting attorney at or before the time when the defendant is arraigned.

Tenth. A law to repeal the statutory provision which has been held to prohibit comment upon the failure of the accused to testify in a criminal case.

Eleventh. A law to regulate the importation, manufacture, or sale, or other disposition, of machine guns and concealable firearms.

Twelfth. A law authorizing agreements between two or more States for mutual cooperation in the prevention of crime.

This is the 12-point program of the Department of Justice. I not only invite your attention to it—but I solicit for it your earnest support.

I believe that thus it will be possible for us to observe the letter and the spirit of the Constitution and, at the same time, work out a better and more effective system of crime control.

It is seemly that we should venerate the heroes of the Revolutionary period; and that we should honor the patriots whose courage and daring have added luster to our flag. At the same time we should remember that we are now engaged in a war that threatens the safety of our country—a war with the organized forces of crime. It is an undertaking of serious import and constitutes a test of our citizenship and of our capacity for successful self-government. In this fight your organization can render valiant service.

You can, if you will, direct your efforts toward the building up of a stout-hearted public morale which will cause citizens, as a matter of course, promptly to furnish to the officers of the law the information that may come to them regarding known fugitives from justice, to give testimony freely in criminal cases, and to render jury service gladly when opportunity is afforded to perform this high function of American citizenship. You can help in putting an end to the maudlin glorification of the gangster, which has at times disgraced our public thinking and has led to episodes like that which recently occurred at Crown Point.

You can aid in speeding the activities of police and prosecutors, in enabling courts to establish proper rules and practices, and in securing desirable laws from State legislatures and from the Congress.

No more worthy enterprise could possibly engage your attention. A serious danger faces this country. Organized bands of criminals prey upon legitimate business, exact tribute from the timid or the fearful, and constitute an ever-present threat not only to property but to the safety of our homes and the sanctity of life. This open challenge to orderly government must be met with a courage worthy of our intrepid ancestors.

To this sacred cause I urge you to devote your thoughts and dedicate the energies of your great organization.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the wishes of the gentlemen on the other side, for whom I have the highest regard, I withdraw the request to take up the conference report at this time, but I serve notice now that I shall call up this conference report the first thing tomorrow. In calling up the report I did not have the slightest intention or desire to take advantage of anyone. It was simply that we might make progress because of the emergencies involved.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE ON FOREIGN WAR DEBTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on the subject of foreign war debts and increased armaments of war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the British Government last week announced that it was making no provision in its budget this year to pay any of the principal or interest due the United States on war debts. That means that England is again defaulting on these debts, although a magnanimous Congress several years ago and before I was a Member extended the time of payments over a period of 60 years and also granted her request of the outright cancelation of more than a billion dollars of England's debt to America on the assurance that Great Britain would pay her future installments of principal and interest promptly. It is needless to add that she has broken faith in her failure and refusal to do so.

This House only a few days ago passed a reciprocal tariff bill at the suggestion of the President in order to show our good faith toward foreign governments, in the hopes that such a bill when enacted would create better trade relations between the United States and foreign nations, more especially those who owe war debts and claim they have been unable to pay because of our tariff policies. As a reply to our magnanimous attitude toward these foreign governments, France has also indicated she will follow England's lead in refusing to pay any part of the principal or interest this year on her debts due the United States.

PROPAGANDA OF INTERNATIONAL BANKERS

During my four terms in Congress there has hardly been a week in any session that some Member of this body with an international complex has not risen in his seat to pay a glowing tribute to France, England, or some other foreign government. A majority of these speeches have been pleas for cancelation of foreign war debts due the United States. It has been somewhat amusing to hear Congressmen who never have set foot on foreign soil speak in this Chamber and before the committees about "poor poverty-stricken France."

Others have lauded France to the skies for staying on the gold standard, and have praised her financial system as being far superior to that of the United States. This sounds like propaganda from the international bankers, who predicted disaster and business stagnation when the President very wisely took the United States off the gold standard.

Mr. Speaker, I have no animosity toward France or any other foreign government; but as I have stated on this floor many times, I am not an internationalist. Neither am I in sympathy with all the propaganda in and out of Congress by half-baked economists, political opportunists, supporters and apologists for the Hoover administration, and would-be statesmen who worry more about the affairs of the Old World than they do of the many perplexing problems facing our own people of America.

It will be recalled that during the Hoover administration many self-admitted economists and supposed-to-be statesmen were telling the country that our terrible financial and business catastrophe could not be avoided because of world conditions. Yet, under the able leadership of our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, it must be admitted that America is gradually, slowly but surely, pulling out of the depression, while world conditions apparently are becoming more complicated. Recent events in Austria, China, France, and other nations beyond the seas would indicate this to be true.

SHOULD STAY OUT OF ENTANGLING ALLIANCES IN EUROPE

Having spent many months in France several years ago in doing my very humble part to make the world safe for democracy, and having visited France and some of the other countries of Europe in recent years, where I went as a representative of Congress to world-peace conferences, I have been especially interested in the manner in which European countries have handled their problems. I am becoming more and more convinced that America should henceforth and forever stay out of entangling alliances with the Old World. But we should do more than that. We should quit trying to emulate France or other unfriendly and unappreciative foreign governments.

We are told by the international bankers and their henchmen, big and little, that America must cancel all foreign war debts in order to assure better trade relations. That is the burden of the argument of all of those advocating outright cancelation, whether they be the Wall Street bankers, with millions of foreign securities, or their spokesmen in and out of Congress. As I recall, this is some of the same argument used back in December 1931, when former President Hoover asked Congress to declare a year's moratorium on all war debts. In opposing that moratorium bill then on the floor of this House, I predicted that such action by Congress would not help trade relations but would only leave the impression with foreign nations that this Government does not actually expect European countries ever to pay the debt they owe us—a debt they contracted when they had their backs to the wall and could not borrow a dime elsewhere on the face of the earth.

PASSED MORATORIUM AT BEHEST OF BIG BUSINESS

In addressing this House in opposition to the Hoover moratorium bill, known as "House Joint Resolution 147", on December 18, 1931, I said in part:

If you will examine the RECORD you will find that almost the identical argument that has been made on this floor today and for the past week in favor of this alleged 1 year's postponement was made by some of the same leaders here a few years ago in favor of cancelation of a major portion of war debts due America by other nations. Be it remembered that 51 percent of the French debt and 74 percent of the Italian debt was canceled in order that America might show her brotherly love and play the part of the good Samaritan to those supposedly impoverished nations. We were also told that it would be a valuable aid in helping France and Italy to prosper, and that their prosperity would be indirectly reflected in America, and that our magnanimity to France and Italy would mean a revival of business in the United States. Congress was also assured that France and Italy were to reduce their armaments of war. Both nations prospered to considerable extent by our overgenerous move, and neither nation felt obligated to keep faith with America. Did trade with either France or Italy improve? No; both nations went across to the cut-rate store—Russia—and began buying their cotton, wheat, and other supplies that they were morally obligated to buy from the United States. Did either nation reduce its armaments of war? Oh, no; but, on the other hand, both France and Italy have decidedly increased their standing armies, their navies, and increased their appropriations for aircraft. In short, France and Italy took Uncle Sam, the big-hearted Santa Claus, on a "snipe hunt" and left him holding the sack.

The Congress granted that moratorium. The international bankers, who had inspired the whole scheme, collected some of their private loans to European countries at the expense of this Government. Did business conditions improve? It is well known that they did not improve especially in America, despite the glowing promises and enthusiastic predictions made on this floor when the Hoover moratorium was pending.

World conditions also continued to grow worse. The slump in America developed into a panic and on the 4th day of March, 1933, when Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated as President, practically every bank in this land was closed. It was the darkest page in American history.

Then came the new deal. The bankrupt policy of internationalism was thrown overboard and America, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, is emerging from the chaos and ruin that had thrown the country into bankruptcy, left millions of homeless, hungry people, and more than 12,000,000 heads of families without jobs. No one pretends to say that the country is fully out of the woods but, as the President has so aptly said, "we are on our way." Yet few of those gentlemen here who boast of their international complexes will claim that conditions are growing better in the European countries.

BOMBARDMENT HAS BEGUN AGAINST CONGRESS

Just now Republican leaders in Congress and a few bitter, partisan newspapers with a Wall Street complex, have begun their bombardment of criticism and vilification of the President and the Congress. Some of these same Republican leaders promised faithfully to cooperate as a loyal, patriotic duty at the beginning of this session but have decided, as the coming campaign approaches, to be bitter partisans rather than patriotic citizens. Some of the same leaders and big daily newspapers who were calling on Democrats to support the Hoover moratorium, the infamous Hoover program of farm relief, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and declared, with so much eloquence, it to be the patriotic duty of Members of this House to do so against one's own convictions, are leaders in a concerted movement now to discredit the Congress as well as our great President and his entire program. Some of them have the nerve and audacity to tell us we ought to return to the era of internationalism, otherwise known as the "Hoover administration." President Roosevelt as well as this Congress, that has generally followed his leadership, no doubt has made mistakes and probably will continue to do so in the future. But I am firm in my conviction that the great heart of our beloved President beats in sympathy with the toiling masses and that under his able leadership this country shall never be turned over to the money changers and international bankers. [Applause.[

UNCLE SAM PLAYS ROLE OF SANTA CLAUS

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat again today what I have said on the floor of this House many times, that I favor the payment in full of the balance of the foreign war debts due the United States. I am opposed to so-called "token payments", or bad-faith gestures under the disguise of good will on the part of ungrateful foreign governments. Our people are becoming weary of watching Uncle Sam continue to play the role of Santa Claus to Europe. They are tired of seeing the greatest peace-time armies in the world being financed in Europe with dollars that belong to the American taxpayers.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. These same countries that owe us war debts, instead of trying to pay the war debts, have increased their armament to the amount of nearly $2,000,000,000 annually.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true. Instead of cooperating and showing good faith, they have begun to build up their standing armies to an alarming degree. Only recently, France announced that she proposed to construct 8,000 of the fastest and most powerful airplanes in the world, yet she pleads poverty in justification for her failure and refusal to pay any part of the debts she owes this country.

Mr. Speaker, if Europe really has any good will for the United States and desires to show as much as a spark of appreciation to the American people, I would suggest that a practical way of showing to the world her sincerity of purpose would be by reducing, rather than substantially increasing, her standing armies, navies, and aircraft. Let her come to the United States with clean hands. Let her lower her unreasonable trade barriers that have excluded practically all products of the American farmer. But let it never be said that this Government would go so far as to cancel Europe's war debts and thus aid in building up the greatest military forces the world has ever seen for ungrateful and unfriendly nations across the sea. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentlewoman withhold her motion just a minute?

Mrs. NORTON. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO ANNAPOLIS

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Apr. 17, 1934)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Copeland	Fletcher
Ashurst	Bulkley	Costigan	Frazier
Austin	Bulow	Couzens	George
Bachman	Byrd	Cutting	Gibson

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate, and that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

HOARDERS OF SILVER (S.DOC. NO. 173)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting in partial response to Senate Resolution 211 (submitted by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, and agreed to Mar. 20, 1934), a list of names, commencing with A through H, of hoarders of silver, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and the letter was read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 24, 1934.

Col. EDWIN A. HALSEY,
Secretary United States Senate.

MY DEAR COLONEL HALSEY: In talking to you about a week ago, I said that it would take me several days to complete the survey of information relative to holders of silver. I now find that the clerical labor of listing and copying the names and other information is considerable, and I am afraid that it will be a number of days before all the material now on hand can be completed and placed in your hands.

In the meantime, however, I am sending you herewith the first installment of the list consisting of the names, commencing with A through H, on which information appears to be complete. As rapidly as possible additional installments of this list will be forwarded to you.

In addition, there are certain cases where our information is not yet sufficiently complete to warrant including these names on the present list. As soon as these cases can be completed they will be forwarded separately, although, in all probability, not in their proper alphabetical place in the present list.

Finally, considerable difficulty is being experienced in getting the necessary information in certain cases. It may develop that the only successful method of obtaining this will be for the Senate to proceed with the investigation of these cases in its own behalf.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the United Irish Societies of Brooklyn and Long Island, N.Y., opposing any attempt on the part of the United States to join the League of Nations or the World Court, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the United Irish Societies of Brooklyn and Long Island, N.Y., favoring amendment of the proposed radio legislation so as to provide adequate broadcasting facilities for religious, educational, and agricultural subjects, and particularly favoring the granting of a reasonable extension of broadcasting time to station WLWL, operated by the Missionary Society of St. Paul the Apostle, in New York City, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by members of St. Stanislaus Parish, of South Deerfield, Mass., favoring the amendment of proposed radio legislation so as to provide adequate broadcasting facilities for religious, educational, and agricultural subjects, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a rank and file unemployed conference, representing 10 American Federation of Labor local unions, at Boston, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill 7598, the so-called "workers' unemployment insurance bill", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from Local Union No. 381, International Molders Union of North America, of Springfield; Moving Picture Machine Operators Local Union, No. 437, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada, of Brockton; Local Union No. 94, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, of Pittsfield; Local Union No. 95, Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance, of Worcester; Local Union No. 220, Musicians Protective Union, of North Hampton; Local Union No. 1929, Silk and Rayon Weavers' Union, of Holyoke; and Local Union No. 1711, United Textile Workers of America, of Adams, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", being the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF OF DEPOSITORS IN CLOSED BANKS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., in favor of the McLeod bill.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF CAMBRIDGE,
IN CITY COUNCIL,
April 10, 1934.

Resolved, That the city council of the city of Cambridge endorse the McLeod bill, which is now pending before Congress and proposes to authorize the Federal Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take over the "frozen assets" of closed banks belonging to the Federal Reserve System, issue currency upon these assets, pay the depositors with these new assets, and in the course of 10 years gradually liquidate the assets, in this manner reimbursing itself and retiring the currency from circulation. The passage of this bill would be fulfilling a moral obligation and duty to the depositors of these banks who relied on the Government's word that they were safe and sound and it would provide a stimulus to business recovery by converting useless bank deposits into available purchasing power. As this measure affects a local institution holding thousands of dollars of frozen assets owed to hundreds of depositors, it concerns the welfare of this community to a great extent. Therefore, a copy of this resolution shall be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the affirmative vote of 15 members.

A true copy.

Attest:

FREDERICK H. BURKE, City Clerk.

Introduced by Councilor Duffy.

COSTIGAN-WAGNER ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. WALSH. I also present and ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD and lie on the table a resolution adopted by the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., endorsing the so-called "antilynching bill."

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF CAMBRIDGE,
IN CITY COUNCIL,
April 10, 1934.

Whereas the Congress of the United States has before it for consideration the Costigan-Wagner bill, termed the so-called "antilynch bill"; and

Whereas the bill has received the approval of legion of our citizens both in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and in our own city of Cambridge: Be it

Resolved, That the City Council of the City of Cambridge endorses the proposed legislation and urges the Congress of the United States to enact the same into law; and it is further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, to the Massachusetts Senators and Representatives therein, and to Senators COSTIGAN and WAGNER.

Adopted by the affirmative vote of 15 members.

A true copy.

Attest:

FREDERICK H. BURKE, City Clerk.

Introduced by Councilor Roche.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. WHITE. I present a resolution in the nature of a petition from the Waterville (Maine) Branch of the Association of University Women, bearing on the subject of United States adherence to the World Court, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is now 35 years since the First Hague Conference, at which the United States urged the other nations of the world to establish just such a World Court as was brought into existence 12 years ago and as has since proved its value in the settlement of 46 disputes, many of which could have been the cause of war if left unsettled; and

Whereas in 1926 the Senate of the United States, by a vote of 76 to 17, passed a resolution providing for our entrance into the World Court under five reservations; and

Whereas, according to the Department of State and other competent authorities, the three World Court protocols now awaiting the Senate's ratification entirely meet the position which the Senate took in its 1926 reservation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Waterville (Maine) branch of the Association of University Women, meeting on April 4, 1934, urges the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate to report the three World Court treaties, which it now holds, to the Senate without delay, and earnestly requests the United States Senate to take favorable action upon them before the present session adjourns; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted—

1. To as many members of the Foreign Relations Committee as possible, including the Chairman, Mr. KEY PITTMAN.

2. To Senator WALLACE H. WHITE, with the request that he have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and also to Senator FREDERICK HALE, with a request that he support ratification of the Court treaties.

3. To the local newspapers.

CRUSADER WHITE SHIRTS—ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITY

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have just received a letter from Emil E. Holmes, who was a former commander of the Disabled American Veterans and who ran for Congress on the Democratic ticket in 1932, calling attention to a self-styled organization known as the "Crusader White Shirts-American Facisti." With the letter there are enclosed two pamphlets describing this outfit, saying that it will be a military organization armed with wooden staffs, officered and drilled in accordance with United States Army regulations, wearing white shirts with a large red crusader cross on the front middle, and with small crossed American and red crusader flags on the left breast, sort of a Bolshevik, Hitler, Ku-Klux Klan all in one. I ask that the letter and pamphlets be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

Only today the newspapers say that the House Committee on Nazi-ism has uncovered some evidence. If we have not the proper facilities we should either cooperate with the House or set up an organization of our own to help to uncover these foreign influences inimical to our form of government and to our people.

There being no objection, the letter and pamphlets were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNESOTA DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
Minneapolis, Minn., April 20, 1934.

TO MEMBERS UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: Attached herewith are documents that would seem to be of extreme importance, especially in view of the recent charges that revolutionary activity has been encouraged for the purpose of establishing a dictatorship.

First, the Crusader White Shirts-American Facisti, as they call themselves, are inspired from Chattanooga, Tenn., and, as will be noticed, the claim is made in its instructions to organizers that at a conference on December 1, 1932, at Warm Springs, the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, gave his support to this movement.

Second, under what is termed "general orders" this Crusader White Shirt organization makes plain its first objective to be the taking over of local city governments; however, the very interesting part of this order is in the statement that local units of this society can secure requisitions and that such will be honored for the purpose of obtaining funds and other things needed. Reference is also made to the use of pineapples to loosen up fat pocketbooks.

It does, of course, state that the temptation to use pineapples should be righteously resisted; this, I take it, would mean a mild form of resistance.

It would seem that we have in this combination a movement of fanatics that even exceed the Ku-Klux Klan in its campaigns following the Civil War.

It should not be necessary to remind Members of the Congress that in view of the present economic conditions of our country a movement such as this would make great headway in membership, and that only an immediate action by the Congress may prevent those pineapples from being hurled, only action to remove the cause will be effective; this is especially true if their claim is correct that the President has given the movement his support.

The writer was a Democratic candidate for Congress in the last election and supported the President. It is my hope that this claim will be proven untrue, but until that is done I must insist that Members of the Congress make a thorough investigation, especially into the financial operations of this organization. I am interested to know what sort of support the President gave, if any.

This matter is placed before you by United States Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL, of my State. It is our duty to cooperate with Republicans or anyone else if we find that the leaders of our own party are disloyal to those American ideals which are incorporated in the Constitution of our country and that have been secured for us all on the field of battle by the American soldier.

This Crusader White Shirts movement makes great claims for a bill known as "H.R. 4747", and every Member of the Congress should at once become familiar with this measure. What appears to have merit must be enacted into law, if trouble is to be prevented, and the Department of Justice should be given sufficient appropriation to enable them to have organization, that movements of this sort cannot be developed to the point of danger. In the past efforts have been made to utilize the Department of Justice for the purpose of breaking legal organizations and prevent freedom of speech. Its duty, however, is clearly outlined under present laws and regulations, and all that is necessary is the money to build a worth-while Department.

Every Democrat in the Congress must help remove this stain. It has been charged many times that President Roosevelt actually favors a dictatorship, and this seems to furnish proof that he has had such a plan under consideration. It is now the duty of us all to force action that will restore economic liberty to our people without violence and yield none of the liberty we have had in the past, but, to the contrary, increase that freedom.

EMIL E. HOLMES,
Post-office Box 516, Minneapolis, Minn.

CRUSADER WHITE SHIRTS

INSTRUCTIONS TO ORGANIZERS

The crusade for economic liberty has gone over the top of the mountain. Now we are going down the other side. Let's make it an avalanche. Meeting and winning the support of President-elect Roosevelt at Warm Springs on December 1 has established the validity of our claims beyond all doubt. It is now only necessary to smash our program through. It took the mob to get us what we wanted at Warm Springs. It will take the mob to get us what we want at Washington.

For the purpose of getting numbers quickly, a new organization to be known as the "Crusader White Shirts" is being formed to supplement our present organization which is too ponderous and slow for fast action. This new organization is born from the present organization and will be controlled by it in accordance with its constitution which provides that the president, by proclamation, may organize drill teams, etc. In expanding the new organization, long economic arguments will be eliminated by merely referring to our accomplishment at Warm Springs, and point out that now all we need is the numbers to finish the job.

The Crusader White Shirts will be a military organization armed with wooden staffs, officered and drilled in accordance with United States Army regulations. They shall wear white shirts with a large red crusader cross on the front middle and with small crossed American and red crusader flags on the left breast, the white shirts denoting the purity of our purpose; the red crusader cross denoting the religious significance of the crusade; the American flag, patriotism; and the red crusader flag, courage and sacrifice.

You will need no credentials or authority other than these instructions to organize Crusader White Shirts anywhere. Merely get a group together and furnish them with an American and a red crusader flag and the insignia which can be sewed on any white shirt.

The initiation ceremony merely consists of lining up the applicants in military formation, having them give the military salute to the American flag, then read to them the American declaration of economic independence, and then, while giving the crusader salute, which consists of raising the outstretched right arm with the fist clenched to the red crusader flag, have them repeat in unison the last sentence of this declaration. They should then elect their officers, hold frequent parades and mass drills and report for assignment and instructions to their State and regional commanders, if known, or to the national capital of the Crusaders for Economic Liberty, at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Organizers can obtain from the Chattanooga Button & Badge Manufacturing Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., 3 by 5 feet crusader flags at the cost of $3 and sets of insignia at 15 cents each (cash must accompany order), or he may get them elsewhere if he cares to. It is recommended that the flags be sold for $5. It is recommended that in new localities that the insignia be sold for $1 per set at the start and that the price be reduced thereafter until finally those who have no money can be told that they can paint a red cross on any old white shirt or make their own. National headquarters is interested in numbers only. You will find that you will be well paid for your efforts.

The official purpose of this organization is the creation of a very powerful lobby to insure the enactment of H.R. 11898, "A bill to establish economic liberty in the United States of America, and for other purposes." It might also be stated that we purpose to restore America to Americans, to make the crooked politicians in Washington walk straight for the first time in their lives, or that we purpose to smash the gold standard racket and establish economic liberty in America under the guidance of the divine providence.

Proclaimed and signed December 1932 by

GEO. W. CHRISTIANS,
President Crusaders for Economic Liberty,
Commander in Chief Crusader White Shirts.

AMERICAN DECLARATION OF ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for a people to dissolve the economic government under which they have existed, and to assume the control which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitles them, a decent respect for the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them.

We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, economic as well as political, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute poverty, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such economic government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of this country; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former system of economic government. The history of the present economic kings of finance is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over this country. To prove this let facts be submitted to a candid world.

Through the iniquitous gold-standard system they have brought about periodic depressions which have—

Deprived the workingman of the pursuit of happiness by taking away his job;

Fostered the trusts by destroying independent business;

Enabled the idle mortgage holder to rob the active equity holder of his property;

Made the rich richer and the poor poorer;

Brought poverty, misery, and distress to thousands;

Kept us in idleness and lowered the standard of living.

Nor have we been wanting in our attentions to our money kings. We have warned them, from time to time, of attempts to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity; and we have conjured them to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably bring disaster. They, too, have been deaf to the voice of justice. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity which announces our rebellion, and hold them as enemies to our welfare.

These economic financial kings, like the political kings of old, have no constitutional authority. Theirs is a rule of might over right. Against them we raise the red flags of rebellion and the torch of liberty in defiance. In doing so we are not unmindful of, and pledge ourselves to cherish and protect the political freedom already dearly won. We swear to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the United States and to accomplish our purposes through the political power of the ballot and to avoid and denounce all forms of disorder and violence.

We believe—

That our standard of values should be based upon human effort and not upon gold;

That our monetary system should be cleaned up, eliminating everything except the Federal Reserve System;

That the Federal Reserve System should be cleaned up, eliminating the private banking interests;

That the Federal Reserve System should be a wholly public institution, its deliberations open to the public, and its services available to the public;

That basic interest rates should be determined by basic employment conditions only.

These changes will, we believe, eliminate the business cycle, eliminate unemployment, automatically balance production and consumption, deconcentrate wealth, continuously raise the standard of living, and provide an economic government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

We, therefore, citizens of the United States of America, in mass assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name of and by the authority of the good people of this country, solemnly publish and declare, that we citizens are and of a right ought to be, free and independent economically as well as politically, and that we are absolved from all allegiance to our kings of finance, and that all economic control by them over our monetary system ought to be totally dissolved and that the people of this country should have full power to control credit for the general welfare and to do all other acts which economically free and independent people may of right do. And, for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence we mutally pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Proclaimed and signed by the first dedication class of the Crusaders for Economic Liberty on historic Signal Mountain, Chattanooga, Tenn., on July 4, 1931.

Demand the enactment of House bill no. 4747, "A bill to establish economic liberty in the United States of America, and for other purposes."

CRUSADER WHITE SHIRTS

General orders:

No unit of the Crusader White Shirts should attempt any positive action until it has been thoroughly drilled and officered and perfect discipline has been obtained, nor should it attempt to move until it is sufficiently strong to accomplish its purpose without any chance of failure.

The first objective should be to take control of the local government in the following manner: March in military formation to and surround the governmental buildings. Then by sheer numbers and a patriotic appeal force the officials to accept and act under the direction of an economic adviser appointed by the president of the C.F.E.L. This adviser's first duty will be to repudiate the public debt and utilize the payments assigned thereto for the public welfare.

Dishonest officials should immediately be brought to justice. You should remember that most politicians are unfamiliar with modern business methods, and that their accounts are apt to be badly muddled and may be short. Great care should be exercised so that the situation does not get out of control and some poor, muddle-headed but honest politicians get hung without a fair and legal trial.

When this is accomplished Crusader White Shirts should assist law-enforcement officials in maintaining the kind of order we consider essential.

Preparations should then be made at once for the crusade to Washington. Crusader White Shirts requisitions will be furnished for the purpose of obtaining funds and other things needed. This work should be assigned to a thoroughly trustworthy and carefully instructed X committee.

Generous donations can be obtained from most people for the crusade by merely appealing to their patriotism. However, a patriotic appeal will probably not have much effect on the people who have most of the money nowadays. There will be a great temptation to use a few pineapples to loosen up those fat pocketbooks, but this temptation should be righteously resisted.

As soon as you are fully equipped and prepared to go to Washington, report to the commander in chief of the Crusader White Shirts at Chattanooga, Tenn., stating the number of men, how equipped, and the time required to reach Washington, but do not move until ordered. Nothing must fail.

This is a lawful organization and it cannot be stopped by lawful means. If anyone uses unlawful means to start a fight, just be sure that you finish it.

Read these orders very carefully. Strike hard, straight, and swiftly. Get what you start out to get.

GEO. W. CHRISTIANS,
Commander in Chief, Crusader White Shirts;
President, Crusaders for Economic Liberty.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1842) to amend sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 1567) amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat.L. 751), providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 818) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment:

H.R. 3843. An act to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved August 1, 1912; and

H.R. 6013. An act to authorize the sale of land and houses at Anchorage, Alaska.

By Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 3444) to create an Indian Claims Court for the immediate settlement of Indian tribal and band claims, defining the powers and functions thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3445) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold railroad companies responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the railroad company or an agent or employee thereof;

A bill (S. 3446) to authorize the Postmaster General to receive, operate, and to maintain for official purposes, motor vehicles seized for violations of the customs laws;

A bill (S. 3447) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or an agent or employee thereof;

A bill (S. 3448) for the relief of Ralph C. Irwin;

A bill (S. 3449) to authorize the acknowledgment of oaths by post-office inspectors and by chief clerks of the Railway Mail Service;

A bill (S. 3450) to authorize the Postmaster General to charge an additional fee for effecting delivery of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail, the delivery of which is restricted to the addressee only, or to the addressee or order;

A bill (S. 3451) to amend the third clause of section 14 of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 359; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 226);

A bill (S. 3452) to provide hourly rates of pay for substitute laborers in the Railway Mail Service and time credits when appointed as regular laborer;

A bill (S. 3453) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier or an agent or employee thereof;

A bill (S. 3454) to permit postmasters to act as disbursing officers for the payment of traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Postal Service; and

A bill (S. 3455) to amend the provisions of laws relating to appointment of postmasters; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 108) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Eloy Alfaro and Jaime Eduardo Alfaro, citizens of Ecuador; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3310) to amend sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the commemoration of the termination of the War between the States at Appomattox Court House, Va.", approved June 18, 1930, and to establish the Appomattox Court House National Historical Park, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES—AMENDMENT

Mr. STEIWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

A CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION IN CHICAGO, 1933 (S.DOC. NO. 174)

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask that there may be printed as a Senate document a communication, with the accompanying papers, signed jointly by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, members of the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Commission, relating to a Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago during the year 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PAYMENT TO WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the Boston Sunday Post of April 15, 1934, entitled "Who Gets Money Congress Voted Vets?"

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Sunday Post, Sunday morning, Apr. 15, 1934]

WHO GETS MONEY CONGRESS VOTED VETS?—FRANK DISCUSSION OF WHETHER WORLD WAR FIGHTERS ARE PATRIOTS OR "PLUNDERERS OF UNITED STATES TREASURY"—"PENSION ACT" OFTEN CONFUSED WITH BONUS BILL

By Daniel Davis

Is this fair?

The boys in the blue American Legion uniform are going to be in for a lot of nasty looks this coming week as they take part in various patriots' day celebrations throughout the State.

As they swing down the street behind the local band, many of the folks on the sidewalks are going to keep their hands at their sides instead of clapping as usual. Where there were once smiles and nods of appreciation, there are going to be a lot of villagers giving the boys an imitation of the Mussolini scowl.

"Patriots, my eye", someone will spill out of the corner of his mouth, "plunderers instead of patriots. There go the crowd who raided the United States Treasury. There go the birds who browbeat Congress into appropriating millions and millions of dollars the other day for their own fat selves, while the rest of us will have to pay the bills."

Before we make snap judgments on backing up such a view, suppose we examine the whole case a bit further. Some of our preconceived ideas may need testing.

"LOOT THEIR COUNTRY"

This is the present attitude of a great many people toward all World War veterans, especially towards all Legionnaires and Veterans of Foreign Wars. Listen to this, an editorial in a famous weekly commenting on the independent offices appropriation bill—the so-called recent "veterans act"—passed overwhelmingly over a Presidential veto: "It is another indication of what all previous history has taught, that the men who, in theory, go out to defend their country, return to loot it and put it under a financial vassalage more severe than any the alleged enemy would have been able to impose.

"The way in which legislators in democracies repeatedly knuckle under to strong minority groups of voters is one of the most discouraging features of the system", continues the Nation. "Advocates of communism or fascism could hardly have a better argument put in their mouths to prove one of the essential weaknesses of democratic government than that afforded by action of Congress in giving in to the demands of the American Legion."

All over the country there is an uproar of rage against the men who, this very month—a few years ago—put on the blue and the khaki uniform of Uncle Sam. The howl is amplified many times by newspaper editorials, Economy League propagandists, big business interests, and also by many other very excellent and public-spirited persons who feel that a piratical crew of veterans have climbed aboard the ship of state and, after herding a terrified Congress into a cabin, have almost scuttled the old craft.

And while this shout of disapproval goes up, you will find groups of men sitting around the front room in American Legion posts all over the State, bewildered and puzzled by the bitterness of the attacks. If there is a student of poetry in the midst, perhaps he will quote from Kipling:

"'Chuck him out, the brute!'
But it's 'Savior of 'is country'
When the guns begin to shoot."

VETERANS' SIDE OF CASE

Those who oppose veteran benefits have had able advocates. Their reasons for their views have been well presented to the Bay State public. But so many printed attacks have been made upon the World War veterans and upon Senator WALSH and upon all the Massachusetts congressional delegation, save two, and yet so little has been said about their position in the matter that the fair-minded people of Massachusetts might like to consider the "other side" of the case on this the eve of Patriots' Day.

A frank discussion may help give an answer to the question: "Is an American World War veteran still a patriot or just a plunderer?"

NOT A BONUS BILL

If we strive to keep consideration of the problem on an intelligent plane of truth, impartial persons will appreciate at once that there is much misinformation about the actual bill in the minds of many good people, who have never had a chance to study what the money really goes for. "I think it very wrong for Congress to have passed the soldiers' bonus bill", is a remark that many such people make about the recent legislation.

Although many believe this, still the record shows that the bill had nothing whatever to do with adjusted-compensation certificates. No bonus was passed. The bonus is not even mentioned in the bill. The American Legion at its national convention in Chicago voted against Congress' passing the bonus, and Congress hasn't passed it, either.

"Well," says another well-intentioned critic, "I believe the Government is indebted to the men who were disabled in the World War. I don't object to their getting money, but I do object to men getting paid for diseases and injuries that had nothing whatever to do with war service."

If that is the attitude, then such people should be satisfied, because, so far as World War veterans are concerned, this bill did not restore any of those numerous disabilities, classified as not connected with the service, which were cut off last year in the Economy Act. Nor did the American Legion ask to have them restored.

UNBALANCED THE BUDGET

"But I object to a Treasury raid that unbalances the Budget", insists another excellent citizen.

Of course, there are those who will say in reply that there are budgets and budgets, the so-called "regular Budget" of current expenses and the so-called "extraordinary or emergency Budget" of billions and billions for various national recovery schemes.

BILLIONS FOR RELIEF

It may be rather difficult for anyone to get it through the head of many Americans that it is all right to pay C.C.C. boys fat sums, to pay so-called "unemployed carpenters" $1.20 an hour on C.W.A. or E.R.A. for a skill that they don't really have, and yet it is all wrong to pay a permanently and totally disabled war veteran a dollar a day, Budget or no Budget.

In fairness it should be admitted that there is a paper distinction. The so-called "veteran benefits" are paid out of current revenues and not out of long-distance bonds. Moreover, the veteran benefits are supposed to go on for years, and the extraordinary depression aids may stop at the end of the present financial emergency.

It is the permanent drain on national finances that alarms many citizens, as well as what they feel is "special privilege" to a particular class of citizens at the expense of all.

ONLY PART FOR VETERANS

Yet it should be remembered that out of the $209,712,500 appropriated in the independent offices bill as an increase over last year's economy bill only about $43,000,000 goes to World War veterans. A fat chunk goes to Charlestown and other navy yards and arsenals, another sum goes to restore some of the pay of the present underpaid mailman who trudges daily to your door, and for other Federal employee payments and Spanish War pensions.

On page 6296 of the 1934 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, David Lawrence, a famous journalist and an impartial observer, points out that of the less than fifty-odd millions appropriated for World War veterans, the difference between what Senator WALSH and his colleagues voted and what President Roosevelt had already recommended was less than $20,000,000.

So, while blessings are being showered on the billions and billions spent for all other forms of relief, some feel the only crime in the case is that twenty millions are to be given to World War veterans who are shell-shocked, insane, or have tuberculosis as a result of their war service.

Perhaps the World War veterans are somewhat justified in feeling that this is a weak argument on which to base a national charge of plunder.

ONLY FEW BENEFIT

Another thing that should be recognized by just persons is that of the 4,000,000 World War veterans in this land only a very small number benefit by this act—or any past act. Most of the veterans believe in the justice of the act not for themselves but for their helpless comrades. Most of them are automatically barred from ever receiving aid under this act, since the disabilities are based upon service.

But while most of the democracy, now made safe by the sacrifices of the soldier and sailor, forget the disabled human wreckage of the war, the veterans themselves never forget.

In solemn conclave wherever they assemble in their various posts they repeat together their preamble of memorial tribute to those who have fallen.

And most of them today are willing to face this barrage of what they feel is misinformed criticism, just as yesterday they faced a barrage of German scrap iron, because of their keen, never-dying devotion to their helpless comrades now too sick to fight for themselves.

WHO GETS THE MONEY?

Who, then, gets the benefit of this "raid on the Treasury?" Some who can never see the money Uncle Sam is going to give them. The new law reinstates to former compensation rates those lads whose eyes were put out by the monster, war. The stone blind reaps his delayed compensation again.

The act restores the compensation of those direct service-connected cases—the wounded and those service-connected cases whose tiny financial help was cut drastically as a temporary economy measure last year. This amounts to $31,308,000.

The President himself favored this restoration as soon as practical. With living costs mounting, Senator WALSH and his colleagues thought the time for restoration had arrived. Nearly everyone is in favor of the principle that actual service-connected disabilities should be compensated.

STORM CENTER

The second class are those whose disabilities are presumed to have been caused by war service. Upon this class most of the hostile criticism is hurled. There are only 29,000 "presumptives", and death is fast removing this pathetic group from the arena of controversy. The cost for these is estimated at $10,900,000. They get 75 percent of their former compensation.

These men are those who, a few years after the war, broke down from diseases which Government doctors studied and rated as having been caused by actual war service. They are what are called "presumptive cases." They are miserable, helpless human beings in need of assistance from somebody.

If the Federal Government did not care for them, the State or the cities and towns would. In any event public charity would be their only refuge. The nub of classification is whether such a man is a responsibility of the whole Nation or of his home town.

Since his disabilities were received serving the whole Nation, it is felt by many that the whole Nation should take care of him rather than have his assistance paid out of local taxes.

SERIOUS ILLNESSES

It should be remembered that these unhappy creatures must have broken down before 1925. The break-down must have been a grave one such as mind, lungs, or heart. Up to 1933 they were rated as service-connected cases. While it is undoubtedly true that some "chiselers" formerly have got on these rolls, the same can be said of any public welfare aid and that wrong doesn't cancel the rights of those who properly qualify.

Many of the men on this list now are as directly service-connected men as those who have bayonet scars to show as proof. All of them have service connections, rated as such by impartial medical men.

But it is a fair question to ask along with Senator COPELAND, of New York, himself a doctor, "How could an insane man, after a lapse of 15 years, produce evidence to prove the war was the cause of his insanity, even though there was no doubt about it? And how is a man flat on his back with tuberculosis to get affidavits from doctors who are now dead and from buddies who have disappeared?"

TWENTY-NINE THOUSAND LOST SOULS

These 29,000 lost souls, for whom the sands in the hour glass of life have nearly run out, are not men with warts on their fingers and scratches on their chins. They are totally and permanently disabled.

They are doomed for life. They are sad, demented human beings whose minds are gone. They are frail creatures, coughing on their death beds. They are men whose hearts hang on slender hairs. These are the men whom some call "plunderers of the United States Treasury."

FRAUDS NOT ADMITTED

No person can qualify for aid in this class where his service connection has been established by fraud, clear and unmistakable error, or misrepresentation. But if the disability has run the gauntlet of expert examination, then he may have his last hours of life eased by Uncle Sam's generosity.

Are such men plunderers? Are their comrades who have stood up for such men plunderers? Just this past week a mere handful of white-haired men assembled in Faneuil Hall. Only 68 of the thousands of Massachusetts lads who once rallied to Abraham Lincoln's call to arms. The last remnant of the Grand Army of the Republic, with eyes too dim to see the tears in the eyes of the audience there assembled, with ears too weak soon to hear the sounding of the final taps.

They called these brave old fellows plunderers in their generation. They said they stole money from the Treasury, too. These harsh words, however, have been stilled through the passing of the years.

IS CONGRESS AFRAID OF VETS?

While it may be true that some Congressmen "jumped through the hoop when the Legion snapped the whip", this charge should not be placed at the feet of all those who voted for the bill. Many of the Representatives came from "safe" districts, where neither the enmity of the American Legion nor the pats on the back from the National Economy League are of avail. Many of the Senators are not up for reelection. Besides a vote that may please a Legionnaire may infuriate another voter, and the net result may not be a political gain.

But when 373 out of 472 Senators and Representatives voted for a bill, may we not suppose that all would not have acted merely from fear of political reprisal? These legislators had a chance to study the bill. They listened to days of debate. They examined many personal records. They heard, with their own ears, the cry of distress from thousands of helpless men. Isn't it fair to them to assume that mercy and justice may have been reasons why they, and so many of the Bay State group, voted to restore this aid?

The following Massachusetts Congressmen, as well as Senator WALSH, both Republicans and Democrats, voted for the bill: CONNERY, DOUGLASS, MCCORMACK, GRANFIELD, HEALEY, ANDREW, FOSS, HOLMES, MARTIN, MRS. ROGERS, TREADWAY, GIFFORD, and WIGGLESWORTH. Isn't it reasonable to assume that worthy motives had something to do with their stands?

ONE CONGRESSMAN'S EXPERIENCE

Suppose, before this discussion is closed today, we listen to the statement of just one Congressman as to his personal experiences and why he voted as he did. We shall take one far away from home, lest we seem to be favoring one of the many local Representatives above another. This is an extract from the speech of Congressman FRANCIS H. SHOEMAKER of Minnesota, made in Congress, as to his personal experiences with the National Economy Act, whose sharpness this bill has smoothed away. Said he:

HEART-RENDING SCENE

"Upon my arrival at Minnesota after the last session, I drove out one day to the Veterans' Hospital at Fort Snelling. As we came through the gate, I met a little, old, gray-haired, stooped-over mother who had just gotten off a street car. She had five or six blocks to walk to the hospital, so I picked her up.

"I said, 'Mother, can I be of service to you?'

"She said, 'Yes.'

"I put her in the car and drove up, and I asked her where she was from.

"She told me her sad story. She was a mother from the State of Oregon. She had received a telegram that her son was about to die of tuberculosis, and that if she wanted to see her son alive she would have to hurry. She had no money, so the neighbors of her community got together and took up a collection and bought her a railroad ticket to St. Paul and return, that she might see her son alive.

"I was familiar with the hospital, so I took this little mother into the tuberculosis ward where her son was suffering with tuberculosis, and I took her where her son was. I want to say to you Members of this House that I saw one of the most heart-rending scenes I have ever experienced in my life.

"This mother told me on the way to the hospital she had only been eating one meal a day on her trip, because she had no money to pay for her food. The employees at the hospital took up a collection to feed this poor little old lady.

"When we went to the ward where this boy lay, it almost seemed the work of Providence, for when that mother stepped across the threshold that young man who had been in a semiconscious state of mind for some days opened his eyes; a smile came over his face as that mother walked up to that bed.

MOTHER'S PRAYER FOR HER SON

"In his weakened condition, with his last feeble physical effort he attempted to raise his arms and enfold that dear old mother, but his weakened condition caused him to fall back upon that bed.

"She fell over him and down upon her knees by that bedside and offered up such a prayer as I have never heard in my lifetime.

"Four hours after she saw her son, he passed over the Great Divide into the unknown land. Then came the sad part of it. The interne, in the presence of officials of the veterans' hospital, and in my presence, went through the pockets of that man, that soldier, that patriot, and there they found $3."

"The burial benefits had been cut from $100 to $75. Even the size of the flag that was to be used at a military funeral had been cut.

"Not only that, but, under the provisions of Public, No. 2, if there was any money on the body of a veteran, that money was to be deducted from the $75 funeral allowance that was to be allowed toward the burial of that patriot.

WE DID INJUSTICE

"Oh, my friends, we did a great injustice in this economy bill. We made a rule whereby Uncle Sam could reach down into the pockets of the dead, lifeless corpse, a patriot, a man who had fought for his country, and pilfer his pocket to the tune of $3 before the very eyes of the little, old, stoop-shouldered, withered mother.

"I want to say that the responsibility for these conditions rests upon the shoulders of the Congress of the United States, and it is our duty today to right some of those wrongs."

It is for fair-minded people to weigh all the facts in the so-called "pension grab." Then decide for themselves whether those World War veterans, who fought to aid their unfortunate comrades, are plunderers—or if they may still be classed among those patriots in whose honor next Thursday has been set aside.

FEDERAL TAXATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LA FOLLETTE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address on the subject of taxation delivered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on the evening of April 9 and which was broadcast over the network of the National Broadcasting Co.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

TAXES NEEDED BY UNITED STATES

Taxation is one of the most vital issues confronting the people.

Graduated income and estate or inheritance taxes are based upon the sound principle that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability of the taxpayer to meet the burden. After a long and bitter contest a graduated system of taxation became a part of the Federal Government's tax policy.

Ever since the constitutional amendment was adopted there has been a sharp conflict in Congress at each session when a tax bill is taken up for consideration. On the one hand have been those who have fought to prevent the levying of higher rates of taxation upon large fortunes and upon big incomes. On the other hand have been those who have contended that in a democratic form of government taxes should be levied in accordance with ability to pay and that more and more of the burden of government and the costs of war should be shifted to the graduated form of taxation as embodied in the income and estate taxes.

During the war my father led the fight to tax war profits 100 percent and to tax incomes and large fortunes to the limit in accordance with ability to pay, in order that oncoming generations should have to carry as small a burden of debt as possible. He was unsuccessful and the Congress at that time determined that a larger percentage of the cost of war should be borne by the generation that fought it, and their children and their children's children.

We get some appreciation of the enormous debt which was thus thrust upon the people from the following figures: In 1916, the year before we entered the war, the Federal per capita debt was $12.50. Today, many years after that conflict closed, the Federal debt on every man, woman, and child, attributable to the war, is approximately $150.

Therefore, even at this late date we are still fighting over the issue in Congress in the pending tax bill as to whether those who reaped enormous profits out of the war shall be required to come forward and carry their fair share of the cost of the war.

As a result of the tax policies adopted during the war, 21,000 individuals accumulated a million dollars or more of capital. In other words, the war created one new millionaire in this country for every three American boys who gave up their lives in France.

After the war, in succeeding sessions of Congress, the progressives fought for the maintenance of high income- and estate-tax rates in order that the war debt should be discharged insofar as possible by contributions in the form of taxes from those who had profited during the war. But in 1921 Andrew W. Mellon, one of the richest men in this country, became Secretary of the Treasury. Soon after he was appointed in a secret session of the Finance Committee he revealed his opposition to the graduated form of taxation and advocated in its stead sales taxes. The sales tax is based upon a diametrically opposite theory from the graduated income and estate taxes because it falls upon the taxpayer without regard to his ability to meet the burden. During the long period that Mr. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury taxes were reduced upon wealth to the extent of approximately $4,000,000,000.

Many economists and tax experts are coming to recognize that the Mellon tax policy was a large contributing factor in stimulating the excess of speculation and the wild finance which characterized the boom period that ended so disastrously in the fall of 1929.

One of the principal causes of the depression was failure of purchasing power to keep pace with our increased capacity to produce both manufactured and agricultural products. Mass production and scientific agriculture cannot be maintained unless there is an equitable distribution of purchasing power among the people.

In 1932 the Taylor Society published a study of purchases by income groups in the year 1929. This study shows that individuals with incomes of $5,000 or less purchased approximately 80 percent of all the goods sold that year, and that those with incomes of $5,000 or more purchased approximately only 20 percent of all goods sold.

It has seemed obvious since the beginning of the depression that until we restore the buying power of that group in the United States who in 1929 furnished approximately 80 percent of the purchasing power, we shall continue to suffer the agonies of this economic depression.

The concentration of wealth in the hands of a relatively small number of people has been the inevitable consequence of a maldistribution of income. This process has gone on in this country for many generations. The war speeded up concentration of wealth and it went forward apace during the period after the war. Recognized studies of this problem were made by Dr. Wilford I. King. Taking these studies as a basis and translating them into a simple illustration, we get a startling picture of the extent to which wealth is now concentrated in the United States.

Let us assume that $100 represents all the vast wealth of this country, the richest nation on earth. Let us assume that 100 individuals represent the entire population of the United States. Now, if we divide that $100, representing our vast wealth, among those 100 people, representing all our citizens, as wealth is today divided in this country, what do we find? We find that 1 individual would have $59, 1 individual would have $9, 22 persons would have $1.22 each, and 76, or all the remainder, would have less than 7 cents apiece.

This illustration not only presents the problem which must be solved, if we are ever to find our way out of this depression, but it also presents a situation which should give pause to every citizen who desires to see the institutions of democracy maintained. All history clearly demonstrates that a concentration of wealth such as has taken place in the United States is inimical to the perpetuity of democratic institutions. Upon this basis the advocates of higher taxes upon those who are best able to bear the burden could rest their case. But there are equally if not more important considerations to which I now desire to direct your attention. This economic crisis is graver than war. It is more fraught with danger to the institutions of the Republic than any war in which we have ever engaged.

To meet the emergencies in this crisis it has been necessary for the Federal Government to come to the aid of its citizens to relieve distress and want, and to prevent in part human suffering and malnutrition. It has been necessary likewise for the Federal Government to provide employment for a part of those who are out of work and who cannot find employment in normal business activities. I am convinced that the Federal Government will have to carry on a much larger program of employment than has thus far been adopted. It will be necessary to continue these huge collective expenditures over a long period of time. Failure to recognize this fact will court disaster.

All the way through this recent period those who have been fighting for an adequate program to restore purchasing power on the farms and in the cities have been defeated because of the unwarranted optimism of people who have refused to face the facts. Year after year, when we have come forward with adequate measures, we have been told that prosperity was just around the corner. It was this belief that prevented the adoption of a program in session after session. It was only the deepening of the crisis and finally the collapse of the banking structure which made it possible to secure the enactment of a program, inadequate though it was.

In connection with the tax bill now pending in Congress we must decide how we are to meet the cost of government, the cost of war, and the cost of the extraordinary expenditures to meet the emergency. In all justice, in all equity, there is only one sound course open and that is to require that the increased taxes shall fall upon those who have the ability to pay. Not only because this policy is sound in principle, but there is another reason. The improvement in business has been largely due to expenditures made by the Federal Government. We are therefore doubly justified in requiring those who have been in part the beneficiaries of this program to come forward and to assume their fair share of the tax burden which these expenditures make necessary.

Consistent with the tax policy outlined, I offered an amendment in the Senate which provided a normal tax of 6 percent, which is 2 percent higher than that proposed by the Senate Committee on Finance.

The surtax rates in my amendment began with a surtax of 5 percent on net incomes in excess of $4,000, with gradual increases, bracket by bracket, reaching a maximum surtax rate of 71 percent on net taxable incomes above $1,000,000.

I shall give a few examples of how this amendment would have operated. Assuming a married man with no dependents, having a net taxable income, after all exemptions, of $3,000, my amendment would have imposed a tax of $12, as compared with a tax of $20 under the existing law. In Great Britain this taxpayer, under their rates, would pay $311.

A taxpayer with a net taxable income of $10,000 under my amendment would have paid $618; under the present law, $480; in Great Britain, $1,862. If the taxpayer had a net income of $50,000, under my amendment he would have been required to pay $12,955; under the existing law, $8,600; and in Great Britain such a taxpayer would have paid $19,655.

If the taxpayer had a net taxable income of $100,000, under my amendment he would have paid $42,993; under the existing law, $30,100; and in Great Britain a tax of $48,102 would be imposed.

A taxpayer with $1,000,000 of net taxable income, under my amendment, would have paid $716,318; under the existing law he would have paid $571,158; and in Great Britain he would be taxed $639,160.

The Treasury estimated that the amendment which I offered would have raised $185,000,000 more taxes than are received under the existing income rates. Opponents of higher income taxes contend past experience demonstrates that lower rates produce more aggregate revenue than higher rates would yield. They also argue that with tax-exempt securities existing in this country in such large volume, high income-tax rates will cause large income-tax payers to invest in tax-exempt securities in order to escape the rates imposed, if they are heavy. Opponents also argue that very heavy rates may induce a flight of capital from the United States.

The answer to the first contention is that we have no statistics which prove that low rates of income taxation produce more revenue than higher rates would yield. The figures which opponents cite are based upon the high revenue collected under the relatively low rates imposed during the past three Republican administrations. These figures are entirely misleading because they do not take into account the very large increase in economic activity which characterized the so-called "boom period."

Insofar as the tax-exempt securities argument is concerned, I am perfectly willing to concede that we shall never have a satisfactory tax system in this country so long as tax-exempt securities afford a means for persons of large wealth to escape income taxes by investment in this type of security. Nevertheless, I am convinced that this argument is grossly exaggerated. The most recent figures which we have come from the Federal Trade Commission and show that in 1924, following the relatively high rates of the war and post-war period, only 3.16 percent of the income of all persons receiving $10,000 a year or more was derived from tax-exempt securities. Furthermore, I think it is absurd to contend that men who have invested in industrial and other types of taxable securities would be willing to give up their partial or complete control of these corporations in exchange for tax immunity. In addition, with taxable securities at their present levels in the market, it would be a very difficult if not impossible feat for the owners of these industrial stocks to sell them for the purpose of reinvestment in tax-exempt securities without sustaining a terrific loss.

It is noteworthy also that we meet the tax-exempt security argument both coming and going when a tax bill is under consideration. Those who employ the argument that we cannot impose high income taxes because wealthy individuals will invest in tax-exempt securities usually vigorously oppose higher estate-tax rates, although they know full well that tax-exempt securities are taxed just as are all other assets of an estate following the death of the taxpayer.

The experience in England, with much higher rates than we have imposed upon wealth, completely answers those who fear a flight of capital.

The amendment I offered to increase the income-tax rates was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 47 to 36. The Senate probably will adopt an amendment proposed by Senator COUZENS to provide an emergency surtax of 10 percent additional. This amendment is estimated to increase the yield over the income tax from existing law by $55,000,000.

I have offered an amendment to increase the rates on estate taxes which probably will be adopted in the Senate. This amendment lowers the exemption upon estates from $50,000 to $40,000. Beginning at 1 percent, the amendment increases the rates until upon a net estate in excess of $10,000,000 a tax of 60 percent is imposed upon the excess. This amendment is estimated by the Treasury to produce about $92,000,000 over and above the revenue from estate taxes imposed by existing law.

Under this amendment a net estate of $50,000 would pay $100 tax. In Great Britain, under existing rates, such an estate would pay $2,500.

An estate of $100,000 under the existing law would pay $1,500; under my amendment it would pay $1,600, and in Great Britain $9,000 would be collected from such an estate. An estate of $500,000 under existing law would pay $42,500; under my amendment it would pay $60,200, and in Great Britain $105,000. An estate of $1,000,000 would pay $117,500 under existing law, $170,800 under my amendment, and $270,000 under the British law. An estate of $5,000,000 would pay $1,149,000 under existing law, $1,691,000 under my amendment, and $2,050,000 in Great Britain. An estate of $10,000,000 under existing law would pay $3,000,000, under my amendment $4,387,000, and in Great Britain $5,100,000.

I also shall offer an amendment to make income-tax returns public records just as property-tax returns are public records in every State in the Union. Aside from the rate schedules, the pending tax measure is largely devoted to an effort to plug up loopholes which wealthy income-tax payers have found in the present law. The exposure of this legal form of tax dodging came as the result of an investigation conducted by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Obviously we cannot carry on a continuous investigation by congressional committees for the purpose of ascertaining and exposing new devices which the wealthy income-tax payers and their high-priced tax lawyers have discovered. If we make income-tax returns public records it will do more to put an end to legal taxdodging than any other thing which could be done.

In the greatest crisis in this Nation's history we must carry on huge expenditures to relieve suffering and to increase purchasing power. To carry on this program requires an efficient tax system, with heavier burdens upon those able to bear them than ever before in our history. I do not make this statement because I believe that we must balance the Budget in the technical and arithmetical sense. As a matter of fact, I think we have been trying to balance the wrong budget. The budget that I should like to see balanced would list upon the assets side 125,000,000 people. It would list our natural resources, our oil, our coal, our lumber, our minerals, our waterpower. It would list our transportation system. It would list the greatest industrial development that the world has ever seen. It would list our great agricultural resources. On the other side of the budget would be listed the obligation of any society and of any government worthy of the name to assure to every man, woman, and child a decent and a full life. If we will discharge that obligation, if we will balance this greater budget, we will put the operating Budget into balance overnight. If we fail to balance this larger budget, if we fail to discharge this obligation we owe to the people of this country, then no matter how long we go on with cheese-paring methods on the regular Budget, we shall never balance it so long as the level of economic activity remains at its present point or sinks even lower.

This program of necessity requires a tax system which will produce sufficient revenue, not to balance the operating Budget, but to maintain Government credit.

We have reached the point where we must ascertain whether those who give lip-service to our present system are willing to pay the price to save it. We must ascertain whether those who have the biggest stake in saving this system are willing to contribute to the Government through graduated income and estate taxes a sufficient revenue to make it possible to carry on these collective expenditures until the war against depression has been won.

PEACE AND WAR—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF WAR DERN

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for incorporation in the RECORD an address by Hon. George H. Dern, Secretary of War, before the Forty-third Continental Congress of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, at Constitution Hall, Washington, D.C., April 16, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To be invited to address this distinguished convention is an honor which any man might covet and which I appreciate most highly.

I realize, however, that the invitation came to the Secretary of War rather than to me personally, and so I have tried to keep from getting conceited over the compliment.

Since the preparation and delivery of this address is in the line of my official duty, I assume that you expect me to speak to you on a theme connected with the War Department, and that you will not deem it bad taste if I talk shop.

Talking shop, in this case, involves talking about one of the most important problems in the world—the problem of peace and war; peace and how to preserve it; war and how to avert it.

For the past few years our minds have been busy with the depression and how to get out of it. That is tremendously important, but after all it is temporary. One of these days we shall wake up and find that the depression is gone and that the country is prosperous again.

But the question of war will remain with us even then. It is the one overwhelming question that mankind has never solved. It is a question that affects and involves every human being. It is a question that began long before the dawn of recorded history and is as much of a riddle in our own civilized epoch as it was away back in the primitive days of barbarism and savagery. Wise men and philosophers of all ages have wrestled with it. Statesmen and churchmen have cried, "Out, damned spot!", but the spot is still there. Nobody can deny that, and every person, no matter what his ideals may be, must be willing to face the facts.

War is not a pleasant thing to talk about, and it is not my purpose to gloss over its hideousness by dwelling upon its glory, heroism, and sacrifice. You women do not need to be reminded that our country was born in war, and that therefore the results of war are not always wholly bad. There is no doubt that war has played a major part in shaping history. Nevertheless, the desire for peace is universal, and I prefer to speak to you about preserving peace rather than about the glory of war.

There is much superficial talk about peace and war. Extremists for national defense have a habit of dubbing all who do not agree with them pacifists. In retaliation, those who are active in the peace movement are prone to call the others militarists. Both are wrong, and both hurt their respective causes by calling names.

A pacifist, strictly speaking, is opposed to war under any circumstances, and hence is opposed to any sort of military establishment, even for defensive purposes. He believes in the doctrine of nonresistance or turning the other cheek—a fine Christian precept which hardly any Christians practice. There is only a handful of that sort of pacifists in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that we have millions of earnest peace advocates who may be willing to turn the other cheek but do not find anything in the Scriptures that tells them what to do after being smitten on both cheeks.

A militarist, in the strictest sense, believes in wars and battles as the only proper means for settling quarrels between nations. Militarists of this sort are scarce as hen's teeth in the United States, even in the Army and Navy. This type of militarist is largely a figment of the imagination.

Since the extremists of both types are so rare, we may, for all practical purposes, dismiss them from our minds. Let us talk about the rest of us who are in between.

The human species is a strange paradox. All history proves man to be a fighting animal, and yet his soul yearns for peace. The peace movement did not originate in this generation. Away back in Old Testament times prophets were dreaming of beating swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks; and yet if swords have been beaten into plowshares at all, the only reason is that the sword has become an obsolete weapon.

Nineteen hundred years ago the Prince of Peace preached peace on earth. Although we Christians give lip service to that exalted ideal, yet candor compels us to admit that the Christian era is a record of one war after another. Our own peace-loving country has had six major wars and has been at war 1 year in every 8 of its brief existence. This is worse than the record of the world as a whole, which, it has been estimated, has had 1 year of war in every 13 during the same period. It looks as if human nature were not changing very fast. It also looks as if democracy were not a cure for war.

And yet most good people (and nearly all people are good people) yearn for permanent peace. One of the chief reasons why we went into the World War with such fervor and enthusiasm is that it was supposed to be a war to end war. Our boys felt that such a sublime cause was worth dying for, and they went to their death with smiles on their lips believing that their sacrifice had helped to abolish war. No human being ever received the adulation that the whole world accorded to Woodrow Wilson, the great apostle of a just and lasting peace.

Since the human family longs for peace I cannot find it in my heart to find fault with those who want to abolish war. Indeed, to that extent I am a pacifist myself. Although I have never believed in disarming our country while the rest of the world remains armed to the teeth, yet I instinctively sympathize with every attempt to make armed conflict less probable. I hope and believe I am typical of the average American citizen in that respect. I cheerfully give the peace advocates full credit for sincerity of purpose, purity of intention, and devotion to a lofty ideal. We need their inspiration to keep us from sinking into the despair of gross materialism and narrow selfishness.

To avoid the approbrium that attaches to the words "pacifist" and "militarist", let us drop those terms and say there is one school which holds that the best way to insure peace is to be prepared for war, and another school which contends that preparedness is either unnecessary or else dangerous because it provokes war. If that is a fair statement, the first thing to catch our attention is that both schools want to prevent war. They both have the same objective, but are trying to reach it by different if not opposite routes.

Those who are actively devoting themselves to the cause of world peace should not be condemned or denounced for what they would like to bring about. I sometimes wonder, however, if they are always wise in the kind of campaign they are carrying on against war. Very properly, they attack the causes of war, for the way to cure a disease is to remove the cause. But when they attack the United States Army and Navy as one of the causes of war, I wonder if they are acting advisedly and if they are actually promoting peace.

Patrick Henry said, "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Is there any experience to warrant the accusation that the United States Army is or ever has been a cause of war? When and where did the Army ever provoke a war? And when I say Army I mean our whole national-defense establishment, including the Navy.

Did the Army start the Revolutionary War? Hardly, for there was no Army until after that war began.

Did the Army start the War of 1812? History has never laid the responsibility for that war for sailors' rights at the door of any but civilian agitators.

Did the Army have any part in instigating the Mexican War? No one has ever said so. The expansionists who brought it on were all civilians.

How about the Civil War? Did the Army incite that? It would be most ridiculous to make such a charge when the Army itself was divided in that conflict, many of its outstanding officers going over to the side of the Confederacy because they put State loyalty ahead of national loyalty.

Was the Spanish-American War incited by the Army? There are plenty of us who remember that those who stirred up that war were not soldiers but crusading civilians in and out of Congress.

There remains only the World War. We do not need to strain our memories very hard to recall that there was hardly an Army officer among those who inflamed the public mind until Congress was forced to declare war.

No; the Army did not cause any of our wars, but it stopped every one of them. The people bring about wars and the Army brings about peace.

Since the Army of the United States has never in the slightest degree been responsible for bringing on a war, where is the experience which justifies the friends of peace in listing the Army among the causes of war? It seems to me they are barking up the wrong tree, and that denouncing the Army is a waste of energy that might be more profitably directed. It would be as logical to say that fire departments cause fires, and that the way to stop fires is to disband our fire departments.

Our six major wars were all started by the people, for whenever Congress has declared war it has always been in response to public opinion. The people are therefore a fruitful cause of war. If those who claim that one of the ways to prevent war is to abolish the Army pretend to be consistent, they must also say that another way to prevent war is to abolish the people. That is the reductio ad absurdam of the argument and exposes its fallacy. Since we cannot abolish nor even reduce the people, and since it is not in accord with our political philosophy to control the utterances of newspapers, orators, and jingoistic propagandists, who incite the people to war, the most rational way to promote world peace is through education, exhortation, international understanding and the promotion of good will.

We may have such confidence in our own pacific intentions as to feel that we do not need an Army, but are we certain that there are no potential aggressors in the world who would look with covetous eyes upon our lands and wealth if we are not able to protect them? Does the history of the world during recent years give any comfort to those who would like to believe that aggressive warfare is a thing of the past, and that force and violence have been relegated to the limbo for forgotten evils?

As a matter of fact, there is a touch of absurdity in the peace advocates on the one hand and the Army and the Navy on the other hand standing off and snarling at each other, for they both have the same objective. Instead of fighting each other they ought to unite in fighting the common foe.

The Army desires peace just as fervently as do the civilian peace lovers, for soldiers know better than any others what a hellish business actual warfare is. They suffer most from its horrors, and they want none of it if it can be avoided. It is a grotesque fallacy that the Army and Navy are always spoiling for a fight and are dangerous trouble makers. Their real mission is to keep us out of trouble and to get us out of trouble.

The peace advocates are idealists, and live in an imaginary world of intelligence, honesty, justice, tolerance, and good will—the world of our dreams and aspirations, which we have never yet approached. Soldiers are realists. They take the world as they find it, and as it has always been. They face the facts. I believe these two ought to understand each other better and to cooperate in the great effort to make war more remote. Perhaps the Army is too narrow in relying solely upon military preparedness for national defense. Perhaps one of the functions of the War Department should be to educate the public in the real causes of war. Perhaps so, but I do not believe it. Under our conception of government that is not the business of the Military Establishment.

The Army realizes that wars are nearly always caused by nationalistic hatred and fear or by economic conditions. It knows that trade restrictions which are intended to benefit one country by destroying the industries and impoverishing the workers of another country are themselves a form of warfare, and are liable to lead to armed conflict. Nevertheless, the Army is thoroughly indoctrinated with the sound American principle that such matters are the proper business of the civil authorities. If these things cause actual war, it is not for the Army to reason why, but to do and die. In short, the Army should not meddle with economic and political questions, even though these questions are the most potent causes of war. The most dangerous situation that we could have in this country would be to have the Army meddling in political questions, because military usurpation of the Government would then be near at hand.

The officers of the United States Army are drawn from all elements of society and constitute a good cross section of American citizenship. They have homes and parents and wives and children just like civilians. They have the same mental, moral, and spiritual reactions as the rest of us. They are patriotic and know the spirit of America. They do not want to be part of a military machine for foreign aggression. They do not want to tell our statesmen what policies are best for the country. They want the Army to be an efficient organization to be used for defense only. They believe in the good old American motto, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." And they are not convinced that the world as a whole has yet reached the millenium in which national avarice and ambition have been outgrown and renounced forever.

And so they feel, as most Americans feel, that while we covet the lands or wealth of no other country, yet we had better carry a little burglary insurance for a while yet.

The Father of his Country was wise in his day and generation, and much of his advice is still good, despite the fact that industrialism, science, and the machine have completely transformed the country which he knew. On the subject of national defense his philosophy was "in time of peace prepare for war." Surely no one would accuse George Washington of being a truculent, swash-buckling militarist, who wanted an army so as to be able to stir up a war every now and then. Surely he had seen enough of the hardship and cruelty, the horror and waste of war to be heartily sick of it. But Washington was not a man to blink the facts. Although endued with deep love for his fellow man he, too, took the world as he found it. He did not expect too much of human nature. He took man as God had made and endowed him—not as an angel from Heaven.

He knew that man is imperfect, that he has been and always will be subject to human frailties and limitations. He knew that man, whether individually or in large groups called nations, is often selfish and foolish. He knew the limitations of the human mind, and its inability always to determine what is right and what is wrong, especially when bewildered by propaganda. He knew that the most useful human attribute is good judgment, and that good judgment, or the power to determine what is the best course to pursue, is not too common among men. And he understood that when national hatred and organized, patriotic lying are let loose among the people they are very few who can tell what is fact and what is fiction. And knowing these human weaknesses he felt that war was inevitable. Perhaps he did not claim that preparedness would always prevent war, but he was very certain that when once drawn into a war a prepared nation ran less risk of being defeated than an unprepared nation.

Moreover, Washington was a keen enough observer and knew enough history to understand there can be no organized society without some form of police power. Even in a small town where all the residents are presumed to be friends and neighbors the policeman is still necessary, and in a large city a large armed police force is required to protect the lives and property of the citizens. The Father of his Country might have asked, "If we need protection against our own neighbors and fellow citizens, how can we feel secure against the evil intentions of distant enemies whose ambitions and jealousies we do not comprehend?" And so he rightly concluded that when domestic crime and violence are abolished within the nations it will be safe to say that there is no danger of international trespasses, but not until then.

The most ardent peace advocate will advance his own hopes faster if he will frankly recognize these facts. When he does he will not dissipate his strength in setting up straw men and then fighting them.

This does not mean that the peace societies should disband. On the contrary, it will simply release them for more effective activities in behalf of world peace, in which your society will, I am sure, gladly join. So will the Army and the Navy, insofar as it is legitimate for them to participate.

What are some of the causes of war? Trade restrictions are one, as I have pointed out.

Mutual distrust is another thing that keeps nations jumpy and ready to fly at each other's throats.

Racial and national prejudices are another cause of friction that may generate heat enough to start a conflagration.

Lack of some suitable tribunal to adjudicate international disputes sometimes forces recourse to arms.

In these directions the peace organizations can find an outlet for all their energies. Let them begin at home by breaking down our own bumptious sense of superiority, our prejudices against other countries and other forms of government, our selfishness, and our provincialism, so that we shall recognize that peoples of other nations are human beings like ourselves, and not some other sort of animal to be hated and feared. A little more fairness and tolerance, a little more Christian charity, a little more friendship and brotherhood—these are the things that will reduce the danger of war.

Let them inculcate the advice of George Washington, who said, "Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant date a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence."

Let them continue their efforts toward intelligent disarmament, and use the cost of armaments for more constructive purposes.

Let them work for a revision of the rules of war. War used to be waged between opposing armies, but in our so-called "enlightened times" the civil population, including women and children, are also subject to attack. One of our generals said to me the other day that if airplanes and submarines could be eliminated and all fighting done on the surface of the land and the water, it would be a long step forward.

Finally, let the efforts toward international cooperation be kept up. A policy of isolation is a dangerous policy, so far as preserving peace is concerned. We ought to put ourselves into the right frame of mind to be good neighbors and good world citizens.

The good citizen does not live exclusively for himself and his family but recognizes that he has duties to his city, State, and country. If he does not attend to those duties, he is a slacker who forfeits the title of good citizen.

Surely we want our beloved country to be a good citizen in the community of nations—not selfishly minding her own business only but performing an honorable part of the world's work. Surely we want the United States loved and honored throughout the wide world; and if, by reason of our justice and benevolence, we gain and hold the confidence, admiration, and friendship of all the world there will be little danger of becoming embroiled in disputes and conflicts; and to be an American then will be an even prouder title than it has ever been before.

DICTATORSHIPS AND DEFICITS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON OF INDIANA

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] over the General Broadcasting System Monday, April 23, on the subject of "Dictatorships and Deficits."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DICTATORSHIPS AND DEFICITS

The trend toward dictatorship in this country is unmistakable, and it has given the American people just cause for alarm. To say nothing about the drastic legislation that has been enacted under the Executive lash, there have been many autocratic acts of administration that have shocked all believers in free government.

There was, for instance, the attempt to muzzle the press, thinly concealed, that had not the newspapers of the country risen up in defense of their rights, might easily have throttled free speech.

Then came the ruthless cancelation of the air-mail contracts which resulted in the deaths of 12 brave young pilots and the destruction of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of public property.

Here there was no national emergency. The President of the United States could have waited 3 weeks or 3 months, if necessary, until he was certain his action would not destroy aviation and a great industry in this country. But rashly, hastily, and without giving the facts the consideration that the American people expect the Chief Executive of the Nation to give to great questions of this kind, the President canceled all these contracts and refused to give the carriers an opportunity to be heard in their own defense, violating the Constitution of the United States, certainly in its spirit, violating all the traditions of the American people throughout the centuries.

At a time when the President is urging, through the N.R.A., that business over all the United States increase employment, increase wages and salaries, he took this action that practically destroyed an entire industry which is absolutely essential to the defense of the Nation, and threw thousands of men and women out of employment.

Finally, after having taken this rash and hasty action which the country, notwithstanding what has been said on the other side, undoubtedly believes was ill-considered, the President ordered the mail to be carried by the Army; without any emergency existing at all, he sent these pilots into the air over routes with which they were not familiar, with equipment that certainly was not adequate for the task; with beacons having been discontinued through false economy so that pilots could not find their way; with no hangars provided over the routes so that the ships could be taken care of properly and inspected; and that ill-considered action resulted in the deaths of 12 of the bravest pilots in the United States. That cannot be laughed off on the ground of politics; nor will the American people laugh it off; nor will they consent to have it laughed off; nor is it a laughing matter in the homes of tragedy, woe, and despair, that have been wrecked because of these deaths.

There is just one question involved here; that is, Why did the Executive in the first place cancel these mail contracts without giving those who held the contracts a fair hearing? We accord a fair trial, and his day in court, to the worst criminal who ever lived. If a man is charged with murder, we give him his opportunity to be heard. In this instance, with 31 of the contracts practically unquestioned—only 3 contracts have been drawn into the controversy to any considerable extent—the President of the United States canceled all 34 of them—the good and the bad, the just and the unjust—and refused to hear what the contractors had to say. Of course, that is un-American and contrary to the whole spirit of American tradition. Then the Executive order was issued.

As soon as the order was issued, there was protest from one end of this country to the other, which has continued to this very day. The American people believe in fair play, and one great aviator in the country who holds the admiration of every American citizen, Colonel Lindbergh, was bold enough to protest against the ill-considered action of the White House. Immediately he was insulted and abused, and in the most scathing manner it was suggested that he was a publicity seeker—he who has dodged publicity all his life, who goes out of his way to avoid publicity. Yet that was the cowardly charge made against Colonel Lindbergh.

Then the fatalities began, just as he said they would. One pilot was killed directly as a result of the Executive order; then 2, then 3, then 4, and still no action at the White House. Then 5, then 6, and still no action. Then 7, then 8, and still no Executive action. Then 9, and still no action. Then 10. Somehow or other 10 was considered to be the limit. That was the point where it seemed necessary to the Executive to call a halt on the whole ghastly business, and a halt was called.

What happened? The young man they had insulted, Colonel Lindbergh, who continues to hold the admiration of the American people, in whom the country still believes, notwithstanding the cowardly attack made on him, was sent for by the Secretary of War to come here and get them out of the ghastly mess in which the administration found itself. The Secretary of War had his picture taken with the colonel, in intimate conversation as if they were old and tried and true friends. Then he gave out an interview to the effect that "this is our leading authority on aviation." Of course, the country knew that without any statement from the Secretary of War. Then finally they insulted him again by asking him to come to Washington and become a member of a commission to undertake to work out some details in connection with that same Executive order which has all but destroyed the aviation industry in this country, and of course Colonel Lindbergh promptly refused. That is the history of this thing, in a word, up to date. It was an autocratic procedure—directly in line with the prescribed methods of dictators.

The President now demands full tariff-making power; the bill insisted on by him has been passed by the House and is now pending in the Senate. Passage of the measure would deal one of the most dangerous blows to the Constitution which has been threatened in the entire administration program. The Congress has abdicated much of its constitutional power to the Executive under the guide of emergency. With disturbing swiftness since last March we have seen our liberties vanishing to the point where it is now fair to question whether or not we are still living under a representative form of government. If this bill passes, there will be no question. The journey toward Executive dictatorship will be virtually ended—so far have we gone from Government of, for, and by the people to a Government by Executive fiat and unchecked bureaucracy.

Under the Constitution the tariff-making authority is lodged in the Congress, which is, in turn, responsible to the people. Now, however, Congress is directed to give the President absolute power to effect trade agreements without knowing what kind of pacts will be made, without knowing what industries will be sacrificed, without knowing anything at all beforehand.

Regardless of the action taken by the Executive, Congress would be helpless. Nor is this vast delegation of power considered as emergency legislation. It is to be a permanent innovation.

It has been the policy of the administration to hold out glittering promises of prosperity to gain support for its measures. The trade-agreement arguments now advanced are in line with this practice—we are told that our export trade will go far toward restoring prosperity notwithstanding the fact that not more than 6 to 7 percent of our total production is sold abroad. Ninety to ninety-five percent of all American production is sold in the American market, and this market must be preserved for the American people. Otherwise there can be no return to prosperous times. We have been witnessing the rise of dictatorship and the decline of constitutional government step by step with the passing of legislation clothing the Executive with autocratic power. Unless a halt is called on such procedure, representative government in America will soon have perished.

The methods pursued in this proposed legislation give rise to grave suspicion. The bill was drawn by someone in the executive department of the Government and sent to the House of Representatives for introduction—although the constitutional and traditional procedure is for Congress to initiate and to pass legislation. On March 5 it was announced that hearings would be held beginning March 8—the hearings to last 1 week. The administration had a year to prepare for these hearings while those who might be opposed to the plan were given only 3 days' notice.

While the hearings were conducted, Mr. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, who is purported to have drafted the bill, appeared. He was asked if he could give the committee some idea of the bargaining that would be undertaken. He said: "* * * I don't feel that it is quite possible to reveal the approaches the foreign governments made in confidence to the State Department. I think, really, sir, it would not be politic or wise or fair to reveal such approaches as have been made."

Here we have a member of our own State Department admitting that foreign approaches have been made to our Government, yet he refuses to disclose the slightest information as to the character of those approaches, even to the direct representatives of the people. The bill would empower the President to enter into reciprocal agreements without advising with or consulting Congress either before or after the agreements are made. This vast authority would not only be given to the Executive but he would also be permitted to exercise it secretly, and as he alone saw fit. The constitutional power of the Senate to ratify treaties would then become a dead letter.

Thus the administration takes another step forward in bureaucratic control; authority is to be placed in the Executive who in turn must delegate much of it to subordinates and bureaucrats who are not selected by, nor responsive to, the electorate.

Innumerable bureaus have been set up with thousands of additional employees, and the country is confronted with a National Treasury deficit that will run into the billions while the national debt threatens to exceed 32 billions within the next year. Verily dictatorships, debts, and deficits are all of the same stripe—they go hand in hand.

A few days ago Dr. William A. Wirt, a very prominent educator, superintendent of the Gary schools since 1907, made his statement with reference to the trend of this Government toward Russian communism or toward communistic methods under the direction of the so-called "brain trust." Tremendous publicity was given to the utterance of Dr. Wirt. I suppose the country was stirred by that statement as probably by nothing else in recent weeks, unless, indeed, by the ruthless cancelation of the mail contracts, which was itself originally a tragic blunder, to be followed by blunder after blunder, until we have now reached the point where the aviation industry in America is practically destroyed, and a method for reestablishing the mail routes has been proposed by the Postmaster General that seems to have in it neither method nor reason.

No sooner had Dr. Wirt's statement been given publicity than prominent members of the Democratic Party over all the United States sprang to their feet attempting to indict Dr. Wirt. Prominent Members of Congress of both Houses have pounced upon him as if he were a criminal; and since there was no real answer to the charges he had made, they have sought to poison public opinion against Dr. Wirt himself by attempting to laugh off the charges, as if he were a common clown. That just simply cannot be done.

The reason there has been the tremendous interest in the charges made by Dr. Wirt is that the American people—I think a majority of them—have been thinking along the same lines, and Dr. Wirt has expressed in concrete terms the fears of the country. Because of that fact his charges have had wide attention, and will continue to have wide attention, regardless of whether or not the House committee may give him an opportunity to develop those charges. Many people here and throughout the country believe that the attempt has been to convict Dr. Wirt, when, as a matter of fact, it is the "brain trust" and their wild idiosyncrasies of government that are under fire. It is not Dr. Wirt who is under fire; it is the "brain trust." Let no one ever forget that for a moment.

Dr. Wirt is a public-spirited, patriotic American citizen who has a tremendous audience every time he speaks, who is known to every educator in the country, and who has done valuable constructive work in the educational world.

That there is much ground for the Wirt charges nobody can deny; that the "brain trust", utterly without responsibility to the people, functions behind closed doors, and is therefore invisible, everybody knows. That the Government should function in the open and in plain view of the people is also a conservative statement. Let the country be vigilant. We need no dictator in America. Representative government should be restored in this Republic before it is everlastingly too late.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE FEDERAL FISCAL SITUATION—ADDRESS BY VIRGIL JORDAN

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered on April 5, 1934, before the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York by Virgil Jordan, president of the National Industrial Conference Board, on Some Aspects of the Federal Fiscal Situation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOME ASPECTS OF THE FEDERAL FISCAL SITUATION

I am glad to have this opportunity to draw your attention to certain features of the fiscal situation and program of the Federal Government which are usually ignored, minimized, or confused in current discussion of special developments in Federal policy that are relatively unimportant in themselves. Much emphasis was recently put, for instance, upon the dispute between the President and Congress over the independent offices appropriation bill, as though this dispute involved a fundamental issue of major significance. It really concerned only a difference of about some $80,000,000, and probably arose out of a misunderstanding or accidental confusion in handling the bill between the Executive and the party leaders in Congress rather than out of a conflict over a question of basic principle. Likewise, at the moment, a great deal of artificial excitement is being aroused over the refunding of the fourth Liberty bonds on terms favorable to the Treasury and with a $10,000,000 saving in interest. as though this event were an indication of a fundamentally sound credit position for the Federal Government. In such incidents the underlying actualities of the situation and the basic implications of Federal fiscal policies are overlooked.

We are accustomed to look at the Federal fiscal situation in terms of an ordinary budget in which the actual expenditures for operating the Federal Government are balanced against regular revenue income. But it is no longer possible or realistic to consider the financial operations of the Federal Government in this fashion. The days of simple straightforward budget balancing in our Federal bookkeeping are gone, probably forever.

The change that has taken place is more than a mere matter of nomenclature, under which deficits are disguised by a distinction between an ordinary and an extraordinary Budget or between regular and emergency expenditures. As a matter of fact, the figures in the financial statements of the Federal Government no longer lend themselves to simple analysis in this way. Like most of the data being given out by the Federal Government today, they are misleading except to those who have the patience and knowledge necessary to understand what they really mean; and in this respect it would require a superaccountant to untangle and translate them into terms intelligible to people accustomed to the financial statements of private business.

It is not too much to say that the Federal Government is keeping its books and rendering reports of its operations in ways which the Federal Trade Commission would not allow any private corporation to use under the new Securities Exchange Regulation Act. Under this act corporation executives would be liable to very severe penalties if they kept their stockholders and the general public as much in the dark as the average citizen or holder of Government securities is today regarding the actual business and investment activities of the Federal Government.

At present there are embraced within the financial machinery and operations of the Federal Government numerous agencies with more or less independent processes of financing. The present Federal administration involves an elaborate apparatus of wheels within wheels, with holding companies, investment trusts, banking and credit agencies, separate taxing agencies, and forms of Federal income or receipts other than tax revenue.

For example, the business of bribing farmers to curtail production, carried on by the Agricultural Administration, is financed out of revenue from a series of special processing taxes, but all this income and expenditures are included in the ordinary Budget of the Federal Government. There are several banking and investment agencies with power to raise funds independently of the Treasury, to make loans, and buy and sell securities, separately from the regular financial operations of the Federal Government. There are several corporations with the customary Delaware charters empowered to go into any kind of business and to manage their revenues and expenditures independently of Treasury operations and without liability of the Federal Government.

In such a picture the ordinary fiscal operations of the Federal Government which we were accustomed to consider in the past in judging its financial position have become a subordinate part, so that usual tests of fiscal soundness can no longer be applied to the Federal financial statements. It can fairly be said that all these new features of the accounts of the Federal Government and its financial operations make our Federal securities perhaps the most speculative of all securities now on the market, although, except for State and municipal issues they are the one class exempt from the drastic regulation that is being attempted in recent legislation to protect the investor.

In saying this I am not referring to the familiar fact that the Federal Government has been engaged in extensive speculative operations in the gold market by which it has acquired a large paper profit, and that with this paper profit it is empowered to manipulate or support the value of its own securities by large-scale pool operations. In this apparently paradoxical statement there are more fundamental considerations involved, and it is to these that I wish particularly to invite your attention today.

The first and most fundamental fact which we must bear in mind in studying the financial situation of the Federal Government is that the Federal fiscal system has developed into a vast machinery for the redistribution of private wealth and income and the extension of national socialism or State capitalism. The Federal fiscal machinery is no longer merely a means of financing the running operations of the Federal Government, but is now an instrument for the reconstruction of our economic and social system.

This is to be seen in two important developments which have been under way since 1930. The first is the vast increase in the proportion of the national income and of the national savings which is being drawn off and distributed or spent through governmental channels; and second, the large proportion of private-capital funds and bank credit which are now being invested or which it is planned to invest in public or private enterprise through agencies of the Federal Government, as a result of Federal policies which have closed the private capital market, discouraged direct private investment, and practically absorbed the banking system and the banking resources of the country into governmental use. These two developments, taken in conjunction with other economic policies of the Federal Government, constitute a silent and steady process of socialization of our entire economic system which is already far advanced.

Few people realize the extent to which this process has gone. According to preliminary estimates of the conference board in 1933, about a third of the total national income produced was taken and distributed in governmental channels, including Federal and all other governmental agencies; and this year it is safe to say that about 40 percent of the total national income produced is being used in this way. Moreover, since 1929, or in the past 4 years, the Federal Government alone, through the cumulative Federal deficit, has absorbed about twice as much of the new private savings and bank credit of the Nation available for investment as have been absorbed by all private industry and business. In the past 2 years practically all the new private savings and bank credit available have been absorbed in financing Government deficits since the amount of new investment in private industry and business enterprise has been negligible. Whether you like it or not, the fact is that this situation represents a very advanced stage of State socialism, and it is, in my opinion, futile to attempt to understand the Federal fiscal operations in any other sense than as an elaborate machinery operating to that end.

To see the picture more clearly let me summarize briefly some of the significant figures involved in the financing of the new deal as it stands at the present. Taking all of the agencies involved, with their appropriations, authorized borrowing powers and commitments to date, the conference board estimates that the new-deal program, so far as it has gone, implies expenditures and investments of the Federal Government aggregating $15,000,000,000. Of this aggregate the total of outright relief expenditures, which are not intended to be repair, amounts to $5,700,000,000, and the total involved in the investment program amounts to somewhat more than $9,000,000,000.

Of the relief expenditures, those for direct unemployment relief so far appropriated amount to about $2,200,000,000. The Federal Government has already actually spent approximately a billion and a quarter for this purpose. About a third of the appropriations for Public Works projects were allocated to other purposes, leaving a little over $2,000,000,000 for public construction loans and expenditures, of which all has been allotted but only about $350,000,000 have actually been spent so far on construction.

The major credit and investment agencies, which are the Farm Credit Administration, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in the aggregate have resources of about $9,000,000,000, which is equivalent to about a quarter to a fifth of the total bank resources of the United States. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has almost unlimited powers for the application of credit in every field, of course, is the largest financial institution, bank, or investment trust ever known, with lending resources more than twice those of the largest bank in the world.

These general figures leave out of account the potential financial operations of other special corporations I have mentioned which have really unlimited powers of using funds in any field of business, for buying and selling commodities, land, real-estate construction, or what not, and which will operate with a very nominal working capital and without any direct financial responsibility on the part of the Federal Government.

By the middle of next year if all of the commitments and projects involved in this structure of Federal expenditure and investment are carried out the cumulative deficit built up since 1930, or in the past 5 years, will approximate $15,000,000,000. This amount represents a diversion of an average of $3,000,000,000 of private savings and bank credit annually into expenditure and investment by the Federal Government during this 5-year period. This was about the annual average of new capital funds raised by domestic private corporations for productive use during the years preceding 1929, so that it may fairly be said that the Federal financial program has involved essentially the principle of replacing normal private capital investment by public investment and expenditure during this period.

Fortunately, the Federal Government is at present in a very favorable position to pursue this policy. As a result of revaluation it has a large fund for supporting the value of its securities in the market. It has practically taken over the Federal Reserve System as its security-distributing agency, and it has shut off the private-capital market so as to force private savings into Government securities. Finally, by maintaining for public consumption the old-fashioned superstition of balancing the ordinary budget it has met the requirements of the ordinary standards for a favorable Federal securities market. As matters stand at the moment Federal securities are not only a good short-term investment, but they are in fact almost the only investment possible. Ordinary revenue, which now includes the specially allocated processing taxes, is running ahead of ordinary expenditures and the rate of emergency expenditure and investment for this fiscal year will be far below the Budget estimate. But this picture, while superficially reassuring from a short-term point of view, is much more problematical in the long run.

This brings me to the second point that deserves emphasis in this connection, which is that this Federal fiscal machinery and its operation are not developments apart from the administration program as a whole. This total program must be kept in mind in judging the value of Federal securities as a long-term investment. The present fiscal machinery and operations of the Federal Government are essentially only the financial side of an almost complete system of Government policies supported by an elaborate and closely integrated legislative structure, all having the effect of gradually enforcing the nationalization of productive wealth and the operation of productive enterprises by Federal agencies.

Several weeks ago I described in another address how this process is already far advanced in the field of railroad transportation as a result of the comprehensive bureaucratic operation of the railroads and the destruction of a private-capital market for them, which together have led to a considerable measure of governmental investment and will probably lead within the next 6 years to complete Government ownership. The same process is at work in other industries and even in agriculture today. It may safely be said that for all practical purposes the effective direction and management of American industry has already been taken out of the hands of private management and American industry as a whole is rapidly being forced into the position in which it will become increasingly dependent upon Government for its capital requirements.

The analysis of this process is a long story for which there is no time on this occasion. It has been told piecemeal by a few objective observers who have studied the underlying forces at work during the past year, but we are only beginning to see the picture as a whole now. The principal elements or steps in the process are these:

(1) The increasingly direct and detailed determination of wages, prices, production profits, labor relations for all industries, including agriculture, by agencies of the Federal Government. This stage is rapidly nearing completion under the organization of the N.R.A., the A.A.A., the I.C.C., and several other alphabetical bureaus. It involves not merely the code system and the expending machinery for direct control of agricultural production, but also the special tariff and foreign-trade control powers to be granted the Executive in the bill now going through Congress. Especially important is a means of direct pressure upon private enterprise, although not very largely used as yet, is the power of direct governmental competition with private enterprise implicit in many of the Federal financial agencies. The net effect of all these elements in this first stage of the process is to speed up the dissipation of capital in private enterprise and to discourage new private investment in expectation of profit.

(2) The second stage is to put a damper on new investment by sabotaging managerial initiative through direct Federal control of financial policies of private corporate enterprise. Except for the investigation and publication of corporation executive salaries, which was a crude attempt to employ public opinion as a weapon for such control, it has not been attempted directly but indirectly through the provisions of the Securities Act and the Securities Exchange Regulation Act, in which control of the security market and protection of investors was used as a disguise for direct Federal control of corporation finance.

(3) This stage is accompanied or closely followed by the direct closing of the private capital market. This is involved in the Securities Act and the Stock Exchange Control Act as well as in direct prohibition of foreign lending.

(4) The next phase, which is already largely developed, is the substitution of governmental financing for private financing of enterprise. Many of the new deal agencies involve this principle, but its largest applications are still to be developed. A system of Federal loans to industry, particularly for stimulation of the capital-goods industries, is under way, and it is probable that the pay-roll tax provided for in the Wagner bill now under consideration, and which will involve an accumulation of an independent reserve fund of about a billion and a half dollars a year, will evolve into a system of direct forced Federal subsidies of industrial pay rolls as a basis for allocating employment and for other types of loans to private business.

(5) Finally, to provide the essential basis for a system of state capitalism it has already been necessary practically to nationalize our banking structure. So far this has taken the form of converting the private banking system largely into an adjunct or agency of governmental financing. Our banking system at present has become merely a means for mobilizing private individual and business bank deposits for financing Government deficits. This is reflected in the fact that over the past year practically the entire increase in loans and investments of member banks of the Federal Reserve System has taken place in holdings of Government securities.

From this description of the process that is at work I hope you will not have the impression that I am implying anything in the nature of a deliberate plan or conspiracy on the part of any individual or group. What is happening is not a question of anybody's intentions but the logical consequence or inevitable effect of a series of measures or steps that may or may not be parts of a conscious or consistent program. During the past 10 months I have been trying objectively to explain the inherent implications and inevitable outcome of these measures and policies and the underlying ideas that are involved in them in order to indicate how, in such a process, once set in motion by powerful political forces, one thing leads inevitably to another and each step compels a successive step which carries us farther toward the end. We have been carried along this road to state capitalism or socialism by a curious combination of circumstances, mostly accidental, which I need not discuss here.

Perhaps the most important of these circumstances has been the widespread absence of any real understanding among business men themselves of the nature of the system of private enterprise under which we have been living and by which this country has developed in the past. In my opinion, private enterprise is being undermined in this country and our economic system is being socialized under our eyes today, mainly as a consequence of the mistaken conceptions of its nature among the men who are responsible for the management of our industries. We must remember that it is mainly the American business man who has been so enthusiastic about the code system and has demanded increasing governmental intervention in business and regimentation for regulation of competition, and indeed it is the farmer himself who has insisted upon the regimentation of agriculture. Not all—if, indeed, any—of the most influential and effective devotees of communism are to be found in the Capital.

We are now becoming more aware of some of the implications of this process, thanks largely to the somewhat whimsical episode of the schoolmaster from Gary, Ind. But if you will excuse my pessimism, I must say that I am afraid that our outcries of surprise and indignation at his alarms and our talk of plots and conspiracies and revolutions will not avail us much in this situation. The fact is that we ourselves have set up, under the legislation that has been adopted and the agencies that have been established, almost a complete system of State socialism or Federal capitalism in this country. We have started it going in full force, and the logic of history tells us that we cannot unravel this system and destroy it as rapidly or as easily as we have set it up.

We must realize that behind what has happened in the United States there are very powerful forces at work which have their source outside our own situation. In this accidental revolution that has occurred here we have been caught in a world-wide process of economic, social, and moral disintegration which is reflected in the Bolshevizing of almost every country since the war. All that we can do, I believe, is to try to understand more clearly and realistically what has happened and is happening to us, examine its implications more closely, and attempt to operate the system that we have so suddenly established for ourselves more carefully and intelligently so as to prevent it becoming altogether European and alien in its outlines and ideals. I regard what has occurred in the United States during the past year as perhaps the greatest catastrophe in the history of civilization, and certainly the most profound that has happened to us in America. Accidentally and unconsciously in this catastrophe much of the essential and unique virtues of the American system have been destroyed, but perhaps we still have a chance to preserve some of those essential elements and to foster and protect some of the force of those indispensable energies of individual effort and responsibility that have brought the United States to the high level of economic development that we have reached. But to do this will require all of the intelligence, knowledge, and courage that we can command among that part of our population to whom these fundamental American ideals and principles still mean something, and who are willing to sacrifice for them all considerations of expediency and immediate self-interest.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 13) to authorize the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the special committee appointed to investigate air- and ocean-mail contracts, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 5075. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended; and

H.R. 8471. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following joint resolution and acts:

On April 20, 1934:

S.J.Res. 70. Joint resolution to provide for the reappointment of John C. Merriam as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

On April 23, 1934:

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.; and

S. 3296. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala.", approved January 15, 1927.

On April 24, 1934:

S. 828. An act to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my remarks of yesterday were aimed at putting on the air brakes.

To bring up to the instant the points made yesterday, it is sufficient to say—

That evidence was referred to which tended to show that there was no cause and no excuse for cancelation of the air-mail contracts;

That the charge of collusion and fraud wholly failed for the lack of any ingredients of fraud or collusion;

That the alleged illegality of extensions in time were seen to be not illegal, but were directly authorized by law;

That the transformation from contracts into certificates was not arbitrary, as claimed, but was accomplished with the consent of the operators and for the benefit of the Government;

That the meetings to consider pioneering equities, and to employ the method of extensions and consolidations, rather than the method of bidding, to revamp the air-mail map, were free from collusion and fraud, were in harmony with the law and the policy of Congress, were ratified by Postmaster General Farley, and, in fact, were employed by him for a similar purpose;

That these meetings resulted in disagreement and therefore were without collusion;

That the bidding was not limited, save as it was limited by law and by the economic interests of the bidders;

That competitive bidding is a myth, more or less, where independence of each other in the great transcontinental routes and well-balanced competition in operation is sought, and that all did bid who desired to bid and who were qualified to bid, and that no operator was excluded from bidding by force, by bribery, or by agreement;

That the condemnation of officials of Government who had accomplished a great good for the public was without notice, without trial, without confrontation of witnesses, without separation and specification of charges and of persons charged, and solely by the might of official fiat; and

That the constitutional right of due process of law, the statutory obligation of notice, hearing, and damages, the policy of Congress expressed at only the last session, all were violated, and a great mass of honorable citizens were attainted by the might of official decree.

This morning I intend to point out the testimony and the record which shows beyond question that the objective of this cancelation was selfish and was not in the public interest; that groups of operators who did not have air-mail contracts, which were not in existence at the time of these events about which complaint is heard, working separately and jointly upon various branches of the Government, kept up their propaganda and pressure, using political influence for their purpose, until cancelation, without notice and hearing, was accomplished.

When this is done, this will have finished the case from our point of view, for it will have proven the evil significance economically, politically, and socially of permanent legislation passed at this time without restoration of the status quo.

I first call attention to the record of hearings of November 12, 1930, relating to the Post Office appropriation bill before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, at page 149. I refer to this record in order to prove beyond question that Representative BYRNS, of that committee, a committee of which he was not then chairman, but of which he afterward became chairman, construed the power to make extensions and consolidations in exactly the same way Postmaster General Brown construed it, and that he disagreed with the opinion, if that opinion was given the meaning that was asserted before our special committee, which meaning, by the way, I claim is a distortion of the Comptroller General's opinion. The first section of it was read by Mr. BYRNS:

> The Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

After he had read that, several Members of the House debated the meaning of the Comptroller General's opinion relating to extensions and finally Mr. BYRNS said:

> I read section 7 a while ago. It seems to me that it clearly and unequivocally gives the right to the Postmaster General to extend or consolidate. I do not care whether the Comptroller General says to the contrary or not. If the English language means anything, it means that.

This was November 12, 1930. One of the purposes of referring to that record today is to remind Senators that the McNary-Watres Act and this section of it had become law April 29, 1930, and many of the events about which complaint is now made had occurred and the groundwork for all the attacks which have been made upon the administration of that law was already laid and the issue, the identical issue which is now made with respect to extensions and the power to use them for connecting up the transcontinental routes, was then made; and further, to show that the question was free from political color.

At that time these Democratic Members of the other House took exactly the same position the Republican Postmaster General took, and the question was free from politics. It has been my desire and the desire of my associates on the special committee to keep it so if it was possible to do so.

The amendment which is under discussion in connection with this debate has not as yet been offered, but has been printed and laid upon the table, and will be offered later. The amendment is designed to take the whole matter out of politics, to postpone the consideration of permanent legislation until such time as we may enter upon it with all the facts and information that a special investigation ought to bring out and at a time when all of the gas and smoke has blown away and we can calmly and deliberately pass upon permanent legislation which will not be subject to a hasty decision here.

The next item in the record is correspondence from Mr. Braniff to a Mr. Williams. I refer to the transcript of hearings before the special committee at page 8549. Here is a letter to Mr. Williams, of the Wedell-Williams Air Line, which is located down in Texas. This letter is dated July 11, 1931:

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: There was held in Kansas City yesterday, July 10, a meeting of all passenger air lines in this territory which operate without mail subsidy. The meeting was attended by the following gentlemen:

Mr. E. D. Dennis, Wedell-Williams Air Service.
Mr. Walter F. Halley, Rapid Air Transport.
Mr. George Halsey, Midland Air Express.
Mr. Landis, Wyoming-Montana Airways.
Mr. T. H. McKee, Wedell-Williams Air Service.
Mr. McDuffey, Bowen Air Lines.
Mr. A. F. Pyle, Western Air Service.
Mr. Ray Schraeder, Braniff Airways, Inc.
Mr. Tuxhorn, Tuxhorn Airlines.
Mr. Paul Braniff, Braniff Airways, Inc.

Senators will identify the names of some of these gentlemen and their air lines with some of those who have bid on the advertisements for temporary bids, especially Braniff Airways, Inc.

The meeting was called to discuss the organization of all nonsubsidized lines into a group whose immediate objective will be the correction of unfair practices and discrimination in the administration of the Air Mail Act and in the distribution of the air-mail subsidy.

It was unanimously agreed that an association of independent lines should be formed without delay.

A definite plan of action to obtain mail contracts for member lines and to reduce the present mail payments being made to the existing contractors was detailed by E. W. Savage, who has been associated with the Ludington Lines in an advisory capacity.

For the past 6 months, Mr. Savage has been engaged in extensive research into the whole air-mail situation. He has developed a mass of facts which, if made public, might prove very embarrassing to the present postal administration, and most effective in obtaining satisfaction for the independent operators. He has set up an organization, including G. P. Putnam, New York publisher, and Capt. J. J. Railey, public relations counsel, who handled the details of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition, which organization offers its services to member lines.

The services offered are in the nature of two sections: First, publicity; second, representation before congressional committees. A thorough publicity campaign will be launched through every medium—newspapers, magazines, radio—to inform the public mind correctly as to the equities of the independent lines, and as to the present inefficiency, waste, and favoritism being practiced in the Air Mail Service.

In addition to conducting national and local publicity, Mr. Savage offers to present before the proper congressional committees a brief setting forth in detail the interests and the rights of each member line, together with the statement of how these rights have been violated. He further proposes to assist in drafting legislation which will obtain satisfaction for all independent lines.

It was the unanimous opinion of all present at yesterday's meeting that only through such a campaign of public education and aggressive, unified action can the nonmail lines remove the oppression under which they are now laboring. It was also the opinion of those present that Mr. Savage's organization is eminently qualified to conduct the suggested campaign to a successful end.

Because of the necessity of immediate action in this matter it was decided to call a meeting of all interested lines to be held at the Hotel President, Kansas City, Mo., Friday, July 17, at 10 a.m.

I have been asked by the lines represented at yesterday's meeting to urge that you send delegates to the forthcoming gathering who are fully empowered to act for your respective companies, both in the matter of forming a permanent association of independent lines and in contracting for the service of Mr. Savage's organization.

Please advise me by wire who will represent your company and the time of his arrival in Kansas City.

Respectfully yours,

PAUL R. BRANIFF.

Senators are about to hear the name of Braniff throughout the record. He took a leading part. There were two Braniffs. The writer of the letter is Paul R. Braniff, manager of the Braniff Airways, Inc. His brother, T. E. Braniff, also appeared in this picture, and was president of another organization which was formed immediately after the election in 1932. The election having occurred on November 7, 1932, T. E. Braniff was out with his prospectus for the organization of another association with a long name on the 10th day of November, 3 days afterward, and directly, expressly connected the organization of that association with the new deal.

I now call your attention to a letter of July 18, 1931, from Mr. Braniff to Mr. Williams, which appears at page 8554 of the transcript:

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: As a result of the conference of Independent Passenger Operators at the Hotel President, Kansas City, July 17, to which you were invited to send a representative, it was voted unanimously to form an association to further the interests of the nonsubsidized air lines.

I suspend reading long enough to call attention to the objective of that organization, and to point out that its objective was not the public interest but was purely selfish. It appears that the writer of that letter, Paul Braniff, was chosen temporary president, and he was empowered to have a charter drawn and to proceed with the incorporation under the name of the Passenger Air Line Operators' Association.

Among the lines represented at that meeting was the Century Air Line. Its importance will be seen in just a moment, when I refer to the records which succeeded this meeting. It will be observed, as we pass on, that this was the corporation of E. L. Cord, and that he was the original person to start an organization having for its objective the opening up to bids of all contracts—not extensions, not certificates, but all contracts—and in order to attain that objective he made a flat proposition to carry all the mail of the United States for 50 percent of what it was being contracted for at the time.

The item of cost has been from the beginning one of the implements used by these various societies and various companies to break into the contracts of the air-mail carriers and to try to take them away from them.

I say it was so then because it is significant of the fact that there occurred an investigation in 1932 which comprehended all and the identical charges which are made today, and which resulted in the committee finding no collusion or fraud, and no excessive, exorbitant charges.

So Mr. Cord's Century Air Line was present at that meeting. I will not weary the Senate by undertaking to state the names of all who were there, but they can readily be found in the transcript at pages 8555 and 8556. However, I will read an excerpt from pages 8556 and 8557, for the purpose of showing that the objective was a purely selfish one; that it was not in the public interest, but was for private accommodation. I quote:

There was further discussion, in detail, of the facts and the program as set forth in my previous letter to you. There was a unanimous agreement that the independent operators were in danger of being driven to the wall unless they banded together and asserted themselves as a group. It was also agreed that the first step was to obtain the membership application of every independent line.

I skip some and come to this statement on page 8557:

I most sincerely hope we can have your application in at once, whether you were represented at the meeting or not. The matter is vital to your continuance in business, and the time for successful action is short.

It will be observed, I suppose, that the objective was the continuance of the members in business. It was not the public interest.

I now refer to a letter of November 12, 1931, found in the transcript at page 8467. This was a letter signed by E. L.

Cord, addressed to Mr. L. D. Manning, dated November 12, 1931. I will not read it all; I will refer to that part which was not read by the chairman of the committee in examining the witness, as follows:

Senator AUSTIN. Did you hear anything about this which follows:

"I think also that we should make up our minds to get as many lines open and running as possible before that date, and that we should have a plan and solution of this situation for Requa to argue."

Did you hear anything about that?

Mr. DENNING. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Did you hear this?

"What little thought I have given to it at the moment leads me to believe that we should try to have all mail contracts thrown open for bidding."

Mr. President, that is significant. That was 1931. It was before the investigation made in 1932. It was before the introduction of a bill in the House of Representatives empowering the Postmaster General to cancel the mail contracts without any cause, without any hearing, without any notice, and without any damages found. It was before the introduction in the Senate of the resolution by virtue of which the special committee is operating. It was before the adoption of the independent offices appropriation bill, which carried a rider authorizing the President of the United States to cancel these contracts upon notice, hearing, and damages.

This evidence in the record tends to show clearly that as early as 1931 the event of February 9, 1934, was in the minds and purpose of the men who were forming these organizations or societies, and that the objective of cancelation was not the public interest, but was their own private interest.

We should try to have all mail contracts thrown open for bidding—

Mr. Cord said on November 12, 1931. Of course, we know that that is just what was done.

Now, I call attention to a hearing before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, held February 1, 1932. It will be seen that we are following these events in chronology, so that they may easily and logically be understood and interpreted. In this meeting we find a reference to Mr. Cord at page 286:

The CHAIRMAN. This Cord Corporation, through its representatives, made a positive and definite statement to the committee that on both day and night flying they would take over all the lines that are now operated by the Government, foreign as well as domestic; that they would perform the same number of trips and make the same number of deliveries at approximately, they said, one half of what it is now costing the Government.

That is a familiar proposition, is it not? It will become more familiar as we pass through this record.

If that be true, and if the company has sufficient financial strength, as they claim they have, to guarantee the performance of the contracts, is there any reason why they should not be given that opportunity?

Ah, we have listened to that blandishing question many times in the last few days. We have heard on the Senate floor that all that was needed to protect the public, all that was needed in the public interest, was a bond, was assurance of the financial responsibility of the operator to answer to damages if he should fail to serve the public. But listen to the testimony of Postmaster General Brown, whose objective was constantly and always the public benefit.

Mr. BROWN. Well, of course, we have entered into contracts with other people, contracts that practically run for 10 years from the time that they were made. I do not know of any way to get out of the contracts that we have. Then, the operation that our people carry on is a very substantially different operation than that that the Cord company has. The Cord company has been carrying a lot of passengers and has been doing some good work, but their planes are not equipped with two-way radio; they do not get the weather service; they pay their pilots only a fraction of what the regular air-mail pilots are paid; and there are a great many differences in operation.

I have some notion about what it costs all these operators to fly a mile. For instance, we have two air-mail contractors who use the same equipment that Cord is using, according to them, and we have access to all their figures, and we know what it costs them to fly a mile. It costs them about 46 cents, and anybody who says that he can fly for 30 cents a mile with present-day equipment is, we think, mistaken about it. If they put on the two-way radio and the other aids to navigation, and their own weather reporting service, it is quite a different matter.

It is one thing, gentlemen, to have your whole operation confined to an airplane and a pilot, and it is another to set up a complete plant for flying.

That pictures to the rational mind a hazard besides damages in money. It shows that here was a Cabinet officer who had in mind the safety, the lives of the pilots who flew these planes, and the lives of the people of this country who became passengers on the air-mail routes. That is in decided contrast to the situation as we see it at the present instant under the specifications for carrying the mail during this period of collapse of a great industry under the hammer of Postmaster General Farley.

In that hearing not only did the item of cost come up, as it comes up before us today, but also the subject of extensions came up as an objection to the administration of the Air Mail Service by Postmaster General Brown. The policy of the Department was under fire in that committee. The chairman, at page 293 of the same hearing, propounded a question to Mr. Glover, who was the Second Assistant Postmaster General under Postmaster General Brown. This is a very significant testimony, because happening as it did it characterizes the report of the investigating committee of 1932 before that investigation was authorized or made. I read:

The CHAIRMAN. Another matter that perhaps you will want to refer to before we adjourn, since you cannot be here tomorrow, is that there have been some representations made to the committee about the failure of the Department to advertise for bids in connection with extensions, and so forth, of routes.

Does that not sound familiar? Is not that one of the principal defenses put up by Postmaster General Farley for cancelation? Is that not one of the things that he assigned as an ingredient of fraud? It is.

I continue to read:

It is claimed that certain air companies have not had an opportunity to bid on routes by reason of the policy of extensions which has been followed under the Watres Act, is it?

Mr. GLOVER. McNary-Watres Act.

The CHAIRMAN. It is claimed that these companies are not permitted to engage in the bidding, resulting, as they claim, in a loss to the Government.

That is very familiar; is it not?

What is the policy of the Department with reference to that?

Mr. BROWN. In all of our large operations—and there have been only two since I have been in the Department, the one from New York to Los Angeles and the one from Atlanta to Los Angeles—

Senators, identify those lines. One is the midtranscontinental route; the other is the southern transcontinental route, about which all this noise has been made relating to the alleged elimination of competitive bidding.

I continue to read:

We put them out on competitive bidding. We are taking advantage of the provisions of the Watres Act to piece out and complete certain systems. In every case we have done it, and we have been able by so doing to extend under the route certificate feature of the law that gives us control of the compensation. If we put it up to competitive bidding—

Now, notice this—

If we put it up to competitive bidding, we have to pay the low price, whatever anybody bids, and we cannot control it for 2 years in any way.

It is not possible to operate a short air line profitably. An airplane has to fly a certain number of miles a day, somewhere around 1,000, in order to get the full value out of the plane, and the line must be long enough to get that much out of the planes every day. There must be enough planes in use so that one is always in the shop; otherwise you would have your mechanics waiting for a plane to come in. There is a certain economic length to a line, and we have discovered that an operator who is losing money or who has not capital enough to put on what we regard as a first-class operation is a menace to the thing that we are trying to accomplish, which is to build up a commercial independent aviation industry. We look forward to the day when we will not have to pay a subsidy, when we will simply pay for the actual value of moving the mail as we pay the railroads now. Every time we cut our rate we are getting nearer to the point where we will pay merely for the service performed.

Now I skip over to page 295 and call attention to the answer of the Postmaster General, showing that he did not construe the opinion of the Comptroller General as being in opposition to his own opinion regarding the power of extension; and he based it not only on the text of the opinion, but on the conduct of the Comptroller General in making payments on every one of these extensions.

Mr. THATCHER. The suggestion was made here the other day that the Comptroller General had given an opinion adverse to that practice. What about this?

Mr. BROWN. That is not correct. He approved every one of them. He approved every single extension, and ultimately approved everything that the Department has done.

Now we come to a significant part of this hearing, which is recorded on page 315. Here is the scene of investigation. The committee is meeting there, and E. L. Cord's organization is represented there. That organization is advocating cancelation of all contracts and the substitution of E. L. Cord in the place of the contractors. That is the picture when Mr. ABERNETHY, a Representative from North Carolina, breaks out with this statement, which I read:

I do not know how long it will take. It may take a week or a month, but I intend to go fully into it.

Mr. GLOVER. What the chairman asked for I have clearly in mind, and you want the names of the officers and boards of directors of the companies carrying the domestic mail.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And a list of the bondholders also.

Mr. GLOVER. We do not have that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. You had as well sit down and give us all that information. I have a little inside information about it.

Mr. GLOVER. You are asking for that information with reference to the domestic air-mail companies?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I want to know all about this Air Mail Service.

Mr. GLOVER. I am perfectly willing to furnish any information you ask, but I want to get it straight.

There is the germ of investigation. According to my search of these records, that is the first time and occasion when any Member of the House suggested the idea. It will be noticed it was not formally suggested at that time, but, nevertheless, there was the thought of investigation. It will develop in this record as we proceed.

Now I will call attention to page 327 of the same hearings relating to the Government policy respecting extensions.

Mr. WOOD. * * * The Government could dictate the policy, just exactly like they do in reference to the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you have probably heard this before, but it is the claim of some of these men, some of these companies, that the policy now followed, even though you have nine contractors, tends to build up a monopoly in that it does not permit them, when they come along on these certificates of extension, to bid.

That is the same complaint, as will be observed, that we have here.

I realize, of course, that when you have an extension of a few hundred miles, as the Postmaster General said the other day, it is entirely impracticable to expect a company to go in there and fly a few hundred miles; it must be a route of sufficient length to justify the equipment, the attention, and everything that is required. But they claim that the very policy of the Department tends to create a monopoly in that they do not have an opportunity to present bids.

Of course, this was too early to characterize the then existing situation, the interpretation of power, the administration by Postmaster General Brown as fraudulent. All they were then pushing was the theory that conditions tended to create a monopoly; but the Senate will see how they advance and progress and gradually reach the point of audacity where they will charge collusion and fraud for these very same things which they were not dubbing as fraud at this early time. Of course, they complained about consolidations and the creation of large units rather than having a lot of small units under a strict Government policy.

This is what occurred, as shown at page 331 of the hearings:

Mr. THATCHER. Have you accepted any consolidation in order to cut down this great overhead?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; we have.

Mr. THATCHER. And with what result?

Mr. GLOVER. We have had good results. We have had a consolidation of fields; we have had a consolidation of radio facilities. We had in Cleveland an outstanding case where there is one main dispatching office.

Mr. THATCHER. What about a consolidation of companies?

That is the very thing that was accomplished by the payment of $1,400,000 for the property and goodwill of Safeways paid to Halliburton.

Mr. THATCHER. What about a consolidation of companies?

Mr. GLOVER. I should say that the consolidation of companies has gone just about as far as it can, so far as we are concerned. Of course, you must bear in mind that the Postmaster General cannot bring two companies together, and say, "Here, we want you to consolidate."

And that is why we find in this record an agreement in writing by the constituent companies that formed the great units that run from coast to coast and constitute the mid-transcontinental outfit and the southern transcontinental outfit. It has to be done by agreement; it cannot be done by fiat.

Senators will observe, in passing, that no disapproval is expressed by this great committee, not even a complaint is made, not even a criticism of the policy relating to consolidations and its effect on operating costs.

Now, I refer to page 359 of the same hearing, where Mr. Young, attorney for the Cord corporation, is testifying. It will be recalled that the Cord corporation was not in existence when the meetings were held in 1930, and that when the advertisements were published for the creation of the transcontinental route he could not bid; he did not want to bid; he was not a sufferer by anything that took place at all. His only objective was to get away from the contractors their contracts and to take them over unto himself. This attorney on the witness stand is being examined. It has appeared that the Comptroller General has approved the accounts of these companies to whom extensions and sublettings were made. And the chairman says to this lawyer:

Why does he approve their accounts?

Mr. YOUNG. Well, as I understand it, up to the present time there has not been a protest filed.

Remember that, because it is very significant. This meeting was in February 1932, almost 2 years after the event about which they are again complaining, and for the same objective and reason.

Well, as I understand it, there has not been a protest filed.

And here is the answer, here is the quick retort made by that great committee to this lawyer. Mr. Thatcher says:

You do not have to file a protest with the Comptroller General.

Here is an officer of the United States whose term of office is 16 years. He is outside of politics; he is outside of threats of removal; he is outside of any influence that may divert him from the straight and narrow way of his certain duties. One of them is to act as watchdog of the Treasury, and it is his business and his objective always to guard that Treasury against payment upon illegal contracts, and he does not need a protest from a citizen in order to make him perform that duty. Mr. Thatcher tells this lawyer so in the following language:

Mr. THATCHER. You do not have to file a protest with the Comptroller General.

The CHAIRMAN. If he thinks they are illegally made, he ought not to approve their accounts.

And Mr. Young then admits it, and says:

I do not think he should, either.

Again, later on the same page, Mr. Thatcher says:

Mr. THATCHER. The law does not contemplate extensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Because it seems to me to be the duty of the Comptroller General not to approve these accounts if he knew they were illegally made.

Mr. YOUNG. I should think that would be his duty.

When the accounts come in annually under the law and the regulations of the Postmaster General and are scrutinized by the Postmaster General's Department and by Comptroller General McCarl, repeatedly month after month after month, 12 months in the year for 5 years payments are made on these contracts, and the Comptroller General never questions their validity. What is the result? It is his duty not to pay if there is anything irregular about them. It cannot be said that he did not know about them, for he had studied the whole question; it had been up for consideration by him several times, and he was familiar with it. More than that, Postmaster General Farley, the man who arrogates to himself the right to pronounce judgment without trial here, declared positively, affirmatively, in the first month of his incumbency in office, that the Postmaster General did have the right to make these extensions.

He so declared in writing, and he sent his opinion to the Comptroller General, and asked him this question: Since it is true—I am not quoting literally, of course—since it is true that the Postmaster General has this authority to make extensions, has he not the authority to cancel extensions? He found out long afterward, July 24, 1933, that the Postmaster General could not cancel the extensions for the purpose of opening them up to bids; and that was the only objective which they had. They could satisfy the independent operators only if by cancelation they could open the routes up for bids, because their objective was not saving the Government money; that could be done under the fiat of the Postmaster General, who had the power to reduce rates. That was not their objective. Their objective was to acquire the property of others and to do it through the arbitrary exercise of the power of cancelation. They were at work in November 1932 trying to induce this great committee of the House to adopt that theory, and Senators are my witnesses that the chairman and members of that committee were steadily saying to the Cord corporation, "These extensions were within the power of the Postmaster General to make. You cannot cancel these extensions. He had the power to make them." The Cord corporation's lawyer said, "Oh, but they were illegal." The committee said, "No; the Comptroller General has been paying on them from month to month ever since they were made. Every payment is a ratification of them. Every payment is a clean bill of health for them, and this is accepted by the committee." That is the effect of the record.

The next thing to which I wish to refer is one of the most important bits of testimony in the record. What I shall read is taken from a written statement dated January 28, 1932, to Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., from the Cord Corporation, the company which was sending emissaries out through the country. The record shows that two men went to Williams and invited him to join the society which Cord was forming in order to break into the contracts, not in the public interest but solely for the benefit of the members of that society.

Here they are, after having testified before the committee, filing with the committee, this written attack. Here is the best evidence obtainable in any court of justice or before any committee of investigation of what was the intention of these operators, of their identity, of the fact that they themselves had nothing of which to complain, because they were not in existence at the time the events occurred about which they complain, and of the fact that they are interested in cancelation for the purpose of obtaining other men's contracts.

Listen to this and see if it is not true beyond any question of doubt at all that their objective was cancelation in 1932, and it is significant that that objective is connected through the record to the final accomplishment of that result. I quote:

> We believe that the Congress should direct the Postmaster General to immediately cancel all contracts and extensions of contracts or consolidations of routes which have been made by his Department without advertising for competitive bids. A number of the extensions which he has made without competitive bidding have been hereinabove listed. But all extensions or consolidations of routes should be—> examined into and wherever it appears an extension has been granted without competitive bidding we believe the same should be canceled and that the Postmaster General should be required to immediately advertise for bids to cover each particular route where a cancelation has been made. We also believe that two transcontinental air-mail contracts which were awarded in 1931 should be investigated with reference to—

Listen to this—

With reference to what? Notice with reference to what, because this characterizes the present investigation. This proves beyond any doubt what actuated the Senate of the United States in beginning and conducting an investigation, and what its objective was and what stirred up the whole awful mess here:

> We also believe that two transcontinental air-mail contracts, which were awarded in 1931, should be investigated with reference to whether or not the advertisement for bids was so conditioned that it was not a true and fair opportunity for public bidding. These routes are A.M.-33, Atlanta, Ga., to Los Angeles, Calif., and A.M.-34, New York City to Los Angeles, Calif. Should it be further found that the provisions of the law have been violated in connection with awarding any contracts or extensions by the Postmaster General, there would be no difficulty in replacing the present service by submitting for public bids at this time all routes which might be canceled.

Mr. FESS. Who was the witness?

Mr. AUSTIN. This is a declaration by the Cord corporation, in writing. It is signed, "Lindel L. Young, attorney for the Cord corporation." He concludes with this significant piece of selfishness:

> Our company is in a position to bid for all of these routes as well as all air-mail routes in the United States, and would do so at a much lower rate than the present cost to the Government, as hereinabove stated.

There, in black and white, is the origin of cancelation. Cancelation for the public good? No! Cancelation in order that E. L. Cord's corporation could fly the mail throughout all the United States. That was in November 1932.

I invite attention to page 407 of the same record, which shows that the policy of Congress, as expressed by that great committee, was directly in line and consistent with the interpretation of the law made by Postmaster General Brown:

> Mr. WOOD. The trouble with the whole business is that they got started wrong by allowing the Postmaster General to put in lines as he pleased, without any regard to Congress.

Here is the complaint, it will be seen.

> They have gone ahead and put in extensions instead of doing the things that many of us think they should have done. Instead of putting in these extensions, it would have been better, probably, to have taken care of these services.
>
> Mr. LANKFORD. I think you heard the Postmaster General say yesterday that this was a necessary route and one that was badly needed. I appreciate this opportunity to appear.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. I think it should be said, following Mr. Wood's suggestion—because that is not the fault of the Appropriations Committee, which was presided over so ably by Mr. Wood for a number of years—that that is a question of legislation. The right—

Observe this significant statement—

> The right to make these extensions has been given to them by legislation which does not come from this committee, which, as you know, is not a legislative committee.

There is no question about that language, and it was uttered by a Democratic chairman.

I now refer to page 408, where the Representative from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] again comes to the front with the suggestion of investigation of air-mail contracts. This hearing was in February 1932. Later it will be seen that there was an investigation, and that it was based on identically the same charges that had been made here, and proved to be unfounded.

> Mr. BRANIFF. May I make this observation while you gentlemen are here: I have some information that has come to me from one of those big companies, a responsible company, and I think this committee ought to investigate it. I am informed that some of these transcontinental lines have offered to carry some of this mail without any cost whatsoever, but they have been denied that privilege. I do not think they would be willing to come before the committee, as a general proposition, but I think that if we took time enough to go into this domestic air-mail situation we could find enough inside of it to justify a re-set-up of the whole business.

What was his objective at that time?—

> We could probably take care of Mr. Lankford, Mr. Larsen, Mr. Wright, and these other gentlemen here.

That is his objective.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say this: I will be glad to join you, and I am sure that every member of the subcommittee will be glad to join you, in any resolution that you may propose for an investigation; but we have this Treasury-Post Office bill to report. An investigation such as you indicate would take 3 or 4 months. You cannot tell, when you get into an investigation of that sort, how much time will be required, and we have got to get this bill out. We have to prepare and report it.

Now, note this significant language:

Then, besides, we are not a legislative committee, and we cannot change the law, no matter what we find. We cannot change the law, and the law provides that the Postmaster General may make these extensions and give these certificates. That is a matter of administration. We might investigate here until doomsday, and we could not change the law. We have no jurisdiction to report legislation, unless we get a resolution authorizing us to do it. I will be glad to join you and any other member in investigating it, because I agree with you that there ought to be an investigation, not only of this service but of the ship subsidy.

Mr. President, we know that there was an investigation by that very committee. There was introduced in the House a bill which, if enacted into law, would have carried out the objective of the independent operators, led by E. L. Cord and Mr. Braniff, namely, cancelation of all the contracts and turning over the business to the independents.

I now refer to the air-mail hearings before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in March 1932. On page 2 the bill will be found. It is very significant that the Congress refused to pass it. The dropping, after an investigation, of all efforts to get this bill passed, and the subsequent passage of the rider to the independent offices bill, is a declaration of policy by Congress that no contract of a citizen of this Government ought to be canceled until after notice, hearing, and a provision for damages—a declaration of a policy which was broken and transgressed and trampled in the dust by a Cabinet officer in February 1934.

Mr. President, I read that bill, omitting the formal parts of it:

The Postmaster General is hereby directed to cancel all contracts, route certificates, extensions, or consolidations of either, for the transportation of air mail both in the United States and foreign countries which have been awarded by the Postmaster General without advertising publicly. The Postmaster General is hereby directed to advertise publicly within 60 days for bids to transport the air mail by aircraft on all mail routes covered by all such canceled contracts, route certificates, or extensions of either as provided herein. The Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to designate all contracts, route certificates, and/or extensions and/or consolidations of either which have been awarded without advertising bids.

That bill was before the House in March 1932. That was early, as will be noticed. It was 2 years before cancelation was effected, but the objective of these men is revealed by it. Their objective was cancelation. Senators will notice the absence in this bill of any provision for notice or hearing or damages, or any of the provisions which went into the subsequent legislation.

On that bill there was a hearing, as well as a hearing on another bill, to which it is not necessary to refer. I refer to this particular item of evidence in order to show the reaction of labor to this movement, and to show that labor disapproved of this plan of the independents to take away contracts from responsible operators who were able to give them employment regularly and to pay them suitable wages for their service. Here is the statement of Frank E. Ormsbee, representing the Air Line Pilots' Association, from which I read at page 21.

Mr. BRUNNER—

Who was the author of that bill—

A carpenter gets so much and a bricklayer gets so much, usually a union scale. I am wondering whether pilots have that.

Mr. ORMSBEE. No. The principal reason for the organization of the pilots was that there are independent lines which if they are encouraged will set up practically what you might call cutthroat methods of competition that will lead to dangerous practices, such as competitive flying, men flying because they are hungry, and there will be general dissatisfaction in the ranks of the workers. At the present time the Air Line Pilots' Association is the only representative group in commercial aviation. We are not in a sense dictating any of the policies to any of the operators. We get along splendidly with most of them. We have no disagreements or arguments with them that have not been satisfactorily settled, with the exception of Mr. Cord. At the present time he has a bunch of pilots which he locked out in Chicago. He started them to work on a plea of economy, promising to give them an increase in salary after his company became a going concern. In other words, he asked them to accept a lower scale in the beginning, 40 percent lower than the average wage of pilots in other lines, with the understanding that when his concern had developed he would give an increase in pay. As a matter of fact, a bonus was offered, but I may say that the bonus was never paid.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Was there not testimony with respect to the company in which Mr. Braniff was interested to the effect that the pilots were paid only nominal amounts, and that they were obliged to sign a contract that they would not take out any indemnity insurance, or other provision of that kind?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is correct. A pilot appeared before the special investigating committee and testified to his own experience with the company. He was unable to collect his wages, and finally left the company because he could not do so. Afterward he was obliged to bring suit to recover his wages; and after he had left, employees of that company were forced, if they stayed in the employment if the company, to enter into a composition agreement in writing by which their wages were reduced to payments of $15 per week, and the payment of the rest of their compensation was dependent wholly upon whether the company, after paying all operating expenses, had anything left with which to pay them. This is one of the companies which has been so active in the scheduled Independent Operators' Association—a name I can never remember. I will call it "the society of the long name." This is one of the companies which maintained a lawyer in Washington throughout this period in order to reach the Post Office Department, committees of Congress, individual Senators and Congressmen, the special investigating committee, and even the N.R.A., with the object of cancelation. This is the company which undertook to say that it could fly the air mail at a cost of 15.2 cents a mile—this company which did not have the two-way radio system, which did not have copilots, which did not have the safety devices for flying by night and in fog, which did not have hangars and other ground equipment of its own, but rented them; this is the company which now appears here in Washington on this temporary bidding plan. Does it bid 15.2 cents a mile? Oh, no; it bids substantially the same price of which it was complaining, namely, 39 cents a mile.

It is interesting to have that coupled up with the testimony of Mr. Ormsbee with respect to Mr. Cord's corporation, because it will be observed as this record proceeds that these two companies, Cord's corporation and the Braniff corporation, were ringleaders in the organized propaganda which finally resulted in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

I now proceed to expose the purpose of these independents, which was cancelation. The investigation to which I am now referring was before the House Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Young, the attorney of E. L. Cord's company, is on the stand again, and Mr. LAMNECK is examining him. I refer to page 40:

Mr. LAMNECK. You are a lawyer?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. You know that the Government has contracts with these various interests now hauling mail, and some of them run for 10 years?

Mr. YOUNG. Those are the route certificates.

Mr. LAMNECK. They are contracts, are they not?

Mr. YOUNG. They are route certificates issued in lieu of a contract.

Mr. LAMNECK. In effect they are contracts?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; I think that would be the legal construction of their name.

Mr. LAMNECK. Are you advocating the cancelation of all contracts that have been made as extensions in the hope that you might, if they were readvertised for bids, secure these contracts? Is that your attitude?

Mr. YOUNG. The bill before your committee was introduced by Mr. MEAD, your chairman. I assume that is his hope.

It will be observed that, with customary evasion, this lawyer did not answer the question, but undertook to pass the buck to the chairman of the committee, who introduced the bill empowering the Postmaster General to effect their purpose, namely, cancel all contracts, without cause, without notice, without hearing, and without considering damages. He evaded the question and said, "I assume that is his hope"; that is, that Mr. Cord's company could get that contract and fly the mail for 50 percent of what it had previously cost the Government. That was his attitude.

Mr. LAMNECK. I am only trying to get your attitude.

Mr. YOUNG. Our attitude is that we will bid on any available air-mail route in the United States that is advertised for bid.

We heard a lawyer in our committee repeat that same answer to the same question, not in the identical language, but in meaning, at least a hundred times, in order to evade answering, and walk out and admit that their objective was cancelation for the purpose of obtaining the contracts for themselves.

I proceed with the reading:

Mr. LAMNECK. If this bill were passed it would cancel only the contracts that have this morning been called extensions; it would not affect the original contracts?

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know what the original contract is or what the extensions are. I have never seen one of these.

Mr. LAMNECK. How do you expect to get these contracts, if they are contracts, until they expire? How do you expect to get a chance to get them?

Mr. YOUNG. I think it is a pretty serious condition when the United States Government votes a subsidy of $20,000,000 a year to aid and assist the aviation industry, and no part of that is to be expended on perhaps the largest independent factor in the industry. I would not like to accept your statement that for 10 years we have no hope of bidding and participating in that subsidy.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOLIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, without taking issue with the Senator from Vermont, I should like to ask him if this is not a correct statement of the situation: The Senator from Vermont and many other Senators on both sides of the aisle are of the opinion that perhaps these contracts were not fraudulent, and therefore should not have been canceled. However, there are many others in the Chamber and in the administration who believe that the contracts were fraudulently entered into.

Acting upon the thought that the contracts were fraudulently entered into, the administration has abrogated them. Is it not, therefore, a fact that the air-mail companies whose contracts have been abrogated are in the position, as matters now stand, that there is no chance of their contracts being reinstated unless by the passage of the pending bill, which would give them the opportunity to rebid, and, if they were successful, to carry the mails once more? Is that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think that is correct in a way. If I may explain my answer, I feel that the action of the Postmaster General legally has not canceled anything. Those contracts are still in existence; they are valid and binding contracts. The contractors have no way of defending and proving that they are so. These are the type of contracts which cannot be canceled without cause. They are the type of contracts which can be defended by an injunction in an equity proceeding. The Government has dodged behind sovereignty in order to escape any trial in equity upon the question of whether it shall be estopped from cancelation. Nevertheless, until a judgment is handed down by a proper tribunal that these contracts are invalid for fraud or collusion, they stand valid and they are subsisting contracts today.

This debate is aimed at trying to persuade the Senate to adopt an amendment to the pending bill which will merely put the brakes on, and put the mail back on these lines under these contracts pending an investigation of the facts which will be thorough, and pending legislation by Congress for a permanent air-mail system. That is all there is to this debate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the Senator's position, and, as I said before, I am not taking issue with his view, but I am trying to reduce the matter to one of practicality.

As I understand the situation, the Post Office Department and the administration have taken the position that these contracts are fraudulent, and that therefore they should be abrogated.

So long as the administration adheres to that point of view, it occurs to me that there is no way in which these companies can prove that fraud was not present, and thereby have their contracts reinstated. Therefore, it seems to me that the option of one who might agree with the Senator, for example, is whether or not these companies shall be kept out entirely under the present status of the matter, or be permitted to bid once more under the bill now pending.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the amendment of which notice has been given should not be adopted, then the other proposed amendment, which has not as yet been offered, but which lies upon the table, might be considered. It provides a three-judge court for passing upon the very question to which the Senator from Maryland alludes. I realize the practical difficulties in our present situation, and I want the Senator from Maryland to understand there is involved in the position which we take something more than the contract itself. There is involved the question of whether the Congress can afford, as a matter of legislative policy, to ratify and treat as a sound method of government procedure the transactions which created this situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, then, in voting upon either one of the two amendments, on the one hand, those supporting the amendments would say that no fraud had been present, while on the other hand, those who did not support the amendments would say that fraud had been present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is not quite accurate. I think that if the amendment, which will be proposed, were voted for it would not pass upon the question of fraud at all. It would merely say that for the emergency, during this period of investigation, the status quo shall be maintained. That is all. It would be expected under the amendment to which I now refer that there would be an investigation to determine if fraud existed, and then a report submitted upon which Congress would act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In another case, detached from the Post Office Department and the air mail, let us suppose that fraud was actually present and shown to be present by a set of facts which no reasonable man could question; would the Senator then think that the contractor should be permitted to go ahead until the matter had been threshed out in court?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. Mr. President, there is an express policy set forth in the law; there is an express direction as to what must be done. Under the McNary-Watres Act, if there is ground for cancelation, Congress says it can be obtained in this way: That the Postmaster General shall give 45 days' notice and give a hearing on the question before he cancels. The other means, provided during the last session of Congress, which is the more recent method, started in, as I pointed out here, with a plan to permit cancelation without hearing, but finished with a power in the President to cancel only after a notice of 60 days, and an opportunity to have a public hearing, and a provision for damages in cancelation.

Those are the two laws which lay out the course that ought to be pursued and the course that must be pursued, and they do not involve a trial by a court of justice to establish the facts; but, as I think, they absolutely deny an arbitrary use of force, of might on the part of a Cabinet officer to take the carriage of the mail away from the contractor by saying at the time that he is canceling the contract.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I realize that this question is purely hypothetical, and I want to say to the Senator that I ask it only to get his complete philosophy on this proposition. Let us suppose that under the contract which the Senator is discussing there were 12 men in the whole country who were successful bidders. Let us suppose that all 12 of them confessed that they had obtained their contracts through fraudulent means. In that case, would the Senator then maintain that they should be able to carry on their contracts for 45 days until proper notice was promulgated?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that contention would amount to a waiver, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. It does not say so in the contract.

Mr. AUSTIN. In that case we have a contractor coming in and, if the fraud went to the essence of the contract, saying, "My contract is of no force." That is the equivalent of waiving and surrendering.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think so, under the Senator's argument, unless the contract specifically so provided. However, I do not want to detain the Senator by going far afield except to present this concluding interrogatory. Is it not a fact that even if we shall pass the pending bill the situation will remain in statu quo, and that there will not be any change in the air-mail situation whatever unless the administration, feeling that fraud was present, provides once more some new means for competitive bidding and reestablishes the air-mail system through that method?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that the reason I ask the question is to try to find out what alternative a Senator has if he supports or fails to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. I know the Senator from Vermont feels that there was no fraud present. Many other Senators feel that there was fraud present. What I am trying to ascertain is whether with or without this amendment there can be any redress unless the administration cares to go along with the spirit of the proposed amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot quite agree with the Senator from Maryland about that. If it should occur that the Senate should adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senator from New Jersey, and myself, the contracts would be restored to the original contractors, save where the Postmaster General should see fit to press the charge of collusion and fraud, and then there would be a judicial determination of that fact. So the whole matter would be remedied, no one would be foreclosed, and there would be no prejudgment. Furthermore, the door would be open to save the position of those who think there was collusion and fraud. If there was, it could be determined under the bill proposed by us. But if the pending bill, without amendment, should pass, we would have a complete confirmation of the action by the Postmaster General, with all its implications, and with all the charges approved and ratified by the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for permitting the various interruptions. As I see the matter, I will say in conclusion, our choice is a very simple one. Either these companies are permitted to rebid under the bill as introduced, and thereby regain their business, or without a bill they remain in the position in which they find themselves today. I believe that will be the ultimate result of any legislation we may enact.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will continue the reading from the record of March 1932, which I am reading for the purpose of exposing that the purpose of the independents was a selfish purpose from the beginning, and that it persisted through to the end, when it became effective. This evidence also tends to support the claim which we make, that there was no cause for cancelation, that there was no reason for it, and no excuse for it, and the other necessary conclusion that cancelation was for the purpose of carrying out the selfish objective of the independents. Therefore I continue to read from page 41 as follows:

Mr. LAMNECK. If this bill were passed it would cancel only the contracts that have this morning been called extensions; it would not affect the original contracts?

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know what the original contract is or what the extensions are. I have never seen one of these.

Mr. LAMNECK. How do you expect to get these contracts, if they are contracts, until they expire? How do you expect to get a chance to get them?

Mr. YOUNG. I think it is a pretty serious condition when the United States Government votes a subsidy of $20,000,000 a year to aid and assist the aviation industry, and no part of that is to be expended on perhaps the largest independent factor in the industry. I would not like to accept your statement that for 10 years we have no hope of bidding and participating in that subsidy.

It can be plainly seen that what he is after is to cut off the contract before this time expires and to obtain the contract by virtue of a cancelation.

Mr. LAMNECK. I am asking you for the facts of the matter. If the Government has a contract running for 10 years, you will not have an opportunity to get that contract before it expires?

Mr. YOUNG—

Note this answer, for this answer is the admission of the offense:

Mr. YOUNG. Not unless it is set aside. The Comptroller General in a report to Congress for 1931 mentions a specific number of extensions that were not let in accordance with the McNary-Watres Act.

It will be seen that there were exactly the identical claims in this investigation of 1932 as Braniff and the society of the long name were making in our investigation in 1934.

Mr. LAMNECK. Those extensions are the only part of the business that you hope to get if they are advertised?

Mr. YOUNG—

This is very significant—

I do not know what the future might develop. Some of these companies might go out of business.

That is a sinister thought in the mind of that witness. I sincerely hope that we may put the brakes on here at this time so that some of those companies may not have to go out of business which have been serving the people of the United States so efficiently, so safely, and so magnificently; that prior to February 19, 1934, when the contracts were canceled, we had the finest air-mail system in the world.

Let us look now in the same hearing, on page 55, at the testimony of Paul R. Braniff, Braniff Airways, Oklahoma City, who appeared before the committee and advocated the same causes, unfair competition, ability to fly for less money, and the same objective, namely, cancelation. I read from page 56 this brief excerpt from Braniff's testimony:

The question was brought up yesterday as to how the present contracts could be canceled.

This was in 1932, it will be remembered—March 2, 1932.

I have a copy of a mail contract in my pocket, which was received from Mr. Ludlow, and it has a clause in it saying that the contract is cancelable after 45 days' notice, and I believe all contracts were signed with that provision in it.

Then they were talking about cancelation with notice and under the law. They had not reached that point of audacity when they were advocating cancelation in any event.

Again, on page 58:

Mr. KENDALL. Speaking with respect to existing contracts, what would be your idea as to how we should proceed? Would you have the Post Office Department cancel existing contracts and throw them all open for competitive bidding?

There is the question; there is the milk in the coconut. The answer to that question will expose the objective of those independent mail-contract seekers. I read the answer:

Mr. BRANIFF. That is the only way I see it can be done.

Have the Postmaster General cancel them all, so that his company and other independent companies could get them away from those who already have the contracts.

When this record is read, do you believe, Mr. President, that any citizen of intelligence in this country is going to have any doubt about the underlying cause of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and about the objective of that action and about who initiated it?

I now refer to page 60, Mr. Braniff still testifying:

Mr. LAMNECK. Suppose these contracts were canceled and you secured the mail contract from Oklahoma City to Chicago. That would have a disastrous effect on the man having the mail contract over the same route, would it not?

Mr. BRANIFF. The question is who is the man who has it. It would have no disastrous effect on the personnel concerned.

Mr. LAMNECK. I am talking of the company operating the line.

Mr. BRANIFF. Any company would have a very hard time if it could not compete on an economical basis, and if it cannot do that it has no place in the business.

Now comes a significant piece of evidence, on page 61:

Mr. LAMNECK. You want to get in the position that the fellow who has the contract is in? You are not concerned about him; you are concerned only about yourself.

Mr. BRANIFF. I am concerned with giving a great deal more service, a great deal faster service at less expense, and only through economy and efficiency in operation do I expect to make a profit.

That is the same old song, the same old fallacy, because we know that his service, according to the evidence, did not compare with the service of those who were flying from coast to coast; it did not compare in speed; it did not compare in ability to transport passengers in planes; it did not compare in financial responsibility; indeed, it was in such a miserable condition that it could not pay its pilots.

So far as the suggestion as to less expense to the Government is concerned, that was a fallacy, because the Postmaster General did not need to cancel; he could reduce, and was bound to reduce, the expense to its proper position and level at any time, and he was in touch every month with the economic conditions of these companies and the amount of business they were doing. But that old fallacy, used 2 years ago, we hear used again in 1934.

I am trying hard as I may to show how identical were all the claims made by the independent operators, because there was a great committee, a committee of many more men and many more judgments than ours, who passed on that question and passed on it against their claims.

The record shows further, as follows:

Mr. LAMNECK. You do not mean to say that you are a better operator than any other operator of an airplane?

Mr. BRANIFF. I mean to say that I operate my airplane line at a great deal less expense than the present operators have.

Yes; he did; he operated it at the expense of his pilots; and he operated it without the safety devices which his competitors used—

Mr. SANDERS. Is it not a fact that all these companies would have claims against the Government in the Court of Claims to enforce a contract if we canceled these contracts?

Mr. BRANIFF. That is a question that would have to be answered by an attorney, although the contract I have in my pocket, which contract was sent to me by Mr. Wardlow, states in paragraph 7 that—

"It is hereby further stipulated and agreed that this contract may be terminated whenever, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, the interests of the Postal Service shall so require, by serving notice upon the contractor at least 45 days prior to such termination, provided that in case of such discontinuance of service, as a full indemnity to the contractor, 1 month's extra pay or the full period of service if less than 6 months may be allowed. The contractor may be relieved of this contract at any time upon giving the Department 45 days' notice of desire to retire.

It will be seen he was telling them how it could be done; he was showing them that cancelation could be effected; and he admits, right in this connection, that his company was not in business when these events occurred about which he complains.

Mr. Foss asked him:

Was your company in operation when this mail contract was let?

Mr. BRANIFF. At the time the mail contract was let over the territory served by us we were not in business.

Now I refer to page 62 of the same record, to the statement of Paul Henderson.

The bill introduced by the chairman seems to be the one which is really at issue. This bill proposes the cancelation by congressional act of route certificates and air-mail contracts and consolidation of air-mail routes which have been arrived at by the Post Office Department without, in the language of the bill, "public advertising."

That is read for the purpose of showing how they narrowed that investigation down to that very specific objective, namely, cancelation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point that there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Couzens	Keyes	Russell
Austin	Cutting	King	Schall
Bachman	Davis	La Follette	Sheppard
Bailey	Dickinson	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lonergan	Smith
Barbour	Dill	Long	Steiwer
Barkley	Duffy	McCarran	Stephens
Black	Erickson	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fess	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Thompson
Brown	Frazier	Murphy	Townsend
Bulkley	George	Neely	Tydings
Bulow	Gibson	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Byrd	Glass	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Gore	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hastings	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hatch	Pittman	White
Connally	Hatfield	Pope
Coolidge	Hayden	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I now call the attention of the Senate to conditions in October 1932. It will be observed that we are moving forward in an orderly way through the time which has elapsed since the passage of the McNary-Watres Act, and the events which have been complained about and which are asserted as constituting fraud and collusion. I am calling attention to these records from time to time in order to show that fraud and collusion had not then entered the minds of any of those who are making these vigorous assaults upon the very same contracts, and trying to take them away from the contractors. At this time they had not begun to yell "fraud" and "collusion", although they soon did so.

I refer to page 239 of the hearings on October 13, 1932, in the postal investigation. Here we find the same man, Braniff, making a speech and testifying in that postal investigation. That postal investigation corresponded to the investigation that has been conducted and is still being conducted by the special investigating committee of the Senate. Therefore, what I am about to read is of very great importance, because it shows the total failure of these very same charges, made against these very same contracts, considered by a similar committee, and decided. That decision ought to have ended the matter, but it did not do so.

The decision was in favor of the old contracts and against the independents; but they were not to be content with that decision. As soon as arrangements could be made, another investigation was provided for by the Senate; and it is very significant that the resolution provided that the appointment of the special committee to make the investigation should not be made until after the Democratic administration was inaugurated. That resolution was offered in the Senate on February 6, 1933; but it provided that the appointment of the members of the special investigating committee should be made after March 4, 1933, and that the committee should consist of three members of the majority and two members of the minority. It was immediately after the inauguration of the new administration that this fresh and new attack was begun, upon the same old basis, and for the same old objective, namely, cancelation.

It is suggested by my colleague from Maine [Mr. WHITE] that that postponement until after March 4, 1933, was to prove that there was no politics in the investigation.

Now, I read from Mr. Braniff's statement before the postal investigation, on page 239:

I wonder if there is any connection between Mr. Cord's withdrawal from this hearing last March and the fact that it is much easier to take one's profit by remaining quiet than fighting. We non-mail-carrying operators looked upon Mr. Cord and his organization as having sufficient assets and ability to wage a successful fight for the opening up of these mail contracts to competitive bidding, and it seems strange that a pilots' strike should occur on his lines just before this body met last March, and that Mr. Cord should take over the control of the second heaviest subsidized air line in the country and abandon the fight which he was so instrumental in starting—

Here we find these men turning State's evidence on each other; no honor at all among them; one of them claiming that the other is black—the fight which he was so instrumental in starting, and that he should now be able to get along with the same personnel that was so bitterly opposed to him only a few months ago. Twenty million dollars a year subsidy warrants some pretty sharp practices and plenty of politics.

Think of it! Here were these men who, up to that time, had been banded together in the same objective. You may call it what you please, Mr. President; one does not have to characterize a transaction such as that. It carries its own meaning. A selfish objective, a design to take away another's property, does not need characterization; and here is this man, comrade as he was in those intentions and in those efforts, accusing his comrade of "pretty sharp practices and plenty of politics."

On the next page we find him talking in this way:

We have continued to operate for nearly 2 years on our own capital, and in the event we are successful in—

Successful in what? The answer shows what his objective was:

in the event we are successful in opening these contracts to bidding we will bid a fair price—a price far below that now being paid, a price permitting us a fair profit, and we will offer a much speedier service. We do not feel that the present mail contractors have any God-given right for the exclusive subsidy of the Government. We are basing our plea for an opportunity to carry the mail upon two things—

And I call attention to the fact that they are the same old two things that were advocated before our committee:

Economy to the Government in a willingness to take over the present contracts for half of what is now being paid, and a superior service offering greater speed than that now being maintained by the present mail contractors. In the event we are successful in obtaining a mail contract, we have the capital immediately available to make any extensions necessary and will furnish performance bond for the term of our contract.

How was that viewed by the committee? On page 241 is the evidence of that:

Mr. KELLY. Will you tell us how, under the present law, you can possibly be given an air-mail contract?

Mr. BRANIFF. All mail contracts call for cancelation in 45 days.

There we have it. That was their objective.

Mr. KELLY. But there is a certificate that has been granted to the company carrying over your line to Tulsa, and that was a very advantageous contract to begin with.

Mr. BRANIFF. I think so.

Mr. KELLY. Then they got a change in the contract and under the special act passed afterward a 6-year certificate. There would have to be some charges to cancel that certificate. I want to know how you expect to get a contract on that route covered by the 6-year certificate.

Mr. BRANIFF. I do not have the wording of the certificate; but I know the present contracts can be canceled in 45 days.

Mr. SWEENEY. You think they can be arbitrarily canceled?

Mr. BRANIFF. I think so.

Now, this man has become so bold that he asserts that the thing can be done which was done on February 9, 1934. This was as early as October 13, 1932; but he was asserting it before the wrong committee. Although that was a committee of a Democratic House, nevertheless the committee, looking upon the problem as one not of politics, not of saving anybody's face, answered Mr. Braniff by their report on that hearing, to which I shall presently allude.

Before referring to that report, I call attention to some events which occurred between October 13, 1932, and the submission of the report in February 1933. Here is some evidence of the activities in 1932 of the Scheduled Independent Air Transport Association, or something like that—the society of the long name. This letter of November 10, 1932, it will be observed, was written within 3 days after the election. It is a letter addressed to the Kohler Aviation Corporation, and appears on page 8571 of the transcript of evident before the special investigating committee. It is signed by Mr. Braniff, to whose testimony I have been calling attention. It reads as follows:

GENTLEMEN: The election probably means a new deal for we air-line operators who are not blessed with mail contracts, and I am firmly of the opinion that a concerted effort on our part, laying before the new administration the actual operating costs and facts and figures relative to our various services, will unquestionably bring beneficial results to us.

That is "u-s", meaning "us", the writers, the independent operators. It is not "U.S.", meaning the United States. That objective was not in his heart, not in his mind, it was not expressed in his letter.

I read further, as bearing upon his objective:

It is certain that we will not make any progress by sitting back and waiting for a contract to be laid in our laps, and unless we receive a mail contract we will eventually be put out of business.

With these thoughts in mind, I am anxious that all the non-mail-carrying operators in this country assemble and form an organization to carry out this fight.

We will grant you free transportation over our lines from the point on our system nearest your headquarters, and I urgently request that you attend the meeting in Oklahoma City on Tuesday, November 22, and wire me immediately upon receipt of this letter as to whether or not you can attend.

I am enclosing a copy of the testimony which I presented at the last congressional hearing before the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads. I believe every other nonmail operator can show figures as economical as these, and a combination of our cost figures and a grouping of the many millions of miles we have all flown should certainly open the eyes of the congressional committee.

I am depending upon you to cooperate with me, and am extremely anxious to receive your wire that you will attend this meeting.

Yours very truly,

PAUL R. BRANIFF.

The record which he enclosed to each one of the independent operators was the record where, as we have seen, Mr. LAMNECK called his attention to the fact that what he wanted was to get in the position in which was the one who had the contract.

I notice, in studying the enclosure, that it does not contain so much of the record. It contains other statements by him sufficient to show that their objective was cancelation, and cancelation in order to save the independents, and give them the contracts which belonged to the contractors.

He wrote:

We have continued to operate for nearly 2 years on our own capital, and in the event we are successful in opening these contracts to bidding, we would bid a fair price.

That will be recalled. That was one of his objectives, stated in the enclosure attached to his letter.

Mr. President, the curious thing is that these gentlemen, so banded together in the Scheduled Independent Air Transport Operators' Association, were not content to confine their activities to the Postmaster General's Department and to the regular committees of Congress, but they also came into our special committee, and the trail there is not very pleasant.

It appears in writing that they tendered their services to the committee, that the investigator for the committee accepted those services, and that the committee investigator went even so far as to ask the counsel for this band of independent operators to recommend three or four expert accountants to be employed by the committee in making an investigation which had for its object the cancelation of the air-mail contracts; that that attorney of the society of the long name wrote to Mr. Braniff and told him to keep the matter confidential, but that Mr. Patterson had asked for such recommendations, and that he thought best that he not tell the applicants of the fact, but keep it confidential, and tell him—the attorney—the names of those they would recommend, let the attorney go to the committee with the names, and let the committee employ them as if the committee originated the plan. Of course, the committee's investigator did originate the plan, and the counsel for the independents, who were so associated together, wanted to keep secret that the suggestion came from outside the committee to an interested party to furnish investigators and accountants.

Here is a letter from Mr. Patterson to Mr. Braniff, president of Braniff Airways, Inc., dated October 16, 1933, found at page 8615 of the transcript:

DEAR MR. BRANIFF: I thank you very much for your letter of recent date regarding the air-mail investigation.

Senators will understand that the special committee had not begun to take testimony at that time. It is quite likely that investigators had gone all over the United States trying to obtain information, but the first meeting of the committee dealing with air mail occurred after Christmas. This is what Mr. Patterson said to the president of Braniff Airways:

We are continuing to secure important data and information relating to this investigation and hope that the Independent Operators' Association, which I understand is being formed, to assist this committee, will function actively in the investigation. It will probably be the latter part of November or the first of December before we hold public hearings on the air-mail situation.

I appreciate the importance of the suggestion contained in the second paragraph of your letter—

Note this, for it is very important:

as to cancelation of one important extension and advertising of the same for competitive bids. I fear that we would not be able to get the Post Office Department to adopt this suggestion. However, I am taking the matter up with the committee for their consideration and termination.

I will appreciate your further suggestions or information in this matter.

Very truly yours,

A. G. PATTERSON,
Investigator for the Committee.

There it is, in plain language, in black and white, the investigator of our committee stating that he understands that this organization is being formed to assist the committee—think of it—and in this letter a suggestion to do the very thing which that organization had already been formed to accomplish spoken of favorably by the investigator of our committee. Think of it!

Mr. President, here is the reply to Mr. A. G. Patterson, dated October 20, 1933, signed "T. E. Braniff, president":

I have your letter of October 16 and am mighty glad to know you are taking up with your committee for consideration the suggestion contained in my recent letter. It is my firm conviction if you can induce the Post Office Department to adopt this suggestion you will develop evidence of conclusive significance concerning the discrepancy which now exists between the price actually paid by the Post Office Department for carrying the mail and the price at which this service can be purchased under a system of competitive bidding.

In order that the accusation cannot be made that this would throw valuable franchises open to incompetent, inexperienced, and perhaps irresponsible bidders, proof of the facts can be established by limiting competition to scheduled air-transport operators who have been in business at least 1 year prior to the advertising for bids. I can assure you that the results of such procedure would go a long way toward establishing the case of the committee which you represent.

Evidently his idea was that the committee, this arm of the great Senate of the United States, apparently had a case; that it was a prosecutor, and was going out to prove somebody guilty of something. It was not going out to ascertain facts and report to the Senate, so that the action of the Senate by way of legislation could be governed by the facts ascertained. It had a case.

As evidence bearing upon what would happen if some of these extensions were thrown open to competitive bidding, I enclose to you herewith copy of letter written by me under date of December 23, 1932, to Mr. P. G. Johnson, president of the United Airlines, together with copy of his reply. You are at liberty to make use of this correspondence if you see fit to do so.

The independent operators formed an organization more than a year ago—

This was in October 1933, and that organization was formed immediately after the election.

The independent operators formed an organization more than a year ago, which is still in existence and known as the Scheduled Air Transport Operators' Association. This organization functioned officially in representing the independents during the hearings by the N.R.A. code committee held in Washington on August 31 last. Enclosed herewith is a copy of brief filed by our association with the code committee following the hearing. I also enclose to you an opinion of William I. Denning, an attorney in Washington, on certain phases of the situation prior to the code hearing.

This is quite a long letter. It supports the claim that this organization was employing its subtle means of influence not merely upon the regular departments of Government but also upon the special committee of ours.

My brother, Paul, before his departure for Chicago this week, left with me an unsigned memorandum, which I am enclosing herewith and which contains information, some of which must necessarily be regarded as the gossip of the business and which may or may not be substantiated by an investigation of the facts.

He knew whether it was gossip or not. He had been advocating those ideas for years. He had been presenting the same ideas before another investigating committee without success, and now he is trying them out on us.

His explanation is that you asked for a statement from him and that you would go into the question of securing evidence which would either prove or disprove such portions of the statement as were of value in connection with your activities. You will understand, of course, that neither Paul nor I nor the Braniff Airways vouch for the accuracy of these statements, but they are made solely as the basis of an investigation. I am quite sure you could develop considerable additional information of interest by a conference with Mr. William I. Denning, of Washington, the attorney previously referred to.

Yes; he was sure he could get the information from Denning, for Denning was his attorney.

He would, I am sure, be glad to go over the matter with you, and could probably give you most interesting information concerning conditions under which the Robertson Airline was starved into retirement by the granting of a mail extension to the American Airways from St. Louis to New Orleans, and how the extension was granted the American Airways from Cleveland to Louisville, then to Memphis and Fort Worth, thereby completing their transcontinental operation.

Both my brother, Paul, and myself personally and the Scheduled Air Transport Operators' Association, of which I am president, are prepared to render you our whole-hearted cooperation in connection with this investigation. We are now convinced your committee is making a sincere effort to uncover the facts of the air-mail situation as the basis of new legislation, and since we have been the principal sufferers from conditions as they have existed, we are naturally interested in the successful outcome of the work you have undertaken. Upon the occasion of my next trip to Washington I shall be very glad indeed to get in touch with you and discuss this matter personally. In the meantime I should be very glad to know of the reaction of the members of your committee to my suggestion concerning—the cancelation of an extension and the letting of same to competitive bidding.

That dossier of material went to our committee, and it lay there until the minority discovered it, although these men appeared as witnesses before the committee. In that dossier was a brief or an opinion by the lawyer, Denning, who was the legal representative and the local representative of the Scheduled Air Transport Operators' Association in Washington, who kept going to the Post Office Department, who had a friend down there, a Mr. Cisler, who was appointed a short time after this administration came into power.

It will be seen that there was a nice set-up down there. All those gentlemen from Texas were there: Solicitor Crowley, Mr. Cisler, and Silliman Evans. The Braniff Airways people and Bowen, and all the group that took such an active part in the formation of this association, came from the same general section of our country. They were writing each other back and forth to the effect that "the situation is very favorable, now that we are going to have in the Department this man Cisler, who is a friend of my heart for 30 years, who was in the Postal Service with me", as Attorney Denning said, "and we are comrades. Now that we are substituting for Mr. Wadsworth this man Cisler, Mr. Howes will give the subject of our problem more intelligent consideration."

That was what was going on. Here they were dealing with the investigator of our special committee and submitting a brief in connection with that letter which dealt with nothing but the subject of cancelation—cancelation not merely of extensions but cancelation of all contracts and all certificates.

Can anyone who has heard even these few extracts from this large and voluminous record have any doubt whatever what agency was at work on this problem, what influence was being brought to bear?

Later, we see in the record men admitting that they brought to bear upon the Post Office Department all the political influence they could summon—Governors, national committeemen, Representatives in Congress, Senators, and all the others who loved to keep the Democratic donkey alive, as the witness said—and that honorable man, Mr. Howes, who is now the First Assistant Postmaster General, came in and admitted that they finally came down upon him like a cloud of grasshoppers, and they were so numerous, so impetuous, so insistent, that they were a pest. He stepped out of the position in which he had charge of the air mail, at a very significant time, namely, on January 17. He saw the thing coming, in my opinion, and did not care to have his garments smelling of brimstone, so he got out of there in due season. After he steps out, and someone else has taken his place, and we have that fine set-up there, and we have Solicitor Crowley, who is willing to give the advice and make the recommendation that would put the thing over, they come down there and turn on the heat until it gets so hot for those people in the Post Office Department that they cannot wait.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I believe the Senator from Vermont is using the wrong simile. I do not think it is a matter of heat. I think he should phrase it in the term of hunger. An animal which has been away from the trough for 12 years is bound to be hungry. I think that would be the more charitable way to phrase this matter. The elephant has been in here for 12 years. In the case of those of us who have been away from the trough for 12 years, watching the victuals spread around pretty generously, it is only natural that our mouths should water when something is in sight, for we have been in sight of it for 12 years, but have not had a chance to come to the trough. So I think instead of using the words "smoked out" it is just a matter of porridge rather than brimstone.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I feel rather tolerant of any man's view, and very liberal with others who assign a different reason for certain actions.

I am perfectly willing to let the Senator from Louisiana have his way about that matter, and if that reason for this action were adopted, we would still arrive at the same conclusion at which I have arrived, and that is that there was no fraud, no collusion, but there was another and a selfish reason for the cancelation of these contracts.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. It seems like about every time we change administrations in this country there is always some good ground for changing contracts and jobs and everything else. I never have been able to see how they can write contracts in strong enough terms as that they cannot be changed on some ground or other. I imagine, the Democrats being in, if the Republicans came in that they would find some ground to change them, some reason for doing so. I speak advisedly as I do, for I still have that yearning, and mine has not, as yet, been satisfied.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ought to call attention at this time, in view of the suggestions of the Senator from Louisiana, to the statements of the Democratic Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee. I think this closes the incident so far as the welfare of the Government is concerned, and the interest of the public is concerned, for this is an admission that the institution that was about to be destroyed in 1934 was a very splendid one and that there was no cause for its destruction. Mr. Glover, who was at that time testifying, had said—I am reading from the hearings on the Post Office appropriation bill for 1934, held in November 1932, at page 165—Mr. Glover said:

> Improvements are being made all the time. You have a wonderful service here, gentlemen. I am passing out of the picture before long.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Well, you have done a wonderful work, and I want to say that and I think we will all agree on it.

Mr. LONG. Who was Mr. Glover?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Glover was at that time Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. LONG. Under the Republican administration?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; under the Republican administration, and here was a Democrat, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the other House, telling him that he had "done a wonderful work."

Mr. LONG. That was before the Democrats had a chance to get it for themselves. There is no reason why a Democrat should compliment a Republican when he is passing out and the Democrat has a chance to get his job, and why there should be all this great hubbub and claptrap about the welfare of the people, and this, that, and the other, I do not see. When they want the plums they find a way to get them, and they have, of course, some reason.

That does not apply only to the Democrats, but also to Republicans, for ninety-nine times out of a hundred they both give some reason. Their discretion is wide. The fact is, if there is forage to be had in jobs, and so forth, that are being given out by one party, in due course of time the other party is going to find some way to get it. That is what always happens in this land of the free and the home of the brave, and that is what always will happen until we set our face against the policy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I appreciate this contribution in support of the claims that we are making here, and I thank the Senator from Louisiana for it. That is one of the claims we make, namely, that there were two influences at work. There were this band of independents, who were bound to take away these contracts, and there were those who sought political plums; and I see that the Senator from Louisiana agrees with us in respect to the political plums.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to be disturbing the Senator, for he is making his own logical argument; I have sat here and heard most of it, but to my mind the thing about which all of us are unsatisfied is this: Here is a bunch of contracts existing; they probably were too high, in view of recent developments, for I understand that bids lately submitted are considerably lower, but they have been in existence, we will say, for a number of years. In comes the Democratic administration, and they come along with the same policy; they pay the rentals for this service month after month; it is charged they extend one of the contracts in the same manner as the others have been extended. That goes on and everybody seems to be happy. Free airplane trips are available over the country, and high officials take them. There is no mistake about the thing, and everybody seems to be pretty happy. Then, all of a sudden, the bubble bursts. What makes us poor fellows who sit outside the breastworks feel like we know but little about it is that we cannot comprehend how anything that has been glossed over and passed over and fairly well understood all the time can suddenly erupt live Vesuvius, and there is nothing left but the lava of corruption. I think this thing has just been painted and repainted to the point where Senators are bound to say that evidently somebody remained in the most innocuous state of ignorance for the longest period of time surrounded by the hottest burning flame, and then suddenly there is an eruption, and they find nothing but a crater of corruption of crime and disaster that they have been sitting on all the time and did not know anything about it.

That is why I say we are not fooling the American people by this kind of business. The Democrats wanted the jobs, just as the Republicans wanted the jobs when they were on the outside. When the Republicans had the forage to pass out they were passing it out to their friends, and when the Democrats came in they wanted to pass it out to their friends. I do not care what kind of reason they give so long as the old system remains some reason will be found so that the Democrats are going to follow the same kind of a system the Republicans follow, and all this "hurally" and investigation and everything does not amount to anything, regardless of what is discovered, unless they want to take advantage of the case.

Three years from today, if the Republicans get in power, unless we change the system, they will have an investigation, and find out there is a whole lot of fraud, and that the late Postmaster General, as he was coming out of a dining room one night, was spoken to by a man who said he would like to have a route. They will say that the Postmaster General associated with him a little while, and they met another man and went down the street and they got two contracts the next day. If the Democrats shall be put out the Republicans will get them, if the system remains.

This is not fooling anybody. Until you change the policy it will remain a whole lot of "hurally", much ado about nothing. What ought to be done is to let them go ahead and if the Democrats want to cancel the contracts, and let the contractors go into the Court of Claims; there their claims may be settled. Then let us legislate to guarantee against departmental discretion making or unmaking cases of this kind.

A year or two ago I sat in this Chamber and voted against a man by the name of Humphrey whose nomination was being confirmed as a member of the Federal Trade Commission. I think it was the first day I sat in the United States Senate. I voted against Mr. Humphrey being confirmed as a member of the Federal Trade Commission. There were enough Republicans who voted against Mr. Humphrey if the Democrats had stayed together long enough so that Mr. Humphrey's nomination would not have been confirmed; but the Democrats overwhelmingly voted to confirm Mr. Humphrey as a member of the Federal Trade Commission. After that was done, Mr. Humphrey took the oath for the 6-year term of office. Then, in comes the Democratic administration and Mr. Humphrey is removed on the grounds which had existed all the time and because of which he should never have been confirmed, and we knew it all the time. We raised a whole lot of "hurally" about Mr. Humphrey and said that he ought to have been kicked off the Federal Trade Commission in the first place, when, as a matter of fact, Mr. Humphrey would not have been on the Federal Trade Commission if we had not voted on both sides of the Chamber to confirm him as a member of that Commission.

I do not believe in wasting the time of the United States Senate day after day. We ought not to come here and pass a bill that is going to allow one party to do the same thing that the other party did. If we are going to come out of this situation with any good resulting let us have a bill that will not allow the next crowd that gets into office to put the other gang out and put their own gang in by a mere wave of the wand, because rightfully or wrongfully this will be cited as a precedent.

If we are going to get any good out of it, let us pass a bill that divorces this service from politics, and that does not make it possible for some man to come in and annul overnight everything that has been done and unseat somebody whose work they said was all right 2 or 3 days before he retired from office. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the fact that no demonstrations of approval or disapproval are permitted under the rules of the Senate, and if there shall be another disturbance the galleries will be ordered closed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Louisiana for his contribution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope that the occupants of the galleries will be permitted to remain. This is the only mark of approval that I have had in several days. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Presiding Officer will ask the ushers in the gallery to execute the order of the Chair, and either keep order or close the galleries.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I call attention now to the fact that this is not a sudden eruption; this is not the bursting of a volcano. The same complaints were made in 1932. The committee that made the investigation in 1932 made findings, and as a result of those findings the bill which was introduced to give authority to the Postmaster General to cancel contracts was suppressed and nothing further was ever done with it. Those findings appear in House Report No. 2087, investigation of the United States Postal Air Mail Service, a report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives, filed February 21, 1933.

I want it to be observed that the filing of this report came right along coincidentally with Senate Resolution No. 349, which was offered here in the Senate on February 6, by virtue of which a committee was appointed by the President of the Senate after March 4, 1933.

In other words, somebody in the Senate was not satisfied that a great Democratic committee in the House had studied these same charges and given a clean bill of health to a Republican administration, and so they wanted to have a whack at the matter. They wanted a new committee appointed to hash over the same old matters. There is no such thing evidently in Congress as arriving at the end of an investigation. The investigation had been concluded; the whole subject had all been gone over; the same witnesses appeared before the House committee, and a finding was made of no fraud, no collusion. There was approval of the administration's policy and no criticism of it. The interpretation made by Postmaster General Brown with respect to extensions was approved, and recommendations were made, based on the validity of his acts. There were end-to-end extensions, about which we have heard a great deal of criticism here, actually recommended by that report.

Ultimately, after a very thorough examination of the whole subject, the general policy recommended by the committee was as follows, reading from page 52 of the report to which I have referred:

> Finally, a definite policy should be formulated by the Government with respect to the future status of the air-mail operators. The uncertainty of their future status at the present time makes it necessary for them to write off their equipment at a very high rate, which naturally increases their operating expenses. In addition, it becomes exceedingly difficult for them to plan ahead and make decisions with respect to new capital expenditures. Because of their uncertainty, they may refrain from expenditures which might, if made, result in greatly reduced operating expenses.

I invite attention to this report because we are on the eve of enacting permanent legislation. What is there in that proposed legislation with respect to the future of the operator? There is absolutely no hope at all. No operator or contractor for such a short period of time as 3 years can undertake to lay out a long-time program or can interest capital in the development of such a new and growing industry as that of aeronautics.

As a result of that report, and of the withdrawal of the legislation intended to give them arbitrary power of cancelation, which was exercised, but which was not authorized by law, we had finally an amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] to that rider to the independent offices appropriation bill which gave the President the power to cancel the contracts provided there was notice of 60 days and public hearing, and provided a means of awarding damages were allowed to the operator whose contract was canceled. I shall not take the time to read that. It is section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, approved June 16, 1933.

There is the situation in June of 1933, and here is the record of a meeting on August 25, 1933, of the society with the long name. I refer to only a part of it in order to show how aggressive they had become and how interested they were in their objective. This will reveal the astonishing fact that this society was employing its influence not merely with the regular departments of Government to obtain a cancelation, but now was going into the N.R.A. and undertaking to obtain cancelation by means of a code under the N.R.A. I have here a certified copy of the record of the annual meeting of the society, in the course of which appears the following:

Mr. Braniff was instructed to object to articles VI and VIII of the proposed code. He was instructed to call to the attention of the National Recovery Administration and the Government the unfair competitive position of contract operators as against non-contract operators, and to present further the illegality and the discrimination involved in the present allocation of air-mail contracts, as provided for under existing statutes affecting air mail.

He was instructed to insist upon governmental consideration of such unfair competition, discrimination, and illegality in connection with the adoption or promulgation of a code for the air transport industry, and to insist upon a redistribution on an equitable basis among all eligible operators of the Government subsidy involved in air-mail contracts, either through a code promulgated by the National Recovery Administration or action by other officers of departments of the Government.

There was nothing that restrained them. Absolutely their objective was at all points brought to bear wherever they could get at the Government.

The meeting authorized and granted to Mr. Braniff the broadest discretion in action as a representative of the association, and authorized him to adopt any tactics or procedure to accomplish the ends as above stated.

That was in August 1933. Now, we come to the hearings in December on the appropriation bill. There is very significant evidence here, it will be marked, wherever we find this gentleman testifying, the first Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Howes, an honorable gentleman, an honest witness, a man who speaks without fear, a man who speaks without any particular color to his testimony. He sat before the appropriations committee asking for money to operate the air mail in 1935. This meeting was held December 11, 1933. He had been in office since March 4, 1933. He himself had acquired some vision. Like Postmaster General Brown, he had the theory that the air-mail problem was not merely a problem of carrying the mail, but was also a problem of the development of passenger service in safety and efficiency as an instrument for the improvement of business and for contributing to the welfare of mankind, and also as an arm of the national defense. A broad vision this man Howes had.

Mr. Howes made use of identically the same means of getting expert information regarding the operation of the air mail as did Postmaster General Brown. He admitted freely, without any reserve, that the official sitting behind a desk in the Post Office Department cannot know the terrain. He cannot know the conditions of flying. He cannot know the usages of pilots or mechanics and others away out in the country. He sits behind a desk and administers as best he can, but he needs the light of the special knowledge, the facts gained by those who fly the mail. Mr. Howes had the problem of revamping the entire air-mail map of the country in order to fit it to a reduced appropriation. It was a large reduction; so he gathered together all the operators, and obtained from them suggestions and information, and, as a result, secured six different plans.

They were plans for what? Plans for adapting that great service to the reduced appropriation. That meant curtailment of service. That meant reduction of pay. That meant elimination of routes. That meant taking cities off the service. Every essential characteristic of those contracts had to be modified, and the whole system thereby was revamped to fit the changed conditions. This man did not evade; he did not dodge. He walked up to the room of the Appropriations Committee and told them what he had done; and when he appeared before our special investigating committee he was exactly as frank and open and honest as he had been before the Appropriations Committee, and he told us the whole story. He said:

It is the only rational plan you can adopt. It is the only available means you have for finding out the specific and necessary facts in order to rearrange the air-mail map to fit the reduced appropriation. There is nothing collusive about it. There is nothing fraudulent about it. It is the right thing to do.

I felt when it was over that we had accomplished a great good, for I made this discovery:

First. United Airlines, one of the great carriers, came in and offered to take a cut without any reduction of service, and for less money to perform that service as well as they previously had performed it, in order to help out the Government. Then along came another concern, the one flying the midtranscontinental route, and made a similar offer, though not quite the same as that of United Airlines. Thus, they were able by agreement, by talking this matter out, to readjust themselves to the change in their situation. Mr. Howes felt when he got through that he had saved as much of the service as could be saved in view of the reduced appropriation, having always in view the benefit of the public, and that the contractors had met him in good faith, and had shown a good spirit.

What was the result? Mr. Howes said, "I never recommended the cancelation of any route or of any extension"; that is, for opening it up to bids. He said, "I did not know but what I should have to exercise that power in order to adapt this situation to the money; but the operators came in and cooperated with me so fully that no such power had to be exercised, and we agreed on everything that was done." He is a responsible man, to whom the Postmaster General referred us when we were trying to find out from the Postmaster General the facts regarding this matter, and the significance of the use of the very same type of procedure which Postmaster General Farley condemned. The Postmaster General referred us to Mr. Howes and Mr. Howes told us the story; and there the Senate has it as we see it, the admission in effect of the Postmaster General, through Mr. Howes, that those meetings in May 1930 were not wrong, were not illegal, were entirely proper, were beneficial, and that they were the only way in which information regarding pioneering rights and equities could be obtained.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Farley himself directly in writing made this statement:

It is believed that, inasmuch as there appears to be the right to extend routes, it should also follow that the Department may cancel or curtail.

That was the Postmaster General's statement over his own signature, addressed to the Comptroller General, for the purpose of obtaining an opinion as to the right to cancel an extension. Therefore it seems to us that down to December 1933 we have Postmaster General Farley; we have Second Assistant Postmaster General Howes appearing before the Appropriations Committee asking for money, and justifying that request upon these very contracts, assuring this great committee in effect that those contracts were without fraud, without corruption, and entirely legal, and that they justified Congress in giving the Department the money to operate them. Not only did Mr. Howes list all those contracts in the justification, but he also listed two more which he himself would like to extend.

So we have down to December 1933 a clean bill of health from an investigating committee of the House, a clean bill of health from the Postmaster General himself, and a clean bill of health from Mr. Howes, who was performing the actual work for the Postmaster General during the present administration and down to January 17, 1934.

Mr. President, I have a great mass of evidence here; but I am sure that if the Senate is as weary of it as I am it will be a great mercy if I refrain from reading it. I beg leave, however, to comment upon it, and to point out that it can be read; that although it is only in the form of printer's proof at the present time, it will be printed. I make these assertions subject to any correction which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] desires to suggest. If there is any belief that I have made an error, we will then turn to the proof here and undertake to justify the statement.

I assert that the record shows that from December 1933 right down to the time when these cancelations were made, the activities of this scheduled society of the long name increased; that the activities of the constituent corporations increased; that their attorney was busy from day to day; that he was seeing Mr. Cisler, in the Post Office Department, as he writes, twice a week; and that all the time these people were crowding and pushing to see if they could not get these contracts canceled. First, they were trying to get an opinion from the Comptroller General to the Postmaster General which would assure the latter that he had authority to cancel the extensions and open them up for rebidding. When that opinion came in they were greatly disappointed in it, however, because the only authority which the Comptroller General said the law gave the Postmaster General was to cancel for cause, and upon notice and hearing; that the curtailments he might make under the power to extend and consolidate might in effect accomplish a cancelation, but that was not an opening of the contract for bidding.

So it developed that after months of waiting to get an opinion from the Comptroller General which would justify the Postmaster General in making these cancelations contrary to the law, to the great grief of these men they got an opinion which showed that the Postmaster General did not have the authority. To their sorrow there was pointed out to them the policy of Congress, expressed in the law, which was against arbitrary cancelation and which required notice. The Comptroller General pointed directly to that power of the President granted in the act of June 16, 1933, in the independent offices appropriation bill, and said, "The only way you can cancel under that act is upon 60 days' notice and a hearing and awarding of damages." He pointed to the section in the McNary-Watres Act and said, "The Postmaster General may cancel for cause, but there must be 45 days' notice and a hearing." He pointed to phrases in the contracts relating to cancelation and said, "Sixty days' notice and hearing are required."

So here were these men, confronted with these agreements, confronted with the policy of Congress expressed in the McNary-Watres Act, confronted with the policy of Congress expressed in the amendment to the independent offices bill, namely, that there could be cancelation only after notice and hearing. They were also cognizant of the fact that Congress had refused to pass a bill which would give the Postmaster General power to do what he did do. There was pending in the House the bill to empower the Postmaster General to cancel these contracts without hearing, and the bill was turned down after the investigation of 1932.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if the Senator from Vermont does not misquote the proposed legislation, and the enacted legislation as well. If my memory serves me correctly, this was not a power which was to be given to the Postmaster General, nor to the head of any other Federal department, but it was a power which was to be given to the President of the United States; and that power, as proposed by the first provision of the bill, was amended by the Steiwer amendment.

I am afraid the Senator did not listen to my question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I have the question.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, what I wanted to say was this: The Senator from Vermont uses the term "the Postmaster General might cancel." As a matter of fact, the legislation which was proposed provided that the President of the United States might cancel the contracts; and then, under the Steiwer amendment, it was limited as to the power and the provisions connected therewith.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my recollection is proven to be correct by reference to the bill, which I now hold in my hand. The bill which was offered, and which was under consideration, and which was not further prosecuted after the report of the investigating committee of the House, was not a bill to invest the President with the power of cancelation; it was a bill to invest the Postmaster General with the power of cancelation, and it was dropped after the investigation. I will read it so that the learned Senator may hear it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Was that measure ever brought before the Senate of the United States?

Mr. AUSTIN. No, indeed. I will call attention to what killed it. It was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives. It provoked an investigation of the air-mail contracts, during which the independent operators made the same accusations that were made in our special committee's investigation. They took much of the same testimony we have taken. The Braniffs appeared there, Cord's representatives appeared there, and the independents all appeared and made charges of fraud, collusion, and so on.

As a result, the committee made a finding and a recommendation that there was no such fraud and no such collusion. They did not even criticize the policy of the Government, but supported it, and made a definite recommendation as to the future, and the bill (H.R. 9841) was dropped in that committee. I wish to read the language of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not mean to interrupt unduly, but what I have in mind is this; I am recalling legislation which came before this body which in the first instance provided that the President of the United States might cancel contracts, without any limitation, and then came the Steiwer amendment, which placed limitations upon it, and we passed the legislation containing the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is all right; I referred to that particular matter in my former remarks, and undertook to say that Congress had declared the policy in that amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill; that is, by refusing the bestowal of the sheer power of cancelation and adopting an amendment, first, that there must be notice of 60 days, public hearing, and an arrangement for payment for damages. Thereby Congress declared the policy that cancelation shall not occur in the manner in which it did occur, without hearing, without notice.

Then I was saying that they were also aware of the declaration of the policy of Congress by their conduct with respect to that bill, House bill 9841, which they dropped, and did not consider further after the report of the committee investigating these very contracts. I wish to read, before being interrupted again, the language of that bill, because it sustains the claim I make that it had reference specifically to the power of the Postmaster General to cancel. This was not with reference to the power of the President to cancel. The bill read in section 10:

> The Postmaster General is hereby directed to cancel—

Notice the word "directed"—

> The Postmaster General is hereby directed to cancel all contracts, route certificates, extensions, or consolidations of either, for the transportation of air mail, both in the United States and foreign countries, which have been awarded by the Postmaster General without advertising publicly.

The effect of their conduct, judged by the same standards by which any men are judged, was that they said to the Postmaster General, "We are not in favor of your arbitrarily canceling contracts. The only power we think you ought to exercise is that contained in the law, the McNary-Watres Act, namely, that if you have cause for cancelation, cite the man and give him 45 days' notice, and give him an opportunity for hearing before undertaking to make the cancelation."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I want to say, as regards the proposed legislation of which the Senator makes mention as having come before a committee of the House of Representatives, that I am not familiar with that, but I do recall very distinctly the proposed legislation which came before us in connection with the independent offices appropriation bill. I also recall that, as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having that bill in charge, I saw fit to vote in the committee against the right of the President to cancel. Notwithstanding that, however, the bill, after it was amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, passed the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am sure that a man with the experience of the learned Senator from Nevada, who served on the bench of the highest court of his State, could never tolerate the idea of investing an official of our Government with any such arbitrary power as that. I am sure that he, together with all other good Americans, has too much regard for those fundamental rights which are set forth in the Bill of Rights, too much respect for what is regarded as right per se, things which we know are right by instinct, ever to tolerate a law which would give to any of our officials the authority and power of an autocrat. It is a great pleasure to me to serve with the Senator on this special committee because of his broad views and because of what I know is his pure intent.

Mr. President, there is much contained in the record of the proceedings before the special committee showing how Mr. Howes was urged by the independents to exercise that arbitrary power in spite of everything. After the Comptroller General's opinion was rendered on June 26, 1933, they had the audacity to treat that opinion as if it were an opinion which supported their claim that cancelation could be arbitrarily made by the Postmaster General, and a route opened up for bidding.

On June 29 they filed with him, he being then in charge of this particular business, a letter saying:

> I understand that you now have an opinion from the Comptroller General concerning the legal status of extensions of air-mail contracts. This, coupled with the authority granted in the independent offices appropriation providing for cancelation of contracts, has doubtless enabled you to determine the policies of your Department for the coming year. I wish to advise you that the Braniff Airways desires to submit bids for carrying the mail on routes which are already covered by certificates of extensions.

Observe the audacity of that declaration, away back in June 1933. In the face of the opinion of the Comptroller General, Braniff is trying to have the Post Office Department open up routes which are already covered by certificates of extension, so that he may get in there and obtain the other man's contracts. It is amazing that any such thing can be found in the record, but there it is. Is he after any small thing? Not at all. He lays out first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth in detail, great groups which take in much of the thickly settled areas of the United States east of the Mississippi, and part of it west of the Mississippi River.

The ambition of this man grew by leaps and bounds as he began to feel the strength of the organization they had formed, and the political influence that was coming down like a cloud of grasshoppers upon the Post Office Department, as Mr. Howes admitted was the case. Braniff was growing stronger and stronger, braver and braver, and he laid out a new air map. At one time he claimed that it would be all right and equitable if they left to the old operators the main trunk lines from ocean to ocean, and divided up all the feeder lines among the independents. Afterward he said they could carry all the mail from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf.

On January 30, 1934, Postmaster General Farley appeared before our committee, and admitted that, of course, no prejudgment of contractors should be made; that, of course, there should be a hearing for them. He admitted that he had found nothing substantially wrong with the contracts, upon which he had acted by cancelation, and further admitted that he had taken this course of conduct to which I have alluded with respect to these contracts based on their validity, and that his conduct could be interpreted as a ratification of those contracts. That was on the 30th day of January.

At another place in the record Postmaster General Farley testified straight from the shoulder that he had ratified those contracts and approved them.

What happened between January 20 and February 6, when the written representations drafted by Solicitor Crowley and Attorney Ristine were taken to the White House? We must not forget who killed Cock Robin here. There is not any question at all on this record that the one man, if there is one, who is responsible for the representations made in this case, is Solicitor Crowley. At least 17 times the Postmaster General testified before us that he did what he did upon the advice of and upon the representations made to him by that man. We have Crowley's admission that what was taken to the President was the document which we had in our committee, and which shows misrepresentation after misrepresentation in order to create the impression that there had been fraud and collusion in letting the contracts, in making the extensions, and in changing contracts into certificates.

The record shows that Mr. Howes on the witness stand regarded those meetings as not subject to criticism. He regarded extensions as authorized by the law. He himself had never recommended cancelation; and when asked point-blank who did, he testified that Solicitor Crowley was the man who recommended cancelation.

In the meantime, on February 2, tremendous pressure was brought to bear upon that office. Was it for the public interest? Was it to gain anything that would benefit the Treasury of the United States, or the millions of air-minded people who have been deprived of this great agency of speedy communication? Not at all.

That pressure, as shown by the record here, had for its sole objective saving the existence of the independent operators. They set up a Macedonian cry for help—"Save us, save us, lest we perish!" Against the policy of the law, against the command of the Constitution that every man shall have the benefit of due process of law, the Postmaster General canceled all those contracts. That was the first time in the history of the United States that men in a group were condemned in any such way. Yet these men, including a former great official of our Government, were condemned, and the badge of collusion and fraud was planted upon their foreheads by fiat of an official of Government.

Mr. President, I am going to close my remarks. The Post Office Department is apparently elated over the low bids which it received in response to its advertisements for 90-day air-mail contracts. Either its officials are putting up a bold front in an effort once more to deceive the public, or else they are still so much in the dark about the technical side of carrying air mail that they do not realize that the tragic experience of the Army will be repeated if these hastily organized air-mail bidders actually begin carrying the mail. In any event, they are "whistling in the dark." The only question is whether or not they realize how dark it is.

It appears that if the route from the Nation's Capital to Detroit is awarded to the low bidder, the equipment used will be airplanes which had been discarded by the former operator as obsolete and unsatisfactory for the service. Naturally, a bidder purchasing airplanes off the junk heap can afford to underbid a carrier using more expensive and more efficient equipment.

While I believe in economy, I am not willing to approve the saving of 4.2 cents a mile in the cost of transporting air mail when it means less efficient service and greater risk to human life.

Brushing aside the injustice which has been done to those who developed and pioneered the route by the ruthless cancelation of their contract, the Government owes a duty to the postal users and to the traveling public to provide them with the best service possible. If the Postmaster General does not recognize this responsibility, it is high time Congress brought it forcefully to his attention.

Another former operator, clad in a veil of Farley cellophane, who failed to cut his price sufficiently to be the low bidder on his former route, has just taken delivery of a new twin-engined passenger and mail plane with a cruising speed of about 190 miles an hour. The low bidder on this route proposes to use an assortment of equipment which is 5 or 6 years old, and which cannot possibly render as safe and efficient service as that rendered by the former operator.

I call attention to the fact that on the route between Boston and Fort Worth, which is 1,750 miles long, the low bidder proposes to use eight single-motored airplanes capable of carrying only two passengers with the mail load. Furthermore, it is doubtful whether they can maintain a cruising speed of 110 miles an hour. If these new operators attempt to render as efficient service as did their predecessors by maintaining schedules under adverse weather conditions, the loss of life is going to be more severe than that experienced by the Army. It is true the weather conditions for the next few months will not be so severe; but between now and the time Congress meets again, bad weather will be encountered, and tragedy will again stalk our airways.

Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, but at least he was dealing with something that was his own. The present postal administration is willing to risk the lives of passengers and pilots, not to mention the United States mail, in discarded second-hand equipment, for a paltry saving of a few cents a mile, and its officials have the effrontery to pride themselves on their achievement!

It is true that not all the lines are passing into new and inexperienced hands. On 8 out of 17 routes there was no competition. By that I mean there was only one bidder. On eight of these routes the bid price was 10 cents a mile above the average of the other nine and more than 22 cents a mile above the lowest bid, which goes to show that some at least had a pretty good idea on which routes real competition was to be expected and actually did occur. As a matter of fact, the average on the eight single-bid routes is practically the same as the average that was being paid the contractors prior to cancelation. However, there were instances where a reorganized management under the actual threat of the loss of their route, with a resultant scrapping of millions of dollars invested in fixed assets along their airways, bid ridiculously low rates in order to maintain their right to carry the mail.

The air-mail companies have been submitting their financial statements to the Post Office Department, month after month, for the past year of the present administration. These statements show that they were losing money prior to cancelation when they were receiving as mail pay from 10 cents to 20 cents a mile more than they bid, in order to protect their fixed investments and their goodwill.

There is no question in the mind of anyone but that these low bids were made because the bidders believed that within a year the compensation which they would receive for carrying the mails would be determined by a nonpartisan commission; and rather than see millions of dollars invested in their routes made practically worthless, they concluded to incur additional losses in order to protect their investments and secure a franchise. Their action in so doing should not be construed as an admission of overpayment in the past, but merely the bowing before an autocratic and unscrupulous abuse of power in an effort to save something out of the wreck of the finest air transport industry the world has ever seen.

How can the administration justify compelling corporations to do business for the Government on a cost-minus basis, when they have written into many of the N.R.A. codes the provisions which make it illegal to sell goods or services below cost, and have branded as a criminal a man who pressed a suit for 35 cents in violation of a code, when the code price was 40 cents?

In a letter of November 10, 1933, from Gen. Hugh S. Johnson to the President, transmitting a code of fair competition for the air transport industry he said:

> The total increase in pay roll will be about 20 percent. It is considered that this is a substantial contribution to the reemployment program in view of the fact that the Post Office Department mail payments, which form the largest item of the air-mail income, have been reduced approximately 28 percent for 1933.
> Through the provisions of this code, the industry has an opportunity to provide for the control of new operations so that it will not be subject to uneconomic paralleling of lines, and the destructive competition experienced during the course of development by the railroads and bus lines.

The President approved this report, and by so doing in effect covenanted that his administration was opposed to destructive competition in the air transport industry, and within less than 6 months from that date his own Postmaster General, who doubles as the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and chairman of the Democratic State committee for his own State of New York, invites and encourages—nay, he goes further and coerces and compels—destructive competition in this very industry.

Even at the risk of seeming to be sacrilegious, which I do not intend, I can almost hear the Democratic rooster crow thrice. But I look in vain for an expression of shame on the countenance of the present Postmaster General. On the contrary he has all the self-righteousness of the Pharisees of old.

Mr. President, what I have undertaken to do here has been to show the record as fully, as currently, and as logically as possible in order that Senators and others might be influenced by it, and to show the need of putting on the air brakes and of keeping this institution in statu quo until an adequate investigation shall have been made, findings returned, a report accepted, and permanent air-mail legislation based on sound information adopted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. I understood him to say that on 8 out of the 17 routes the bids were about the same as those on the routes which had been canceled. I understood from the public press—I have not seen the documents—that the new bids have been much less, as a general rule, on these routes.

Mr. AUSTIN. On eight of them there was nearly the same rate. I called attention to the facts yesterday. I had here the entire list in detail and may be able to find it in a moment.

Mr. LONG. I just want to ask one more question. Perhaps the Senator from Alabama, who is going to take the floor, can tell me. However, are the 8 of the 17 comparable with the other 9, or are they what might be termed exceptions?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I do not think they are comparable. If the Senator will give me the time, I will search for the papers and will furnish him that information later.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire at this time, in view of the many statements that have been made concerning the cost of carrying the air mail and the result of the recent bidding, to insert in the RECORD a detailed statement covering the facts. In the first place, preliminary to the insertion of the statement in the RECORD, I call attention to the fact that before the investigation began to which reference has been made, the Government was spending practically $20,000,000 for carrying the air mail. Last year Congress cut down the appropriation to $15,000,000. The Budget then cut it down to $14,000,000. It became necessary, therefore, to have a further reduction in the contracts. Some few were eliminated; some few schedules were abandoned.

At the time of the annulment the average rate paid per airplane-mile was 37 cents. The average rate per airplane-mile under the bids opened April 20 was 28.88 cents. The annual cost of the service under the bids opened April 20, 100-percent performance, will be $6,105,221. If the same average prevails for the service for which bids will be opened on April 27 and for the proposed additional route mileage, the total annual cost will be approximately $7,720,103. It is therefore clear that the Government will obtain the carriage of the mails over all the lines where the contracts were annulled for less than $10,000,000.

I ask that the statements be included in the RECORD. They show the mileage before the contracts were annulled, the daily mileage schedule, the daily mileage schedule of the Army, the route mileage under the bids opened recently, and the route mileage covered by bids which are returnable April 27.

A great deal has been said about equipment and lack of safety. We will have the safest flying we have ever had.

Something has been said about a change to the use of single-motor planes. I have had prepared a complete list of the routes on which single-motor planes have been in use under the old commercial contracts. That will appear on page 2. On the same page will appear the routes on which single-motor planes may be used under the new contracts.

I also asked that I be given a statement from the Post Office Department as to the requirements in former contracts with reference to multimotored equipment, and I found that it did not exist. There was nothing in the old contracts with reference to multimotored equipment. The advertisements on routes 33 and 34 had a column reading:

Multimotor operation when necessitated by mail and passenger loads.

But the specific load was not stated.

The Department of Commerce has had a requirement for multimotored equipment which is still in existence under exactly the same conditions as heretofore.

I have found, also, that there have been a number of routes heretofore which were not carrying passengers at all. The contract did not require it, and it did not happen.

I found, also, with reference to the cruising speed which was mentioned, that the cruising speed required under the old contract was 90 miles, the cruising speed required under the advertisement A.M.–33 and A.M.–34, in 1930, was 100 miles, and the cruising speed required under the advertisement of March 30 was 110 miles.

This will give a very clear picture of the various contracts. All the dire prophecies to the contrary notwithstanding, the mail is going to be carried for far less than 50 percent of what it was previously carried, and it is going to be carried in safer planes, with more rigid requirements, and at greater speed.

I am not saying that the bids received are as low as they should be. I have no fear of any company's going bankrupt. I am too familiar with what they have been doing in the past. There will be no bankruptcy, and there will be no excuse for their trying to reduce the wages of any pilot or anybody else. I shall show tomorrow some of the profits they have been making—that one of them, for instance, which was not one of the biggest profit makers, in 1 year made over 300 percent profit on a mail contract—enough to last it for quite a number of years and to pay the pilots all they ought to be paid.

I do not want to go into detail, but merely to place in the RECORD at this time this full and detailed statement of the mileage heretofore flown, the mileage that will be flown, and the difference between what the people of the United States are going to have to pay and what they have been paying. I ask that the statement may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, April 24, 1934.

MEMORANDUM COVERING AIR MAIL SERVICE MILEAGE

	Miles
(1) Route mileage authorized to be flown by contractors as of Feb. 19	25,248
Daily mileage scheduled to be flown	97,076
(2) Route mileage authorized to be flown by Army, Feb. 20	11,543
Daily mileage scheduled to be flown	40,830
(3) Route mileage authorized to be flown by Army on resumption of service Mar. 19	7,457
Daily mileage scheduled to be flown	25,514
(4) Route mileage covered by bids opened Apr. 20	18,672
Daily mileage scheduled to be flown	57,904
(5) Route mileage covered by bids to be opened Apr. 27	3,665
Daily mileage scheduled to be flown	7,872
(6) Total route mileage covered by bids returnable Apr. 20–27	22,337
Total daily mileage scheduled to be flown	65,776

MEMORANDUM COVERING AIR MAIL SERVICE MILEAGE—continued

	Miles
(7) Additional route mileage proposed to be advertised	3,722
Additional daily mileage to be flown	7,444
(8) Grand total route mileage in temporary system advertised and proposed	26,059
Grand total daily mileage to be flown (This can be increased by additional trips being authorized where service needs. The decrease in proposed scheduled daily mileage, notwithstanding an increase in route mileage, is explained by a reduction in the number of schedules on some routes where the needs of service did not warrant former frequency.)	72,678
(9) Additional route mileage in territory not heretofore given Air Mail Service	1,693
Number new offices made stop points thereon	11

COST

(10) Average rate paid per airplane-mile at time of annulment	$0.37
(11) Average rate per airplane-mile under bids opened Apr. 20	$0.2888
(12) Total amount authorized for Air Mail Service current fiscal year	$14,000,000
(13) Annual cost of service under bids opened Apr. 20 (100-percent performance)	$6,105,221
(14) If the same average prevails for the service for which bids will be opened on Apr. 27 and for the proposed additional route mileage, the total annual cost will be approximately	$7,720,103.30

INCOME

Receipts by Post Office Department sale air-mail postage, fiscal year 1933	$6,116,441.57

PLANE EQUIPMENT

(15) List of routes on which single-motor planes are permitted under advertisements:

Route—	Route mileage	Mileage on which single-motor equipment is permissible	Remarks
Newark-Miami	1,195	1,195	If passengers carried multimotored equipment required on night schedules.
Newark-New Orleans	1,305	1,305	Multimotored equipment required for night schedules.
Boston-Fort Worth	1,753	1,753	If passengers carried multimotored equipment required on night schedules.
Chicago-Pembina	772	772	Do.
Chicago-Jacksonville	928	928	Do.
Chicago-Dallas	955	955	Do.
Amarillo-Brownsville	1,125	1,125
Salt Lake City-Great Falls	517	517
Cheyenne-Pueblo	201	201
Chicago-New Orleans	903	903
Fargo-Seattle	1,286	588	Multimotors on night schedules between Fargo and Billings.
Detroit-Milwaukee	257	257	Single motor if amphibian, multimotor if not.
Newark-Chicago (via Buffalo)	794	504	Single motor permitted on day schedule between Buffalo and Chicago.
Total	11,991	11,003

(16) Character of equipment operating prior to annulment:

Route:
Newark-Miami, single- and multi-motor.
Newark-New Orleans, single- and multi-motor.
Boston-Fort Worth, single- and multi-motor.
Chicago-Pembina, single- and multi-motor.
Chicago-Jacksonville, single- and multi-motor.
Chicago-Dallas, single- and multi-motor.
Amarillo-Brownsville, single- and multi-motor.
Salt Lake City-Great Falls, single motor.
Cheyenne-Pueblo, single motor.
Chicago-New Orleans, single- and multi-motor.
Fargo-Seattle, single motor in operation Fargo to Billings.
Detroit-Milwaukee, single motor.
Newark-Chicago (via Buffalo), single- and multi-motor.

(17) Which of former route contracts or certificates required multimotor?

With reference to requirements in former contracts, multimotor equipment was not specifically required in any of the old contracts. The advertisements on routes 33 and 34 had a column reading: "Multimotor operation when necessitated by mail and passenger loads." The specific load, however, was not stated, although the formula indicated that 563 pounds of mail would authorize payment for multimotor. It appears that its use was voluntary, however. So it may be stated no positive requirement by Post Office Department existed as to operating multimotor equipment.

PASSENGERS

(18) At time of annulment the following schedules were not carrying passengers:

Route—	Remarks	Route miles
Newark-Kansas City	1 round trip	1,135
Kansas City-Los Angeles	do	1,474
Chicago-Cincinnati	do	271
Cleveland-Fort Worth	do	1,141
Fort Worth-Los Angeles	do	1,329
Chicago-Atlanta	do	641
Atlanta-Jacksonville	do	282
Newark-Miami	do	1,195
Total		7,468

(19) Routes advertised March 30 and April 6 which leaves optional as to carrying passengers.

Route:	Route miles
Chicago-Jacksonville	928
Chicago-Dallas	955
Boston-Fort Worth	1,753
Total	3,636

SPEED

	Miles
(20) Cruising speed required under old contracts	90
Cruising speed required under advertisement for AM 33 and 34 in 1930	100
Cruising speed required under advertisement March 30	110

NOTE.—Since the above was written, it is proposed to add new service from Boston via Portland and Augusta to Bangor, and from Boston, via Concord, to Montpelier, total milage 370 miles, with a total annual mileage of 24,055, and with an annual cost on the basis of 30 cents per airplane-mile of $81,030. This would bring the total route mileage as shown in item 8 to 26,429 and would change item 9 to 2,063 miles, and increase the number of new offices from 11 to 16. This addition will increase the total daily mileage to be flown, as shown in item 8, from 72,678 to 73,418.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to enable me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, at the conclusion of routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, would that permit us to call up bills on motion? For instance, I may desire to submit a motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of a bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; under the agreement I have proposed the Senate can consider only unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The Presiding Officer (Mr. MCGILL in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Alabama does not desire to proceed further this afternoon.

Mr. BLACK. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor if any other Senator desires to speak this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I so understood. I also understand there is no other Senator who desires at this time to discuss the pending bill. Therefore, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 25, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 24 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1934

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, of Massachusetts, to be Under Secretary of the Treasury, to fill an existing vacancy.

UNDER SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Rexford Guy Tugwell, of New York, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Thomas D. Samford, of Alabama, to be United States attorney, middle district of Alabama, to succeed Arthur B. Chilton, deceased.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Lon Warner, of Kansas, to be United States marshal, district of Kansas, to succeed Donald H. MacIvor, term expired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, hear our prayer; give ear to our supplications. Thou art so good and Thy mercies are over all Thy works. May we be made men of the knightly spirit, laboring for the things outside of our own desires and taking chief pleasure in lowly service for others. Keep before us the truth, namely, "no one is our enemy unless he makes us hate." Oh, may that arch foe never enter the doors of our souls. Heavenly Father, inspire us with the spirit of the Great Teacher, which produces the finest type of life, the most persuasive endeavor, and resolves the discords into brotherly harmonies. O God, keep us from presumptuous sins, which so often cause good intentions to dwindle into small proportions. We earnestly pray that the ministry of this Congress may be most fruitful for all our people throughout our country. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hearst's Herald this morning, under large headlines, prints the following:

AGE PENSIONS SACRIFICED TO ABILENE RACE—DISTRICT BILL BLASTED BECAUSE TEXAN FEARS IT MAY BE HURTFUL TO HIS REELECTION

By Pat Frank

Because the Representative from Abilene is up for reelection this year, 1,240 aged and wrinkled and needy residents of the District are almost certain to be deprived of an old-age pension and happiness in their declining years.

Down in Texas, they haven't an old-age pension. The Representative from Abilene, who by some strange freak believes it his duty to keep the people of Washington from getting what they want, isn't going to let the District have what they haven't got down where he comes from.

* * * * * * *

This was after the panhandler, with a 3-hour filibuster, single-handed, practically blocked any hope of the passage of the District old-age pension bill.

* * * * * * *

(Texas papers please copy.)

Then the article goes on to attack me further in my representative capacity for having opposed yesterday a bill which I believed to be unsound.

I hold this gives me a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the statements affect the gentleman in his representative capacity and that the gentleman states a question of privilege. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall consume only a few minutes of time, because I know we have important business to transact, but I am getting tired of Mr. Hearst and his reporters hamstringing me every time I faithfully perform my service here for the people whom I have the honor to represent.

I opposed this District of Columbia old-age pension bill yesterday because it is a bad bill. I am in favor of a national old-age pension bill for all of the people of the United States whenever our Nation can afford it. I called attention to the fact that the District Commissioners had sent word here to the committee that hte District budget could not possibly stand up financially under the provisions of this bill, and yet the committee were going to put it over on the people of the District when their budget would not stand it. Why? They must have thought the Government of the United States would come in and furnish the money. I did not want my constituents and the rest of the United States taxed to furnish an old-age pension to Washington, when they had none of their own.

I called attention to the fact that the provisions of this bill authorized the Commissioners to appoint just as many employees as they saw fit and gave them carte blanche authority without any limitation. It also gave them the right by designating them by name as director or assistant director or chief or assistant chief to pay any kind of salary they wanted authorized under the Classification Act of 1923, and the right to appoint employees without number and the right to fix their salaries by naming the office they hold is an authority we should not delegate to Commissioners, but should be exercised alone by Congress.

I showed provision after provision in this bill that is unsound. I showed that they allowed a home to be owned by the pensioner worth $3,000 and that they allowed personal property of nearly $1,000 to be owned; that they attempted to pay $35 to both the husband and the wife, or $70 to a family, when in New Jersey they paid $14, and in Michigan I think they pay $24, and in California not over $30.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I only want to take up a few minutes of time.

When this House adjourned yesterday and I was leaving the House floor I found a plant at that door when I went to leave here, so arranged with a lady present that I could not say what I would like to say to outsiders who would accost me. I found two newspaper reporters present, whose names I did not know, but one of whom I understood was one of Mr. Hearst's reporters, attempting to call me to order for what I had done on this floor. I told him I did not have to account to him or to Mr. Hearst or to anybody else for what I did on this floor. Then he told me he was going to give me "hell" in his paper this morning, and I told him whenever he did I would give them just as much as he gave me. [Laughter and applause.] And in the Herald this morning I find this attack by Pat Frank, and hence I presume that he must have been one of the two reporters who accosted me. I do not live in any panhandle, and have never lived in a panhandle, hence when Hearst's Herald referred to me as "the panhandler" it was unwarranted abuse, and nothing else. My district is the geographical heart center of the great State of Texas.

Has the time come in the history of this country when a Representative in his representative capacity has to account to Mr. Hearst's Herald and other Washington newspaper reporters, when the House adjourns, for what he does on the floor of the House—not with me. I am one Member here who does not have to account to them.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I want to use only a few minutes. I do not have to account to Mr. Hearst. Just what excuse did Hearst's reporter, Pat Frank, have for thus attacking me? None! I want to put Mr. Hearst and his papers on notice right now that if he ever makes a dirty, little, cowardly dig at me in his papers again, I am going to take this floor and I am going to give his life history to the people of the United States. [Applause.] Has he forgotten the speech made in this House in 1898? Has he forgotten Sullivan's later speech? He loves to print the sensational in his paper. Does he know what good men and women in California are now saying about him? Ah, if he forces me to it, I will give you something that will make the old CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so sensational that they will quit reading the Hearst papers and read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter.] I have a stack of affidavits in my office from the good men and women of California, telling me about some of the escapades of Mr. Hearst on the west coast that would make the mothers of this country sit up and take notice of what a multimillionaire moron can do with his money in the United States.

Do you think I am going to let this rounder continue to abuse me in his papers? Mr. Hearst, you had better look out, I have got your number and I am going to put you in this RECORD if you libel me any more. [Laughter and applause.]

I have a letter here from one of the most prominent clerks of one of the most prominent committees that ever served this House and he tells me he was here when Mr. Hearst was sworn in, and he mentions the very few scattering times in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses that Mr. Hearst appeared in this House, and practically all he did was to draw his salary. He was sworn in and drew his salary, but he performed no service here. When I take an oath and draw my salary, I serve the people for it.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Hearst. Go your way and "give me hell" when you want to, but look out that you do not get a little of it yourself. [Laughter and applause].

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood there was a prior order of the House for another speaker on the program.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct but the gentleman from New York has yielded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no disposition to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, our President published a book recently, the title of which is "On Our Way." Not only is our Nation on its way but the Democratic Party is also on its way to greater achievements. I should like to read a short article from a newspaper published in my district to this effect:

REPUBLICAN LEADER IN ARCADIA IS CIRCULATING PETITIONS THIS WEEK IN SUPPORT OF CONGRESSMAN HOEPPEL

A. L. Parker, for many years an active leader in the Republican ranks, who was head of the organization 2 years ago in Arcadia to organize by precinct in Arcadia for the reelection of President Hoover, said yesterday he will change his registration at once to the Democratic Party.

Mr. Parker is now circulating a petition in support of Congressman J. H. HOEPPEL for reelection.

"On my petition yesterday I obtained the signatures of four Republicans and two Socialists, who said they would change their registrations at once to the Democratic Party", Mr. Parker said.

More than 3,000 names have already been attached to Hoeppel petitions now being circulated in the Twelfth District. The circulators are seeking a total of 18,000 names.

Success, however, always stimulates the activity of the enemy and so, with the growing confidence of the American people in the principles of our party, we have, at the same time the renewed opposition of selfish interests, evidenced by the insidious criticisms of our Democratic leadership appearing in the press. In time of war, the enemy is very anxious to snipe a general or any other high-ranking officer who goes into the front lines. In political life our leaders are always in the front lines, and in this administration their courage and determination to lead us in the enactment of liberal legislation in the interests of the people has made them the target of those whose only fear is the destruction of their own special privileges.

I do not believe that the sniping comes from the Republican side. In my opinion, all of this sniping comes from sinister interests, from interests opposed to the progressive legislation we have enacted, and especially from interests opposed to the proposed legislation for the regulation of stock-exchange practices.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Our friend the distinguished gentleman from California realizes that right now our able Speaker of this House and our able and beloved Democratic leader, Mr. BYRNS, have the confidence, esteem, and solid backing of the Democrats of this House. Is not that so? [Applause.] And they also have the confidence and respect of the Republicans on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Not only do they have the solid backing of the Democrats of this House but they also have the solid backing of the American people. [Applause.] While I have sometimes been in the ranks of those who voted against the so-called "administration policies", my opposition was, in the aggregate, in the interests of the veterans and the Federal employees. I pledged my loyalty to the cause of the Democratic Party, to our distinguished Speaker and the Democratic leadership, and in my voting here I have adhered to the principles of the Democratic platform. [Applause.] Our leadership may have made some mistakes, but I do not approve of the sniping that has been going on in some newspapers in opposition to our able Speaker and floor leader.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNN. Is there really any difference between a progressive Republican and a progressive Democrat?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I do not want to differentiate now between the characteristic qualities of progressive Republicans and progressive Democrats, but at this time I do want to express my appreciation of the service of our distinguished Speaker. He may have made some mistakes, but all good leaders make mistakes, and he is the type of man I wish to follow. [Applause.]

I wish to follow him especially on one thing uppermost in his mind, and which is also uppermost in the minds of a majority of the Democratic Members. The mere fact that our distinguished Speaker is in favor of the remonetization of silver, notwithstanding any mistake that he may have made before, establishes him in the new deal as a progressive leader in the interests of the people.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman kindly confide to the House these mistakes that he is talking about?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Perhaps if the report is true, the Speaker may have made one mistake when the purported black list was published, but I do not believe the Speaker is responsible for that.

I should like to say a word now in appreciation of the service of our able floor leader. [Applause.]

Where could we find a more amiable and worthy individual than our present floor leader? He is the personification of all that the word "gentleman" implies. It is a distinct pleasure to me to watch him unlimber the political Big Berthas when the need is imperative to hold Democratic lines. Even though individuals like myself are not always compliant, nevertheless I hold myself subject to the leadership of our distinguished Speaker and our floor leader, especially when they are attacked by our political enemies and the agents of special interests. In this I feel our entire Democratic membership is in accord.

Before I was a Member of Congress I came here and contacted our floor leader, and I found him an outstanding American and liberal in his views. I was especially interested in him some 2 years ago when I found him to be a man with a heart as big as this Hall. He was sincerely in favor of liberal legislation, and we are going to get liberal legislation if we will surmount the opposition and unite to combat the sniping which is directed at our leadership. If the snipers can discredit our leadership, naturally they will destroy our effectiveness, and this Congress will lapse into a stalemate as far as liberal legislation is concerned.

The discrediting of the House Democratic leadership is of especial interest to Wall Street agents, that special lobby which is spending untold sums to frighten Congressmen into emasculating the stock-exchange regulation bill, notwithstanding that the great bulk of the American people want this legislation enacted. The stock exchanges should be brought under the regulation and surveillance of the Government in the interest of honest business, and we will attain this objective if we will disregard the sniping directed at our leadership and continue to rally to their support. We cannot permit sniping in any form to frustrate the endeavors of the Democratic Party to enact liberal legislation in the interests of the people.

In the words of our President in his recent book, we are on our way, and I repeat that we will attain our objectives more expeditiously if, united under a progressive leadership, we will ignore the sniping of the Wall Street interests which seek to control us. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the House on April 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SUGAR BILL

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include a news item containing a statement made by Senator COPELAND on the sugar bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following news item containing a statement by Senator COPELAND on the sugar bill.

[From the Washington Herald, Saturday, Apr. 21, 1934]

PUERTO RICANS GET RAW DEAL, SAYS COPELAND—ATTACKS SUGAR BILL PASSED BY SENATE AS UNFAIR TO ISLAND AND COSTLY TO UNITED STATES CONSUMER

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, United States Senator from New York

American citizens living in Puerto Rico had a raw deal yesterday. By an overwhelming vote the Senate refused to increase the sugar quota for the island and thus improve living conditions of its inhabitants.

There will be many a hungry Puerto Rican by reason of what was done by the Congress.

OVERLOOK OBLIGATIONS

It would be bad enough to disregard the needs of the inhabitants of some island lying off the coast of Africa, subjects of some country in the Eastern Hemisphere. But to overlook the obligations we owe to Puerto Rico is something I cannot approve.

I made an appeal yesterday on behalf of the Puerto Ricans and their sugar quota by pleading that they are our fellow citizens. I pointed out what their trade means to us.

I could do this in all truth because Puerto Rico is one of our best customers, buying more than Cuba does. All these arguments fell on deaf ears.

INTERESTED IN CUBA

I have always been interested in Cuba. Almost the first public speaking I ever did was to urge that the United States intervene in Cuba. I went up and down the country with Quesada, the able advocate of Cuban freedom. Naturally I have sentimental reasons for wishing Cuba to prosper.

But frankness compels me to say that if I must choose between Cuba and Puerto Rico, an American possession, I must be for Puerto Rico.

It would seem to me that everybody should favor our fellow citizens in that island, but what we did yesterday helps Cubans instead of Puerto Ricans.

ADDS TO SUGAR COST

The American public will pay the bills for what the Senate did. The act will add at least $200,000,000 a year to the cost of sugar sold to United States housewives.

This enormous bill is presented to us in order that the inordinately expensive production of beet sugar may continue at the expense of the American people.

In short, we ruthlessly abandon Puerto Rico and dig into our pocketbooks for the beet sugar farmers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an article appearing in the magazine Today, edited by Mr. Moley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS. What is the subject? We have not been permitting publications of that kind to be put into the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] passed on this proposed insertion? He is a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, whose duty it is to keep out all extraneous matter.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, that is the duty of the chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH], to take care of the Republicans, and I hope he will be able to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is very active sometimes in the performance of his duties, and I am glad to see that he is here, as we do not want to overlook anything. I know that if he lets this go by it must be all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If the chairman of the committee thinks that we should permit these articles to go in, I have no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

REPUTATION OF CONGRESS

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio speech delivered on April 17, by my colleague from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech is as follows:

Someone asked me the subject of my discourse this evening, and I replied, "Reputation of Congress." My questioner asked, "Has it any left?"

This tendency to hold Congress in derogation is a favorite indoor sport. This custom has prevailed since the inception of Congress. When I first came to Washington as a Representative 12 years ago, I asked a little girl why the streets were lettered instead of numbered. Why "F" Street and "M" Street? She retorted, "That is the only way we can teach the Congressmen the alphabet."

Indeed, finding fault with Congress is nothing new. As far back as 1780, Jeremiah Wadsworth, a Member of the Continental Congress, in writing Gen. Nathaniel Greene, advised him that he had come to the conclusion that his colleagues were governed by principles unworthy of the meanest of God's creatures. I picked up a western paper dated 1890 and found the following item: "Great discovery made in Arizona. Seven-inch skull sent to Washington without the formality of an election." Very likely, if you would peruse the newspapers and periodicals of 1800 or during Andrew Jackson's decade you would find the following quip, "A Congressman is the lowest form of animal life."

During Abe Lincoln's decade, you will find the following colloquy reported:

Query. What is a Congressman?

Answer. One who wears a long black coat, a black hat, and a black tie, talks an hour and never stops to think a minute.

When women were first being impaneled for jury duty in one of our States, the lawyers questioning prospective female candidates, asked one who was called if she believed in capital punishment. "Yes," she promptly replied, "all those Congressmen should be punished."

John Sharpe Williams, retiring from Congress, said he fled from it as one would from a charnel house.

Former Vice President Marshall emphatically declared, "Congress is the omnium-gatherum."

Congress often bears the brunt of humorists such as Will Rogers and Irvin Cobb.

However, we in the lower House, if we can believe some mad wags, are not too bad off. One said the Senate is the place where good Representatives go when they die. Another, when asked the name of the lower House, inquired, "Is there anything lower than the Senate?" And, being a Democrat, I may be pardoned for saying, "And perhaps we Democrats in the lower House are better off than the Republicans, for it is said 'the Republicans are going from bad to Wirt.'"

Why all the sarcasm? Why all the spleen and venom? Why the jokes at the Gridiron Clubs? The reason is not hard to find. Congress is compelled, for example, to raise taxes to defray the expenses of government. In doing so it passes an income-tax amendment to the Constitution. It passes inheritance taxes and excise taxes, like imposts on checks and gasoline, most of which affect a large majority of the citizenry. Their "pocket nerve" is touched. They feel that something is being unwarrantedly filched from them. Congress even interferes with the people's leisure by a tax on admissions to movies and amusements. The rank and file conclude, finally, that the Congressmen are just a bunch of conscienceless bandits.

Congress passed a prohibition statute. It wounded the sensibilities of a great many people by doing so. The "wets" felt that their personal rights were being tampered with. They rebelled and called Congress some terrible names. When Congress remedied the situation by repealing prohibition it received little credit for its benefaction. The "drys" now yelled furiously. It was their turn to feel offended at Congress. Thus the circle of congressional enemies widened.

The voices of one's foes are always loud and articulate. The voices of friends are usually mild. The saying goes, "Your friends sometimes sleep. Your enemies never do." The friends of Congress seldom praise; the foes always scold. The friend of today easily becomes the enemy of tomorrow. Once an enemy, always an enemy. Any one bill adverse to his interests is never forgotten by the citizen.

Congress passed a bill providing for female suffrage. While most women rejoiced, many men bore resentment against Congress for giving their better halves the right of suffrage.

So with the passage of the child-labor laws. Many in the South were very resentful. We interfered with their liberties and the conduct of their business.

Thus with most statutes. Somebody's corns are trod upon. They wince. They place upon Congress the responsibility for all their ills. They curse it up hill and down dale. Small wonder, therefore, that the reputation of Congress now, as ever, is at low ebb. Of course, that reputation is ill deserved. If Congress were as black as it is painted, one wonders how the country ever grew great during all the years that Congress has prevailed. One would imagine that with such a halter as Congress around its neck, the country would be strangled.

If one of the most important branches of the Government, such as Congress, has been so sinful and remiss as the quips and thrusts of humorists and captious critics would have you believe, then the wonder grows how we made any progress at all.

Yet, casting one's eye back over 100 years, legislation has been passed which has built up the West, expanded trade and agriculture, made possible the great growth of railroads, made way for our merchant marine, telephone and telegraph and radio communications. Congress has helped in the building of the great airplane and automobile industries. It gave us the N.R.A., the A.A.A., the R.F.C., and other recovery agencies. It opened up the continent to immigration in the early days and closed the gates to the newcomers when that was deemed wise. It has guided the ship of state through the perils of war and the vicissitudes of peace.

Modesty forbids one of its Members to enumerate the many favors bestowed upon the Nation by Congress.

Another difficulty we must overcome is the fact that most people believe that all great men are dead. There are many brilliant and worthy men in the present House and Senate. All the famous men in public life who lived 50, 60, or 70 years ago seem to be the only ones to merit the laurels. The heroes are dead. Yet a comparison between many Members of the present Congress and the Members of any Congress that you might select of years ago would indeed show that there is no great difference between those now living and those dead as far as wisdom, vision, initiative, efficiency, and statesmanship are concerned. The great heroes of the past were human, subject to the same foibles and sins to which we, the present Members of Congress, are subject. We revere and set high on a pedestal men like Webster and Clay. Yet those legislators were realists and opportunists, at times even trimmers and hedgers and evaders, just as our Representatives and Senators of today. Both Clay and Webster were consumed by an overwhelming ambition to become President, and this ambition frequently clouded their judgment in the matter of voting. It may be that villianies of many sorts were indulged in by them. It is well known that Clay gambled too much and Webster drank too much.

The story is told that Webster went to the official of a certain bank in Washington and asked to borrow $500. He offered his note. The banker told him it was not the practice of the bank to loan money to private individuals without an endorsement. Webster was told to get a friend of his to endorse his note. He searched his memory but could not think of anyone who would be willing to oblige him. He left the bank rather crestfallen. He walked down Fifteenth Street and met Henry Clay. He said, "Henry, I need $500. The bank tells me they will not make this loan to me unless I have an endorser on my note." Clay's face lit up and he said, "That's fine, Dan. I also need $500. You endorse my note and I will endorse yours." Legend has it that the bank still possesses the notes.

I do not know how true the story is, but, judging from what I have read of the two gentlemen, it is typical of their habits.

It is not disparaging to speak of Clay and Webster in this manner. They were not perfect. They were not mealy-mouthed saints. They were subject to many of the ills to which the human flesh is heir. Well might we say that they were entitled to some sins. Giants can carry a thousand sins, and even the sun has its spots. No one is perfect. Yet Clay and Webster and Calhoun are always looked upon as perfect specimens, and it is held that the present Members of the House and Senate cannot hold a candle to them.

One of the best hated men who sat in the United States Senate was Senator Sumners, of Massachusetts. In New England he is the outstanding hero of the Civil War period. Yet General Grant despised him. When it was alleged that Sumners did not believe the Bible, Grant said, "No; I suppose not. He did not write it." Sumners had an overweening sense of conceit. Monuments have been erected to him, yet he had a bitter tongue and was often most unjust to his colleagues. He made a very ferocious attack on Senator Butler. It was so foul in its billingsgate that a nephew of Butler, Preston Brooks, pounced upon him in the Senate Chamber and well-nigh caned him to death. Incidentally Preston Brooks, who was a Member of the House, was censured by that body. He resigned, was reelected, and was presented with a new cane by the delighted citizenry of South Carolina, which State he represented. In Massachusetts Sumners is always a hero. In South Carolina Preston Brooks is always a hero. I doubt whether there is anyone in the present Membership of congress who could use the foul billingsgate indulged in by Sumners, or anyone like Brooks who would attempt to cane a colleague to death.

Remember further that the Congress represents a fair slice of the American population. Just as water never rises above its source the Members of Congress do not rise above the worthiness of the people who elect them. Very often, as soon as a man is elected to public office, intellectual miracles are expected of him. He is pitched or catapulted into a position of power and, therefore, great deeds are immediately anticipated.

There often arises the question as to whether a Congressman should lead or follow the public opinion of his district or his State. Shall he vote the way his constituents indicate or shall he attempt to vote contrary to their wishes, in the hope of lifting them out of the quagmire of error. A Member may, in true statesmanlike fashion, too often vote against the will of his constituents. It may seem to him the statesmanlike thing to do. But he cannot hold his seat and at the same time brave too often the onslaughts of his erring constituents. He brings the pitcher to the well too often. He finds himself soon defeated. Senator WADSWORTH, of New York, honestly and conscientiously voted against the soldier's bonus, voted against female suffrage, and voted against the eighteenth amendment. There soon united against his minority, forces resulting from these negative votes consisting of suffragettes, prohibitionists, and veterans. They became the majority and defeated him. It is difficult, therefore, for a conscientious Member of either House to follow the dictates of his own reasoning and do what he personally believes to be right, and at the same time satisfy his constituents or a great many of them who believe he is doing wrong. Ofttimes a Member will hedge and trim as did Clay and Webster, whom we now revere.

Indeed, Congress is far better than its reputation. On the whole its Members are worthy and efficient. Never forget Congress is the repository of the liberties of the people. It is the touchstone of democracy. With it there can be no dictatorship, no communism, no fascism, no Hitlerism. It is a worthy and efficient Congress that guards you from these evils.

LEGISLATION OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and in the second place to extend my remarks by including letters received from James E. Van Zandt and the legislative chairman of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, as to the second part of the request I object. I refer to the matter of the letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to extend his own remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest days in American history was March 4, 1933. On that bleak March day, with the banks closed, more than 13,000,000 idle working men, 30,000,000 farmers in distress, the eyes of the Nation and the world were turned to Washington, where a great leader was to take the oath of office of President of the United States—Franklin D. Roosevelt.

President Roosevelt's program, for the most part, is a progressive program. Much of the old order must of necessity be discarded. A lot of it must be discarded for the reason, according to the old slang phrase, "it was everybody for himself, and the devil take the hindmost man." The so-called rugged Americanism had resolved itself into a situation where a few could practically own, rule, and control the Nation. This, to the detriment and great loss of the great mass of the American people.

It is stated that President Roosevelt said at or near the time he took office that if he could be right 75 percent of the time, his tenure of office would be a success. There is no question in my mind, looking back at the picture from that date until now and looking into the future with what I can see and know of the administration, that his batting average has been and will be much higher than 75 percent, hence I predict his administration to go down in history as one of the greatest, and he will be recorded as one of the greatest, if not the greatest of American Presidents.

Personally, I have long prided myself as being a progressive. Accordingly his progressive legislation has been music to my ears. Since the Nation had gone into the slough of despond and the entire country had reached such a low ebb, both as to finances and spirits, it required progressive legislation to revive those drooping spirits and bring the Nation back again to prosperity.

For the information of those who have not followed my voting record in Congress, will say that I have worked for, supported, and voted for almost every measure of the recovery program, both the large measures and the smaller ones. My voting has been consistently in the public interest as against the special interests and against graft and greed. In the special session of Congress the following major bills were enacted into law: Emergency banking relief, maintenance of Government's credit (economy), permit and tax beer, emergency agricultural relief, farm-mortgage relief, and currency issuance and regulation, unemployment relief (reforestation), Federal emergency relief, Muscle Shoals and Tennessee Valley development, relief of small home owners, supervision of traffic in securities, railroad reorganization and relief, industrial recovery, public construction, taxes, and governorship of Hawaii.

Every one of these I voted for and worked for except one. At the end of the special session I received the following letter from the Honorable James A. Farley, which indicates that my record met with the approval of the administration:

Hon. EUGENE B. CROWE,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want you to know that I greatly appreciate the support you gave the administration program during the session just closed. I feel certain the people of the country generally realize that more beneficial legislation was passed at this session of Congress than ever before in the Nation's history.

For the part you played in these remarkable accomplishments, I want you to know that I am personally grateful.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely,

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Chairman Democratic National Committee.

In the present session of Congress, I have voted for and have earnestly supported every measure of the recovery program, the major measures of which are as follows: Independent offices bills; intoxicating liquors, tax; farm debts, refinancing, establishing corporation to aid; Reconstruction Finance Corporation, authorizing to continue; currency system, protect; naval vessel, authorize construction to treaty limits; civil works, and so forth; Revenue Act of 1934; Tariff Act of 1930, amendment.

My record, as can readily be seen, and is of record, is one of which I am not ashamed and ranks among the highest among the Members of Congress in the support of the President's recovery program. Twenty-two major bills have been enacted into law in the special and regular session, besides numerous smaller bills which had administration support, all of which I have supported except two, which is a very high percentage.

I have the personal endorsement of the Speaker of the House, the Honorable HENRY T. RAINEY, and of the floor leader, the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS, in clear language, complimenting my work and my voting record and my general standing in the House of Representatives.

I have a clear, defined belief concerning the rights of veterans. I feel the same toward them when they are marching home from war as I do when they are going forth to war. When they are drafted or volunteer and offer their lives and all they have to their country, everyone is strong for them. I feel the same way toward them when they come home, when they are disabled, when they are sick and afflicted. I have many times expressed myself thus to them. I have promised to support any veterans' legislation which I deemed fair and just. I never consider promises made just a thing to run on. I consider my promise a thing to stand upon and to live up to when the test comes; accordingly, I have consistently voted for what I consider to be just and fair veterans' legislation. In my recent vote for the Senate amendments to the appropriations bill for which I voted, which was for the most part legislation to restore pensions and compensation to presumptive, afflicted veterans, some of whom have been gassed, but are unable to prove their service connection. These amendments restored pensions to the aged Spanish-American War veterans, who are unable to prove their service connections at this late date. My promises had already been made to these veterans as well as to the veterans of our other wars. I had pledged them my support. I kept my word with them.

The recovery program of our great leader, President Roosevelt, is a many-sided, large program. It is difficult to tell which one of the larger programs of relief and recovery is of the greatest value. A great number of bills have been enacted into law, every one of which is of tremendous importance, all of which I have supported with exception noted above.

We have a progressive President, and I am a progressive follower of that great leader, whose leadership is speedily, surely, and certainly bringing the Nation out of this great panic and depression which engulfed us back in the year 1929.

HAS PROFESSOR TUGWELL REALLY CHANGED HIS VIEWS?

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, Professor Tugwell in speaking before a group of editors Saturday night was hedging. I am disappointed in the professor. I had thought he would stand by his principles. I had not expected him to turn to insidious propagandizing. That is the role for lesser personalities among the "new thoughters."

The professor was quoted in the press as saying:

I suppose there does not exist in the whole country today a more convinced believer in the Democratic process than I am.

This is quite a contrast to his views as expressed before the American Economic Association in December 1931. In a speech before that association, he pointed out:

We have a century and more of development to undo.

He stated that there must be three great changes: First, changing statutes, constitutions, and government once and for all; second, destroying business as it has existed; and third, destroying the sovereignty of the States. After summing up these three requirements for a planned economy, Professor Tugwell boldly and bluntly said:

All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea.

Surely the professor and all will concede that the N.R.A. and A.A.A. are at least "a limited acceptance of the planning idea." Three years ago the Professor, as an economist speaking before other professional economists, frankly stated that even a limited planning required a change of constitutions and statutes once and for all, a destruction of our form of business, and an abandonment of the use of the States as sovereign powers. At this time, as a holder of political office, when he speaks before the molders of public opinion, he regards this planning as only an experiment to preserve democracy.

At this meeting of the editors Professor Tugwell was reported in the press as stating that the most vigorous opposition to the administration's experimenting is coming from industrialists and financiers. However, he did not point out that the particular industrialists who are offering most serious opposition are the smaller industrialists, who are being crushed by large monopolistic competitors, which competitors are delivered from the antimonopoly laws by the N.R.A. codes. In the light of the recent report of the Federal Trade Commission that the steel industry under the N.R.A. steel code is enjoying an extra profit of millions of dollars annually, which profit was specifically denied before the adoption of the N.R.A. program, surely the Steel Trust is not one of the complaining industries. The Nation is anxiously waiting for publication of the Darrow report on the subject of the N.R.A.'s favoring monopolistic industries.

Likewise, the professor did not point out that it is the small country bankers or financiers who are bitterly complaining. When in Kansas more than 400 of the something over 500 State banks refuse to enter the new regimenting banking program, it is not international financiers who are complaining; it is small local country bankers who are fighting with their backs to the wall defending their very existence.

Professor Tugwell, as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, has much control over the A.A.A. In the case of the A.A.A., with bonuses based on the last few years of production, paid from processing taxes collected on all the products of all the producers, the large producers are given special privilege and the smaller ones penalized. The greater premiums and bounties are going to those who were financially able to produce during the last few years in the face of unfavorable prices. As they are being administered, the N.R.A. and A.A.A. and the banking act support and extend special privilege to the great and strong and are deadly to the small institutions and individuals engaged in industry, agriculture, and finance. This the professor did not point out. The professor knows that with our economic opportunity sufficiently centralized in the hands of a few who are great and strong, that the despair of the masses will in the end force one grand centralization of all business and finance in the Government. That will be not unlike Russia under the Soviet.

Professor Tugwell, before the editors, spoke critically of the frequent criticism of his communistic views. He was quoted as saying:

Seven years ago I visited Russia for 2 months. That visit has often been considered sufficient proof of my adherence to communism, as though communism could be caught by contagion, like mumps or measles.

It is not his trip to Russia which inspires many of us to believe that the Russian system of government and business is more dear to him than the American system. Rather, it is the words which he has uttered and written since he returned from that trip that prompt this belief. As examples of these statements I quote the following from his speech before the American Economic Association:

Many observers are observing the contemporary Russian practice and are recording carefully the experience there, which later may be of assistance to us, for instance, my (Tugwell's) Experimental Control in Russian Industry, also Henrichs and Brown, The Planned Economy of Soviet Russia. * * *

Decrying the profit motive in business, Professor Tugwell in that same speech said:

Most of us ought not to have been quite so free in our predictions that the institutions of Soviet Russia would break down from a failure of a motive. Yet some of us have gone on saying that even in the face of evidence. Not more than a month ago a past president of this association assured me again, as he had done before, that here was the source of the weakness which must finally ruin all the Russian plans.

I also quote the following from a speech which Professor Tugwell made in Philadelphia on December 29, 1933:

Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. * * * For the first time, the Government is thinking of the land as a whole. For the first time we are preparing to build a land program which will control the use of that greatest of all natural resources, not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it but for the greater welfare of all the citizens of the country.

In addition to these utterances, his many acts and deeds lead many to believe that he prefers the Russian system to the American system. An example of these is his determination and efforts leading to the socializing and communizing of the Virgin Islands, as well as using the A.A.A. as a means to control the land, "that greatest of all natural resources, not alone for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it." It will be remembered that Congress has enacted no legislation which authorized the Government to engage in a land program for the direct purpose of controlling the land. As far as direct legislation is concerned, the Government has no control over the land except the public domain. If the Government is now engaged in a program to control the land, as Professor Tugwell said in his Philadelphia speech, it can only be doing it through a perversion of the A.A.A. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was not enacted by Congress for the purpose of Government controlling the land. It was enacted for the primary purpose of obtaining a better income for the man who now owns and tills the land. Yet Professor Tugwell has said boldly that the Government is engaged in a program which is "not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to the land." Such is the Russian program. The Soviet is controlling the land of Russia, not for the benefit of those who happen to hold title but for what the Soviet proclaims to be for the greater welfare of all the citizens.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on roll call no. 131, on page 7165 of the RECORD of yesterday, a call of the House, the names of Messrs. BACHARACH, DOUGHTON, SAMUEL B. HILL, and myself appear among those failing to answer to their names. The reason we were not present is because we were in conference on the tax bill and could not answer to our names.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] is unable to be here today because of illness. He requested me to ask leave of absence for him for today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the request is granted.

There was no objection.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

The SPEAKER. At this time under the special order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully request that in order that I may present my thoughts in orderly sequence I be not interrupted until I shall have finished my discussion. I shall then be glad to yield for questions from any Member of the House.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the day is March 4, 1933. The hour is noon. The place is a pavilion erected over the east steps of the Capitol. The eyes of a crowd of 50,000 persons are fixed intently on two men standing in the forefront of a large group of distinguished men and women.

The elder man, wearing his robes of office, is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Charles Evans Hughes. The younger man, about to be inaugurated into the highest office in the gift and disposal of the American people, the Presidency, is Franklin Delano Roosevelt, of New York.

The vast crowd is silent as the Chief Justice holds out an open Bible on which the incoming President lays his hand. The Chief Justice recites the momentous oath of office, which the incoming President repeats after him in a clear and cultured voice.

As the last words were said, the great crowd, almost as one person, broke into loud cheers and applause. President Roosevelt began to read his inaugural address, and this event, long awaited as the keynote of the policy of the new administration, was given earnest attention by all. The President's historic words on that occasion were his desire to do first things, first, and that the only thing the American people need fear is fear.

The immediate result over the Nation might be summed up by the statement so often made in the next few days:

Now we have a President who will do something.

Optimistic hope succeeded pessimistic depression in the public mind.

For 4 years the American people had manfully stood up under a condition in economics, finance, industry, agriculture, and commerce in all its branches that was astounding. There was no planning ahead in economics. In finance there had been an orgy of flotation and speculation in bonds and stocks. In industry there were 18,000,000 men idle, willing and anxious to work, who were drifting about the country unemployed, helpless, and hopeless.

Agriculture had become overproductive, with the result that wheat was a glut on the market, while men, women, and children in cities were without bread. Commerce was in confusion. The railroads found their mainstay—the hauling of freight—decreasing and passenger transit dropping steadily. Banks were closing by the thousands, tying up and freezing the deposits and savings of the people.

Farms and homes were being foreclosed all over the Nation. Federal expenditures were excessive and often for futilities. Prohibition absorbed countless millions of appropriations in order that a fanatical theory might be enforced upon our people.

Capitalism had gone mad with a lust for power. Eighty-five percent of the money and resources of the entire Nation was held by 15 percent of the people. Many highly placed executives were being paid fabulous salaries and commissions running individually into millions annually, while workmen who had jobs were being grudgingly paid a bare subsistence or starving wage.

Political leaders were taking hopeful views, but were not doing anything to produce definite results in recovery. Without a charted course, no reliable compass, and no captain, the ship of state was drifting like a derelict on the ocean of events.

The vicious practices of frenzied capitalism in the issuance and manipulation of alleged securities, as exposed by Pecora during the investigation of stock exchanges and banking methods, astounded the average citizen beyond all measure. It was a rule-or-ruin policy, designed for the greedy benefit of a favored few at the expense of the plundered many.

Gold was hoarded in sums from a few hundred dollars to millions, and great amounts of gold were sent out of the United States to foreign countries for "safety's" sake, as if American gold would be any safer in the vaults of Europe, in the event of a catastrophe, than it would be in the United States Treasury or in the Federal Reserve banks.

To the south, from the Rio Grande to the Straits of Magellan, our American neighbor nations were suspicious of the policies of the United States. We may be assured that these suspicions were carefully fostered by European nations which were and are jealous of our great country.

American marines in Nicaragua and in Haiti were a source of objection to the larger South American nations as well as to the nations on which they were billeted. This objection took the form of continuous and emphatic protest from our Latin-American neighbors. The free United States was commonly referred to among them as "the Colossus of the North."

Continued depression in agriculture heavily reduced the purchasing power of farmers. Since the 40,000,000 farmers could not buy the products of industry, the purchasing powers of industrial workers fell off, and for 4 years these two conditions continued to act and react on each other in a lamentable and tragic reciprocation.

The people of our country lost faith in the administration at Washington and its reactionary stand-still policy, if what was not done can be called a "policy." Our people became distrustful of all financing and financiers. When billions were lent to banks, railroads, life-insurance companies, and other financial institutions with the foolish claim that prosperity would percolate and filter down to the great mass of people from the top, the great common sense of the people showed them that such an economic policy was not and could not be for the benefit of the many, but was deliberately designed as a dole for the advantage of the privileged few.

Small groups of men in allied and interlocked banks and industries were rapidly absorbing the resources of the Nation. Light, heat, and power companies, public utilities, public service of transport were owned or controlled by a few, and the utmost was extorted from the people in the way of charges to pile up profits. Alleged securities, sold to the public at high expansion prices, were bought back at low depression prices. They were salted away for the so-called "long haul", pending the time when another boom market could be worked up and these same securities resold at new expansion prices. It was an old game. This plan had been worked before. It had always been effective. Even if the quotations of these securities dropped to bottom prices on the stock exchange, they represented ownership and control.

All that these groups wanted was to be left alone, and so the infamous laissez faire policy of other days became supreme. All any racketeer, gunman, burglar, or easy-money man wants is to be let alone. But as it is the business of the police not to let the criminal alone, so it is the business of the Government not to let alone this unscrupulous laissez faire outfit.

The old dealers have had their day, and the way they dealt with the American public is shameful in its exhibition of avarice and greed. No application of social justice to the people ever was discussed at secret board meetings. The American consuming public was a huge cow, they thought, to turn the grass of agriculture, industry, and commerce into rich, thick cream of profits for those who controlled the pastures. [Applause.]

All these conditions that I have enumerated occurred prior to March 4, 1933. That was yesterday that I have outlined to you, but today there is an actual new deal abroad in the land. Living human beings and human rights were placed above nonliving property, and alleged property rights take second place to human rights. [Applause.]

It has been the great, good fortune of the United States of America that, at every crisis in its history, Providence has raised up a man to lead the way out of depression and tribulation. Today the United States of America has such a man in Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who combines high idealism with splendid practicality. [Applause.] President Roosevelt by most of his acts, as well as his words, during his first year of office has done more than restore hope for the present and future in the American people. He has given them confidence in themselves and their country, and has instilled again the national courage that had almost disappeared between November 1929 and March 1933. [Applause.]

President Roosevelt acted as promptly as the contingencies of the moment demanded, and as he had told the American people he would act. Within a short time he issued a proclamation prohibiting the hoarding or exporting of gold coin, currency, or bullion, and forbidding all banks to reopen except under such conditions and restrictions as might be set by the Secretary of the Treasury. Congress was summoned on the same day to meet in special session by President Roosevelt.

There was need for this prompt action. Public distrust of banks spread to the dollar. Within a short time the growing confidence of the American people toward President Roosevelt manifested itself by their return of hoarded money to banks. Gold came out of hiding, and the panic of the public, so far as preferring gold in hand to a bank account, was over.

A short time later President Roosevelt placed 250,000 of the unemployed youth in our Republic in the Civilian Conservation Corps, the so-called "C.C.C."

Soon after this the President, through congressional enactment, created the Tennessee Valley Authority, through which the Muscle Shoals project is to be finished.

This tremendous undertaking provided more work for the unemployed and gave cheap power for the development of that great region in the Middle South.

At the urgent solicitation of the President of the United States, legislation was immediately enacted providing for relief of mortgage distress among the farmers and the home owners of the Nation. This was accomplished through the agencies of the Farm Credit Administration and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. President Roosevelt was leading the forces of unemployed toward the road of recovery.

There were two halves to the sphere of action. One was reform. The other was recovery of prosperity. But recovery of prosperity without reform of methods that had led to the debacle of 1929, after 2 years of boom, would only again lead to the morass through which the people of the United States had floundered for 4 years—4 years of terrible depression to balance 2 years of whoopee and hoop-la speculation.

The sore spot in the body politic was finance and financial means and methods. The farmers had overprodced; so had industrialists. But the land was still fertile and could produce crops; skilled workingmen could still produce machine and hand products. Finance had gone wild. It had to be put in a strait-jacket and control. The only institution capable of controlling finance is the National Government.

So a series of legislative acts and Executive orders were put through. The Banking Act and the Securities Act were passed by Congress. The first required commercial banks to separate themselves from the security affiliates which banks had established in the boom days for the purpose of selling stocks and bonds, a method of doing business never countenanced by good banking ethics.

The functions of investment selling and those of deposit banking were dissociated and a guaranty of deposits up to $2,500 for each deposit account in National and State banks under the Federal Reserve System was established.

The Securities Act was modeled on the British companies act of Parliament, but went further in controlling and in penalizing than the English act.

Federal supervision was established over the sale of investment securities, and purchases of such securities were protected by giving them the right of legal action in case of omission or of misrepresentation of material facts by the issuers and sellers of securities. The Securities Act was passed without a dissenting vote in either the House or the Senate of the United States. [Applause.]

Abandonment of the gold standard, fixing the price of gold from $20.67 an ounce to $36 an ounce, followed. Thus the dollar was devaluated, with a view that such depreciation would be followed by higher commodity prices for goods that the dollar buys.

The chief difficulty in escaping from the depression was the tragedy of unemployment because of the maladjustment prevailing between the prices of products and produce and the load of private and public debt.

In a few quick legislative recommendations the Congress of the United States and the President immediately enacted several legislative enactments, such as the Agricultural Act, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the National Recovery Act, the Banking Act, Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, and Farm Credit Act.

No previous Congress in the history of our Republic has ever passed such a series of legislative acts affecting the welfare of the Nation in such a short period of time. [Applause.]

That this legislation has operated for the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the people of our Nation is attested by the present improved condition of agriculture, industry, commerce, transportation, and the wholesale and retail trades.

Under the National Recovery Act, the so-called "N.R.A.", the major industries of the United States to the extent of 90 percent, affecting 20,000,000 employees, have been brought under codification. The first code covering the cotton textile industry was approved by President Roosevelt on July 9, 1933. Between this first code and the end of March 1934, 975 national codes have been prepared, of which 362 national codes have been passed to approval by the President.

Codes of industry to the number of 478 have been prepared and are in various stages of development leading toward Presidential approval, leaving 135 industrial codes in works and under initial consideration. All of these codes are subject to revision, under the procedure that has been followed, if they are found to work hardship on either the employers or employees whom they affect, and many have been so amended.

Only 10 percent of industrial concerns, and they the lesser companies, are still working without codes, and this 10 percent employ 4,000,000 persons. All this has been accomplished in 9 months and is an index of the marvelous speed at which President Roosevelt and Administrator Johnson of the N.R.A. have worked to bring about the codification of industry according to the economic planning of the new deal.

The ideas on which these industrial codes are based are three in number. First, minimum wages for employees, to increase the amount of wages paid and thereby increase the purchasing and consuming power of industrial employees; second, maximum hours that employees may work, to increase the number of employed and spread employment; and third, collective bargaining by employees through their own organizations, to thus prevent the exploitation of labor by capital. This legislation is the Magna Carta of Labor. It is their emancipation proclamation. [Applause.]

Because of my belief in the principles of the N.R.A., as outlined, I voted against the economy bill, which took 15 percent of their wages, amounting to almost $190,000,000, from over 1,000,000 Government employees. I felt that the Government, in fairness, should not reduce the wages and the consuming power of its own employees and ask industry in general to increase wages of its employees. I objected to taking away and reducing the pensions and compensation of service-connected and disabled American soldiers who fought for the United States in Europe during American participation in the World War or who were under military command ready to go overseas when called to the colors. My vote in this case has since been approved and sustained by Members of Congress who have come to realize that I was right in my negative vote on the economy bill, and have by congressional act and vote restored their former pensions.

Congress voted an appropriation of $3,500,000,000 for the Federal Public Works bill, commonly known as the "P.W.A.", for the purpose of providing labor with employment in the building of bridges, tunnels, viaducts, roads, in the language of the National Recovery Act. As experience proved and forethought should have shown, a long course of preparation of plans, examination of proposed projects, and other essential technical work was necessary before men could be put to actual work, outside of drafting, surveying, and specification writing. So the Federal Civil Works Administration was set up for the proclaimed purpose of providing work to C.W.A., as it became known, financing of which came through a series of transfers from other emergency administrations.

It is my point of view that while the spending of this money for emergency relief did furnish emergency work to the unemployed, in the last analysis it is a dole; it is charity covered with the cloak of emergency employment.

Doles or charity are not what the American workman wants. He wants work, real work, because work means self-supporting labor, and self-supporting labor means self-respecting labor. [Applause.]

Self-supporting and self-respecting labor of any sort means good American citizens. [Applause.] Charity in any form means a treatment of the symptoms and not of the disease. It does not go to the cause. The present situation and the situation of the past 4 years was considered by many Americans as evidence of the impending collapse of the capitalistic system. If the capitalistic system cannot cure its own ills and bring back a decent prosperity for all, the Government of the United States will have to bring back decent, self-respecting, permanent prosperity by means that will have to be devised, that will go to the root of affairs, and not merely trim the leaves and twigs of one season. [Applause.]

Is the capitalistic system following lines of the decline and fall of Rome? You remember that in the late days of the Roman Empire the plebian populace were fed and entertained by panem et circensis—bread and the circuses. This marked the ending of the great Roman Empire. Many Americans contend that C.W.A. marks the beginning of the end of the American Republic.

Let us pause, ponder, and deliberate over this contention.

A few months ago I stood in the crypt of the cathedral in Warsaw before the tomb of Henrik Sienkiewicz, the brilliant and distinguished novelist of Poland, the author of the great novel Quo Vadis, which means "Whither goest thou?" To paraphrase it to my present purpose, I translate Quo Vadis into Which Road?

Which road are Americans traveling?

Dr. William A. Wirt, of Gary, Ind., says it is by a secret bypath to communism.

I say, "No."

Several Members of Congress have characterized it as the road to socialism.

Again I say "No."

Our distinguished colleague the Honorable JAMES M. BECK contends that Congress has abdicated its constitutional powers and has made our Government one of dictatorship. Is it the type of dictator symbolized by the despotic "ethnocrat", Adolph Hitler, of Germany?

No.

Is it the autocratic dictatorship of the theocrat, Adelbert Dollfuss, of Austria?

No.

Is it the absolute dictatorship of "proletariocrat" Stalin, of Soviet Russia?

No.

Is it the road trod by the British Empire to the British Commonwealth of Nations, with its peculiar organization of autonomous nations, created from former dominions which, while establishing practical independence, yield only voluntary allegiance to the British Crown?

Again I say "No."

Is it the old, smooth, well-oiled exclusive road dedicated to big business and the policy of laissez faire, or let us alone?

No.

Is it the road of democracy as built by Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson?

Some say "yes" and some say "no."

Then what is the road we are taking to reach the ideal temple of democracy as conceived and designed by the founders of our Republic? Our Commander in Chief, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, says it is the road of the new deal that will lead us to a remodeled republic that will bring economic security, equal opportunity, happiness, prosperity, and justice to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

That there may be no misunderstanding let me state to the membership of this House that I am not a disciple of reactionaryism; I am not a follower of ultraconservatism; but that in all my deliberations and actions I have uniformly fought for stability and order in government, coupled with progress and reform. I am therefore a liberal and progressive in my political faith and ideals. [Applause.]

Let me briefly analyze the social, economic, and political philosophies and practices of the various forms of government I have enumerated.

Mr. Speaker, what is communism? Communism pleads for an economic administration where all land and material capital shall be public instead of private property; where the state and not the individual capitalists shall be the employers of labor; where production and distribution shall be left not as they are today, subject to speculation and competition, but through a planned economy they shall be regulated in conformity with the laws of supply and demand, so that no one need be left idle, uncared for, ignorant, illiterate, or poor. Furthermore, through world revolution communistic concentration would come from the proposed organization of nations of the world into one gigantic confederation of mankind. Concentration of all private wealth into communistic control and its subsequent dispersion to labor would then be in order. Persuasion, propaganda, and in the end violence and revolution by force, are the means proposed to attain these ends. This is communism in the abstract. In the concrete it is actually an attempted return to the methods of patriarchial days; a breaking up into original units of nations and a vague plan of bringing all mankind to a common level based on manual labor. Communism is an extreme form of collectivism.

There is nothing in this formula of communism that I have just presented, wherein can be found one iota with which the President of the United States is in sympathy. It is a shame to pillory and excoriate the ideals and principles of our liberal and progressive democratic President as being in accord with the program of the Communist Party of the world. [Applause.]

In socialism the state would retain its national existence as a political entity and own, control, and manage all means of production and distribution. The Socialists claim that it was the purpose of the proposed Socialist Party in each country where it was established to educate the masses politically. Revolution by force and great general strikes were originally opposed. Labor, manual labor, was to be made class-conscious and to be organized into militant trade unions, as well as into political parties. The strongest weapon was not, in the ideal socialistic program, the general strike, or the bullet and bayonet of revolution, but the ballot. By political means the Socialists proposed to wrest control of production and distribution from the present-day ruling classes for the present-day ruled classes; to shift ownership and control from exploiting classes to the exploited classes. The Socialists originally were known as "Communists", but after suppression of the Commune of Paris in 1871, and adoption by the anarchists of that time of the name of Communism, their party name was changed to that of Social Democrats.

The great past prophets of social democracy were Karl Marx, Frederick Engels, Ferdinand La Salle, William Liebknecht, August Bebel, Jean Jaures, and Karl Kautsky.

No fair-minded man in this House of Representatives, or elsewhere, could accuse the President of the United States of being a devotee of socialism as I have just outlined it to you. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I now come to the subject of dictatorship. When the executive, legislative, and judicial powers of government are ruthlessly seized through strategem, force, or revolution by an arrogant individual and fused into a one-man power, this form of government is called "dictatorship." In Germany Adolph Hitler is a despotic "ethnocrat"—a racial autocrat—where only the pure Aryan or Teuton can be the beneficiary of the munificence of the state.

Nazi-ism is Hitlerism. Originally it started as a revolt against the rigorous terms of the Versailles Treaty and the economic tragedy that the German people had to contend against. Nazism has become a farce, a one-man farce, that came into being with Hitler and will pass out of being with his passing. It is a temporary fever of sadistic emotionalism besetting the German people, a transitory stage in the renationalism of Germany, which the good sense of the great mass of the great German people eventually will discard into the sewer of time. Soiled brown shirts can never be satisfactory substitutes for Goethe, Wagner, Kant, and Schiller. [Applause.] It is too bad that the swastika was adopted to the debased use it has been put as the emblem of Hitlerism. The swastika is a geometrical design which is the symbol of a great natural truth known to some deep students, but it can never mean Hitlerism, for its inference and scope is cosmic, not national.

State capitalism instead of private corporate capitalism finds its greatest expression and operation today in Germany, where it is in full control of the lives and liberties of the German people. The state and not mankind is the doctrine—man is made for the state, and not the state for man. This doctrine is not new. In one form or another it has always been the doctrine of tyrants, exemplified by the statement attributed to Louis XIV, "L'Etat c'est moi!": "I am the state!" Tyrants were the state of their time and place. Hitler symbolized the State of Germany. Hitlerism and the German State typify the combined racial tyranny of the person and the state.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not insult the intelligence of the Membership of this House by considering a comparison between despotic Hitleristic government with that of the program of our President of the United States. [Applause.]

Democracy is dead in Austria. The autocratic dictatorship of Dolfuss has succeeded it. State capitalism reigns supreme. The claim of the Hapsburg dynasty to rule by the divine right of kings has been transferred to the new Austrian State. There again the state is supreme. Freedom of the press, freedom of speech have been denied to the individual. The bullet has supplanted the ballot. Liberty and freedom are a myth in that former socialistic stronghold. Instead of the first article of the former constitution, which declared that Austria is a democratic Republic and that its laws emanate from the people, the first article of the new constitution is that Austria is a federal state and its laws emanate from God, the Almighty.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge the assertion that there is the remotest similarity between the "archonocrat" of Austria, Dolfuss, and the Democratic President of our Republic. [Applause.]

It is 17 years since, in the midst of the World War, social revolution burst out in Russia. I shall not review the first days of this gigantic turn-over, nor the conflicts between the Bolsheviki, the majority party, and the Menshiviki, the minority of the Socialist Party, but come directly to Nicholas Lenin and Leon Trotsky, Russian disciples of Karl Marx. Until that momentous day both had entertained the belief of the other Social-Democrats the world over, that social revolution would have to be contemporary and world-wide to be successful. Lenin and Trotsky seized their historic hour to expropriate the lands owned by the crown and the nobles and to allot sections of this seized land to the peasants of Russia, title however to remain with the Social-Democratic government. Out of this action grew the present Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, composed of seven constituent republics, or the "Soviet", as it is now called. Mines, railways, mills, factories, and workshops were seized for the benefit of the workers and the people as a whole.

A planned economy was thought out and worked out and a 5-year plan was put into operation. This later was extended to an additional 5 years. Planned economy was the base of the Soviet system. Under this system crops were controlled on distributed lands, industrial development and operation on a gigantic scale was begun; discovery and export of materials of which the Russian and Siberian lands had a natural monopoly, and development of water power, rail, and road communication were encouraged; rationing of the Russian people was inaugurated; huge initial purchases of American and other machinery were made; Lenin was practically deified after death; all resources were conscripted to the state; abandonment of the old religion was decreed; the academic, manual, and technical teaching of the young of both sexes and the primary and common education of illiterate adults was started. The erection of huge housing systems for the masses; the formation and spread of close Soviet groups, called cells, into all parts of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics to act as bonds with Moscow; the organization, training and equipment of a huge army; the spread toward the Pacific Ocean in Siberia; are some of the things which Stalin, the successor of Lenin, has put into operation since his accession to the absolute dictatorship of Russia and Siberia—a dictatorship such as Peter the Great or any of the subsequent Romanoffs never conceived possible. The latest development of Sovietism is the recognition of the Soviet Government by the United States of America, modified by insistence that no American credits be granted the Soviet until the old Russian Kerensky debts are paid. This is the sovietism of today. That is social-democracy as it has been developed in Russia and Siberia.

What characteristic of political sovietism can be found in the program of the President of the United States? None. [Applause.]

Those developments and utilizations of the resources of the vast Russian country which have proven successful have really been adopted from the business methods of other countries. The Government of the United States is not indebted to Russia, but the Soviet Government is indebted to the United States for many innovations that they have adopted in developing their country.

Syndicalism was the base of Mussolini's Black Shirts, but since the day in 1922 that Il Duce marched at their head into Rome and took possession of the Italian Government that form of government by syndicates of workers' unions has been expanded to the present fascism and has been so modified that Mussolini has become the Italian Government. One after another he has assumed the titles of the departmental chiefs and absorbed their duties in addition to those of the commander in chief of the Army and Navy of Italy. Mussolini transformed Italy into a closely united nation, rescued her people from poverty, restored all her production of materials and farming—nay, raised them to a higher plane than they had ever occupied. Today Il Duce is Italy more than Augustus ever was the Roman Empire or Napoleon the French Empire. Napoleon won great battles of war; Il Duce has won great battles of peace. He, too, has a long-haul plan—a 60-year plan for Italy—at the end of which time he asserts that Italy will be even greater than his present dream. Italy is looking to the sea again. She is looking toward northern Africa. She is looking toward the Danube and the western shores of the Adriatic. Sixty years hence—what?

We are familiar with Mussolini the man, but fascism, the system, is not so well known.

In fascism the state is absolute, superior to individuals or groups. It is claimed to be a guiding spirit with a will and personality and represents the spirit of the Italian Nation. In fascism the individual is deprived of individual liberty and freedom, save that which the State wishes to give him. In fascism the rulers have no responsibility or obligation to those whom they rule. They make the law and are superior to the law. Hence dictatorship follows. In fascism the law is an agent of power, but dictatorship—authority—is above the law. In Italy the dictator, Il Duce Mussolini, is the state.

Where is there any comparison between the situation in the Government in Italy and that of the Government of the United States? Again I say none. [Applause.]

Let us behold the Great British Government. It is no longer the British Empire. That great political institution has ceased to be. It has been succeeded by the British Commonwealth of Nations. There we find a union of free and independent nations only vowing allegiance to the British Crown. The people of these nations control their own domestic and extraterritorial affairs, which are beyond the pale and scope of the King and the British Parliament.

The new union of English-speaking people has given to the dominions of Great Britain a great freedom that is almost equal to complete independence. Commonwealth means common weal. It was the common welfare of the people in the various sections of the British Empire that has been the stronghold of the establishment of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Please observe the word is "nations", not dominions.

The only visible economic condition that we find present in the Roosevelt administration which is comparable to the social, economic, and political set-up of the British is the Civil Works Administration, which is equivalent to the British dole system in camouflage.

Kemal Pasha, the dictator of Turkey. What a name to conjure with. Its former sultans would not recognize Turkey under the present regime. The removal of the capital from its historic site on the Bosphorus—which as Byzantium and Constantinople had been the capital city since 657 B.C.—to Angora, in Anatolia, shows the far-reaching peaceful revolution to which the Turks have been subjected. The liberation of women from Moslem restrictions; the expansion of commerce; the education of the young; the liberalism introduced by Kemal Pasha under the strict reign of a dictator, as well as many other changes, have created and brought forth a new nation with new ideals, dedicated to the principles of liberalism and progressivism.

That is why Turkey is growing and developing under the benign influence of occidental civilization. Surely there is nothing in the program of Kemal Pasha to which the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, is indebted.

Let us look over the great Republic of France. The French tricolor still reigns supreme as the symbol of united people that are ready to live for their country in time of peace and to die for it, if necessary, in time of war. France is still a republic, despite outbreaks in Paris and elsewhere, which cumulatively became so serious as to incite riots and other disturbances that resulted in a call to Gaston Doumergue to come from retirement to assume the presidency of the council of France.

His recent patriotic appeal to the French saved the day. Rioting ceased. Peace has been restored and the risk of foreign invasion has been dissipated. Surely this is an indication of the wonderful stability and order that French valor and courage always offer on the altar of their Republic.

What is there in the program of modern France to which this great Republic under Franklin Delano Roosevelt must pay tribute? None. [Applause.]

The situation in the rest of Europe, of Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, Rumania, and the Balkan States, shows the same general unrest. Revolution is in the air. Discord, dissension, strife, and dissatisfaction with our modern economic condition seem to be prevalent everywhere. Many plans have been tried, yet no permanent solution seems to be visible upon the horizon.

This is not unusual in politics, but is unusual in economic, industrial, and agricultural affairs in Europe. A world-wide social, economic, financial, commercial, capitalistic, labor war is on. Great battles are being fought between new theories and established practices. The Soviet outlaws the accepted idea of God. Its followers seem to be atheistically inclined. The Fascisti restore God to honor and reverence. Hitler and Dolfuss substitute the state for God. Kemal Pasha knocks the shackles of Moslemism from the arms of the Turks and forbids the use of the fez for prayers. The Oxford movement spreads in England. Agnosticism seems to be growing in America. Expediency has supplanted sincerity. Opportunism discards rational development. Class is not only against class, but subclasses are opposed to each other. The world is at peace, officially, but there is no prospect for peace in the world. Warfare, not yet of bullets and bayonets, or rather of airplanes and poison gas, but of economics, commerce, political strategems, and the subtleties of diplomacy is as vigorous and as vicious as it had ever been in the history of the world.

Laissez faire is the wisdom of all the conservatives. The adherents of this principle believe that the state should not interfere in business, nor have anything to do in the quarrel between labor and capital, unless property rights are threatened and impaired. Its sole duty is to protect property and life. It is not concerned with human but with property rights and is deeply anchored in economic individualism. Its slogan is "Get it and keep it." But this principle is antiquated and can no longer regulate economic forces, because it endangers the existence of orderly government. [Applause.] Even the iron chancellor, Bismarck, the embodiment of ultra-conservatism, recognized the danger in the laissez-faire principle, and embarked upon a policy of economic and social reform, to secure the good will of the masses, for the authorities of the state. He introduced old-age pensions, social insurance, and all forms of social reforms, and made the state supreme, not only in matters military and political but also in matters economical and social. Within one generation after Bismarck's death all the western countries began to emulate this example. In England it was Lloyd George who by his income-tax and social-reform legislation dealt a death blow to the laissez-faire principle. In France it was Waldeck-Rousseau and the Socialists Briand and Clemenceau who first followed in Bismarck's path.

Today, only China, India, and the United States are still addicted to the laissez-faire principle. The world historic enterprise of President Roosevelt consists of giving up this antiquated principle of laissez faire in favor of a more modern, more advanced, and more humane social reformation theory of state, society, and government. [Applause.]

This theory reduced to its shortest formula is: The state has not only the right but also the duty to interfere with economic forces and determine their course, because the state is not only the watchman but also the dispensor of justice. It is the duty of the state not only to protect life and property but also to come to the aid of the weak and downtrodden. In short, the state is not only a source of power but must also be a source of economic justice to its people. [Applause.]

In abandoning the antiquated principle of laissez faire President Roosevelt has not abandoned the principles of Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson. Democracy itself is an abstract principle and unless intelligently applied, to the emergencies of experience and pragmatic life, remains only a theory. President Roosevelt in planning and executing his new deal, is revitalizing democracy, by applying it to the new economic realities. Like all great historical enterprises of this sort, it requires initiative and courage. This philosophy has nothing in common with dictatorship. [Applause.] That the new deal has nothing in common with either communism, socialism, or fascism can clearly be seen from the following facts:

Communism appeals squarely to reason and to intellect. Communism is purely rationalistic in origin and motive and is unemotional, or free from all tinges of emotionalism. Hence the cold-blooded brutality communism displays in the execution of its plans, because emotions do not influence reason. Communism is born of logic to the exclusion of love. Hence its affirmation of equality and denial of freedom. Emotionalism originates in love and comes from the heart just as rationalism, reason, and intellect originate in hunger. There is nothing lovable and charming about communism. It is the very incarnation of severity and rigorism. Communism, both of the mind and of nature, is something artificial. It requires a dictatorship to translate it into reality. There is freedom in nature but there is no equality in nature. Real statesmanship consists of fusion and a synthesis between freedom found in nature and equality, the product of the civilized mind.

Communism is not a fusion of these two great outstanding features of life—equality and freedom—but an over emphasis of the first, equality, at the expense of the second, freedom. Since communism denies all and every freedom, it denies an important factor in the life of man, and hence has a perverse element in its make-up.

But, to say that the new deal denies freedom is either a misinterpretation or a falsehood. What the new deal attempts to do is to harmonize and to bring into cooperation the freedom of nature, with equality, which is the product of the civilized mind to fit into the present-day political and economic realities. That is the principle of true democracy. [Applause.]

While the principle of democracy is permanent and eternal, its forms change with the passing of time. Democracy in ancient times was different from democracy in modern times. Nineteenth-century democracy is vastly different from twentieth-century democracy because economic and political conditions have changed. To harmonize democracy with the new exigencies of life is the motive power of the new deal, and only gross mental aberration can misinterpret it as an attempt to plant communism in America. [Applause.]

Fascism, whether brown, black, green, or blue, is a revolt against reason in politics and statesmanship, and is wholly emotional in character. Its display of color, its appeal to the senses or to the blood, its bellicosity, its whipping the masses with slogans, and its opposition to all rationalistic methods of government—like parliamentism, the ballot, free press, and so forth—testify best to the emotional primacy of fascism.

In fascism the leader is the source of law. He creates the law. He is therefore superior to the law. To himself he takes all the freedom; to his subjects he grants a crumb of liberty. He claims to be the fountain of truth. To uphold the freedom of the leader the equality of man must be destroyed, for no equality originates in reason. The contempt of the fascists for men of intellect testifies best to their rebellion against reason. Just as the Communists rule with an iron hand because of the exclusive use of reason, so do the fascists rule with despotic power, because of the exclusive use of emotions. It is the emotional basis of fascism which explains best the sadistic brutalities perpetrated in the concentration camps in Germany. This denial of all reason on the part of fascism and its exhibited contempt for the intellect makes it the perfect antithesis to communism. The paradox of communism and fascism consists in this: The philosophy of communism is reason; the philosophy of fascism is emotion. Both, in practice, lead to despotism and dictatorship in government. The philosophy of true democracy, on the other hand, being more realistic than either communism or fascism, is a balanced fusion of reason and emotion in government. [Applause.]

Democracy recognizes man as both a rational and an emotional being who must be treated accordingly. Communistic or fascist rule is simple. All it requires is an iron hand. But democracy is constantly engaged with difficulties, because it is always striving to adjust and harmonize two opposing forces—reason and emotion. It requires true statesmanship to bring about this adjustment and deep knowledge of human nature to be a successful ruler of a democratic country.

Such a ruler is our President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The topography of a country is conducive to either communism or individualism. European Russia is a great prairie. At one time it must have been the bed of a great ocean. Upon its steppes everywhere the poor Moujik, or peasant, cultivates the soil. The Russian agricultural plain cries aloud for equality. It reflects itself in the communistic philosophy that is found today in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Therefore, the flat plain is conducive to a level common thought which is equality. Wherever a country has great mountain ranges that tower in their magnificent beauty, and to human eyes seem to defy the very heavens, that ruggedness of peak after peak reflects itself in the rugged individualism of the person who lives in those mountains. In such countries as Switzerland and other countries that have these mountain ranges, communism could never exist. Rugged individualism always manifests itself in either monarchial or democratic forms of government.

In countries where they have great forests nature reflects itself on individuals. In nature freedom exists. Man and animal can rove from place to place. No equality exists. The strong eat or destroy the weak. Therefore a great deal of cruelty manifests itself. This cruelty reflects itself in the long wars that such nations usually go into. They never know when they are beaten. That is why Germany, the land of great forests, has had the 40-year war, the 100-year war, and the recent war with the Allies. They never know when they are licked. That may explain the cruelty of present-day rulers of Germany against racial minorities.

Whenever a country has jungles, the tooth-and-talon law prevails. India being the land of jungles, reflects the laws of nature upon the people who live there. Class hatred, bigotry, and intolerance are found everywhere. The untouchables are manifestations of the contempt in which one group of human beings holds another.

Those who live in the foothills and in the Himalayas reflect the rugged individualism which conquers those who are the victims of jungle life.

Afghanistan being a great mountain region has held its own against Great Britain, India, and Russia and against the ancient Manchus and Mongols.

In the United States we have great mountain ranges, great valleys, and great plains. In the mountain sections of our Republic communism can never exist because of the influence of the character of the country. Rugged individualism will and must prevail. The hill people of the great States of Kentucky and Tennessee have remained independent and Elizabethan despite the development of the country all around them. During the American Revolution, the mountain citizenry from the White, Green, and Allegheny Mountain ranges were the most obdurate fighters for our Colonial forbears and fought a most valiant and courageous battle.

In later days many radical, liberal, and progressive movements of our Republic have usually sprung from the Middle West, the great central plain of our Republic. Greenbackism, the populist movement, silver movement, and abolition were either started or developed in that section. Only a year ago in one of our western prairie States a judge and sheriff were intimidated by a group of citizens to prevent the execution of the law. Law and order finally prevailed.

Let me call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that these were group movements animated by community of thought and action. Therefore, communism is more likely to prevail in flat lands. The mountain regions of our country, whether north, south, east, or west, will always battle for democracy and the individualism that it represents.

The abuse of economic freedom by certain individuals is past history. It is the record of yesterday which, in terms of time, is the immediate past. It symbolized the freedom of unrestricted individualistic materialism which was known as rugged individualism or capitalism.

Another school of economic thinkers believe that today, which is the immediate present, sees the beginning of the disintegration of unrestricted individualistic materialism. It is the road which has led from rugged individualism to ragged individualism. This school believe that any leader, whether he be Roosevelt, Mussolini, Hitler, Dollfuss, or Stalin, who mostly disintegrates unrestricted individualistic materialism will be chiefly exalted. To many observers it seems that it is not the destiny of these five men to play other than necessary transitory roles toward a future ultimate system, which they believe is neither fascism or communism, but which some day will be known as "universalism." By universalism this school of economic thinkers mean the true fulfillment of Jefferson's illumined declaration that all men are created free and equal, just as they are in the universe. In universal law and principle this school of philosophic thinkers believe men are not equal physically, not equal emotionally, not equal mentally, but equal spiritually. They believe in spiritual leaders, and a spiritual government, with the material values subservient to them. This to their mind is but the recovery of the past, when ancient Jusae, Egypt, India, and Greece, had the same form of universal government. Therefore they contend true Americanism or real democracy is simply the fulfillment of the great universal motto, "E Pluribus Unum", which means one from many, one government from all governments, one corporation from all corporations, one religion from all regions, one race from all other races. That is what they interpret as the democracy of Jefferson, Franklin, and Lincoln. They are opposed to the plutocracy of Alexander Hamilton and the materialistic American leaders who inverted the spiritual destiny of this great universal country. The disciples of universalism see tomorrow's future as the end of material competition in our country and the beginning of material cooperation. This is the only way they claim they can destroy unrestricted individualistic materialism which is capitalism. They see the displacement of material competition with material cooperation and the establishment of economic security for everyone that is desirous of working with body or mind, and the great competition for the things that come from the mind and the spirit which is the only true individualism because in life the mind is the only individualist. Tomorrow or the near or distant future they contend, will bring the establishment of this material security, by material cooperation. Then mankind can compete, to become greater individualists, in the things of the mind and spirit, in the realm of science, art, and philosophy.

Vox populi, vox Dei. The voice of people is the voice of God. This they believe is true democracy—and true democracy is theocracy. In such a spiritual theocracy the spiritual leaders will be the mouthpieces of the people through whom the voice of God makes itself heard.

Ancient Greece, Egypt, India, and Judea when they reached their power and glory were theocratic—that is, democratic—for their rulers were spiritual rulers, referred to as priests and prophets, representative of the universal mind. Universalists point to the fact that they have had in this great universal country men and women who had carried on and are carrying on their universal work. One State alone, Massachusetts, the cradle of the new age, gave us great universalists, such as Ralph Waldo Emerson, Harriet Beecher Stowe, William Lloyd Garrison, Henry Thoreau, Julia Ward Howe, Margaret Fuller, Wendell Phillips, and Oliver Wendell Holmes, the father of the former Supreme Court Justice Holmes. This distinguished author and writer once said: "Build thee more stately mansions, oh, my soul." The stately mansions that they would erect in this country today is universal in its dimensions and fulfilling the dream of the American universalists. Thus, their economic philosophy is called "universalism."

These people stand neither with the nationalists or the internationalists but with the universalists of history who, through their present leader, David Sturgis, believed that the universe is the model for all governments and the guide for all people everywhere.

The rise of individualism in Europe coincides with the rediscovery of atomism in the sixteenth century. The atomistic world picture assumes freely moving atoms in infinite space. The scientists of the sixteenth century concluded that, as the macrocosmos consists of freely moving atoms, of free units, so must the microcosmos, or social cosmos, consist of freely moving social atoms, and that the social atom, the individual, must be as free in his movements as is the physical atom.

This is the philosophical background of liberalism and individualism. Its contrast, or opposite, is universalism, the philosophical background of which consists in the denial of atomism of every other individualistic force in the universe. The starting point of universalism is the oneness of God, the universe, nature, man, and humanity.

As a great liberal and progressive, President Roosevelt should like to give economic security to every man, woman, and child in our Republic. [Applause.] The curtailment of economic and financial individualism is not a violation of the principles of American democracy, but is an assurance of its continuation in the future. Without this curtailing of unbridled financial and economic individualism the future of American democracy would have become problematic within a very short time.

In conformity with the traditional ideal of democracy, President Roosevelt is now engaged in restatement of American democracy in terms of present-day political and economic realities. Thus does President Roosevelt emerge as the savior and redeemer of the heritage created by Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson. [Applause.]

Just as the modern conception of government is different from the paternalistic order of things, so is modern democracy somewhat different from the democracy of yesterday. Since it is no longer the function of the State to exercise the duties of a watchman, so it is not the task of democracy to be limited to the ballot. Political democracy can survive only when it is economically orientated. Economic orientation of democracy is claimed by some for socialism, but socialism is still abhorent to the people of our Republic. It should be pointed out that socialism, as the symbol for Marxism, according to its disciples, stands for collectivism as opposed to free individualism and is exemplified by proposed national ownership of all industry, utilities, and all economic and material resources.

Many Americans are not afraid of national ownership and operation of industry, utilities, and natural resources. What are Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, the national forests, and other reservations but actualities of socialism? What are the water, light, heat, and power utilities operated by the cities but other examples of socialism?

American people are putting into practice many of the principles advocated by Socialists. Why be afraid of the name when they stand in no fear of the thing itself? There is certainly no cause for worry for our Republic so long as the city, State, and National Governments strive to bring about good will between labor and capital, prevent the employment of children in mines and factories, provide constant employment for able-bodied men at saving wages, and take care of their citizens in their old age. [Applause.]

"Equal and exact justice for all; special privileges to none." This motto has been adopted by the Democratic Party, and under this motto America demands the abolition of special privileges to favored classes and equal justice to all who labor for their livelihood, whether by mind or hand, or both. [Applause.]

Men, fearful of the future, cling to the living order of things, and are afraid of innovation. It is for this reason that many people consider the changes wrought by our President as something revolutionary in character. His words and deeds are supposed to be in violation of the two great documents of our entire political fabric, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

In my study of the President's program I can find nothing that is contrary to the principles of human rights. I can find nothing that sets the State above the citizen. I can find nothing that provides establishment of a dictatorship. I can find nothing that provides for great armies, in times of peace, of brown, black, blue, or any color shirts. I can find nothing that provides for any symbol of hammer and sickle, of battleax bound with rods, of the swastika, nor of any symbol except that of the free American eagle and the stars of heaven, set in a blue vault, one for each State of the Union, the white of peace and the red of courageous hearts that had bled to preserve our Republic. [Applause.] Even the Blue Eagle is intended to represent an eagle, heraldic rather than actual, but still an eagle.

The edifice erected on the specifications of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution is still the temple of democracy. It is still the temple of the people. It is still the temple of "government of the people, for the people, and by the people", and I pray God that it may ever remain thus. [Applause.]

The additions made in the past by those who misread the specifications must be removed, and like Independence Hall in Philadelphia, the edifice restored to its original simplicity and beauty.

New architects have been called to the work. Some people call them the "brain trust." New workmen must build what they plan, and the edifice must be restored to its original lines. It must not have Russian iron, German paint, Italian marble, British oak, French decoration, or anything but American material. [Applause.]

The original temple of democracy was built in a hand age; the restoration will be completed in a machine age, but the object of the restoration is to bring about the greatest welfare to the greatest number of people and to reopen the temple doors to those who seek the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness, guaranteed to them by the immortal Declaration of Independence. [Applause.]

Quo vadis?

Whither the road to the future?

I propose that we take the path of planned economy along the course of which there are 10 guideposts.

First. To continue and make a permanent part of our institution the National Industrial Recovery Act and the National Recovery Administration, to keep and consolidate the gains already achieved under this act, and eliminate those regulations that have proven to be impractical.

Second. To continue and make a permanent part of our institution the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. To enlarge its functions so that loans may be made to small as well as to the large corporations and business people, to employ the army of unemployed to make them self-supporting and self-respecting.

Third. To place agriculture on a parity with industry by extending loans and credit to independent farmers and especially to the present transient tenant and crop farmers to give them permanent tenure of the land they cultivate and also protect them in the foreign markets of the world against international price cutting. [Applause.]

Fourth. Planned, systemized, and correlated development on a national scale of all means of transportation and communication. There is to be no building of railroads, airways, highways, or development of water courses, or means of communication such as telephone, telegraph, radio, without approval of this planning board.

Fifth. The encouragement of foreign trade by the establishment of reciprocal trade agreements with other nations of the world, and the encouragement of the American merchant marine by favoring American ocean freighters through subsidies and other similar means.

Sixth. The strengthening and enlarging of the power of the Federal Trade Commission with a view of eliminating unfair trade and business prices, unfair competition and purchase of goods dumped on the market through fraudulent bankruptcies.

Seventh. The enactment of a uniform banking law through the establishment of a single national-banking system under Government control. The encouragement of savings accounts with the Government, either in Postal Savings or with the Treasury, at a nominal rate of interest, with the entire resources of the United States as security. [Applause.]

Eighth. National ownership and operation of natural resources, such as public utilities and means of transportation and communication, including coal mines, oil and gas wells, interstate railroads, bus and air lines, intercoastal steamships, light, heat, and power plants, telephone, telegraph, and radio companies. [Applause.]

Ninth. National and international bimetallism, and the use of both metals, in adjusted proportions, as a basis for currency. [Applause.]

Tenth. The national ownership of all munitions of war and armor-producing plants with the trade in munitions and firearms, explosives and war gases and other munitions of war, limited to the Federal Government, States, and municipalities. [Applause.]

We in the United States are molding the civilization of the future. In the short period of a century and a half the pioneers of our country animated by courage, by fortitude and bravery and inspired by ideals have converted a wilderness into a great nation. Associated with them in this gigantic achievement have been other liberty-loving men and women who have given up their old heritage, forsook what they held near and dear and have come to this new land seeking liberty and justice and bringing with them the will and capacity to work. In the great crucible of American principles and traditions these two elements are fusing into a new national alloy, which, like the alloys of modern metallurgy, will possess qualities beyond the capacities of any of the orginal elements. [Applause.]

I have briefly outlined before some of the characteristics of today's governments in Europe. Each form of government has originated either through the collective will of the people or has been forced upon the people by organized force, substituting might for right.

In our own country we have achieved a political union that has withstood the test of armed invasion, civil war, foreign wars, the World War, and attacks of undermining forces alien to American spirit. Ours is still—and pray God it may ever be—a great democracy in which vox populi, vox Dei—the voice of the people is the voice of God. [Applause.]

The Old Testament speaks of the Jews as the "chosen people." The rulers of Europe today have appropriated and altered this phrase. Thus we find that Italy is the "chosen nation"; Austria, the "chosen state"; Russia, the "chosen class"; and Germany, the "chosen race." But superior to all these is our United States, for ours is the "chosen land", where rule is not by race, nor class, nor creed, nor color, but in which human beings can realize for themselves the highest aspirations that can be found in life. [Applause.]

Under the liberty and freedom which our Republic grants to body, soul, mind, and spirit, from all these diversified national elements among us, will ultimately be developed one group superior to all—the E Pluribus Unum of America, symbolic of one for all and all for one. [Applause.]

This great American group will carry on its constant faith in their Nation, founded in the struggles and the traditions of the past; glory in its peaceful triumphs and conquests of the present, and shine resplendent in the hope and confidence of its tremendous future. [Applause.]

Imbedded in the heart and soul of our people will be the two great mottoes—"E Pluribus Unum" and "In God We Trust"—the glorious symbols of America of yesterday, of America of today, and of America of tomorrow. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased at this time to answer any questions that any Member is desirous of propounding to me.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I observed that in referring to the accomplishments under Bismarck in Germany, the gentleman left out old-age pensions. Was not that enacted under his regime?

Mr. SIROVICH. I included that. I am very glad the distinguished gentleman from Illinois has brought that up, because every bit of social legislation that we find in our own country was first enacted by the archreactionary, the ultraconservative, Iron Chancellor Bismarck, in 1881. And I was very much surprised to see my good friend TOM BLANTON as a liberal Democrat stand in opposition this morning to the subject of old-age pensions.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. I congratulate the gentleman upon his very able speech. I am sure it proved very informative to the House. The gentleman believes, does he not, that the policies he has enunciated as the policies of today are the policies we are now pursuing? These principles and policies are based upon justice and equality and are in accordance with the tenets proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. SIROVICH. I am very glad that my distinguished colleague from New York, Mr. BOYLAN, asked that question. What I wanted to bring out is that the philosophy of the principles of Franklin D. Roosevelt are symbolic of the old principles of democracy. They are the same as those enunciated by Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Payne. The only difference is the form, because democracy is eternal in its principle, and its form changes as the years come and go, just the same as clothing. The shape and design of clothing of 1934 is different than the shape and design of clothing that was worn in the days of our mothers and fathers. Still the cloth is the same. President Roosevelt is trying to orientate the democracy of today to fit the social, economic, and political conditions that confront us in order to give to every man and woman of our Republic economic security and enable them to compete for the mental and spiritual opportunities in life that will ennoble mankind. This is the philosophy that underlies the new deal of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman please explain how we are going to get out of a depression when practically every factory in the United States has what they call an "age limit"? In other words, I am a member of the Labor Committee. When we were discussing the 5-day 6-hour bill, which I hope will be passed at this session, practically every man that appeared before us, who was the head of an industry, maintained that they had an age limit. I asked every one of them, What is your age limit? I do not hesitate to say that practically every one of them stated between 40 and 45 years of age. If the United States Government is not going to provide old-age pensions and unemployment insurance and all of our industries have an age limit, preventing men and women from getting a job when they attain the age of 40 or 45 years, how are we going to get out of the depression?

Mr. SIROVICH. In answer to my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], who has loyally and consistently supported labor legislation in this House, permit me to advise him that at the present time in this mechanistic age the slogan or shibboleth of modern industry seems to be, "Equal opportunities for all with the exception of those past the age of 40."

It is a tragic indictment of the civilization of our machine age that men past the age of 40 are being relegated to the scrap heap. However, the 5-day week and the 6-hour day, with which I am in thorough sympathy and accord, would be instrumental in dividing the work so that all of our citizens who are willing to work could be employed.

The profit motive which is being utilized for the benefit of the few in industry should be distributed for the benefit of the great mass of our unemployed. Competition for individual materialism should be supplanted with cooperation, making it possible to have economic security for every man and woman who is willing to work to earn his daily sustenance. Since labor is the producer of capital and wealth, it should be entitled to a fairer share in the distribution of the wealth it creates. When men and women arrive at the age of 50 or 60 and are no longer able to work in the quarries of industry, commerce, and agriculture the Government of the United States, in cooperation with the States of the Union, should have old-age pension laws which would pension every worker, every father and mother who have contributed their all upon the altar of industry, to be provided for in their old age. If it is patriotic to pension every soldier who is ready to make the supreme sacrifice upon the altar of war that his country might endure, it is just as noble, just as humane, just as patriotic to pension through old-age pensions the worker, the toiler and laborer, including helpless fathers and mothers, who are dependent upon charity for having given of their lives, health, and strength to make our country great, glorious, and prosperous. [Applause.]

In 1927 I spoke for 1 hour upon the subject of old-age pensions. That bill has become the model for all other bills that have since been introduced upon the subject. The speech that I then made made a most profound impression upon Franklin D. Roosevelt. When he became Governor of the great State of New York he wrote me a letter that it inspired him to appoint a commission to investigate the subject of old-age pensions, and through his cooperation and magnificent effort an old-age pension law was written upon the statute books of the State of New York. Old-age pension is now operating in almost 14 States of the Union. Old-age pensions are found in every civilized country of the world with the exception of China, India, and the United States. I am appealing to the Membership of this House to help us secure an old-age pension act before China and India leave this, the greatest civilized Nation of the world, still in the background for having failed to do justice to those who have appealed for aid in their declining age.

Mr. Speaker, in 28 nations of the world we have the compulsory contributory form of old-age pensions, in which the state, the employer, and the employee contribute an equal percentage for an old-age pension fund. This usually amounts to about 3 percent of the salary of the employee, a like sum being contributed by the nation and by the employer. Second, the voluntary contributory form of old-age pension, which is found in 10 different countries of Europe, in which the state just grants old-age pensions to men and women who have grown old and feeble in the service of agriculture and industry. The workingmen do not have to contribute to any old-age pension fund. The state provides for it alone. Third, there is the old-age savings fund, as found in Japan, in which the nation matches the savings of the workingman and provides for him when he is no longer able to work in the quarries of industry.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I am very much interested in the splendid statement the gentleman is making and I agree with his statement that President Roosevelt is carrying forward the principles of true democracy. I should like to have my distinguished colleague explain to the House, as I know he can, the fact that President Roosevelt is meeting with the same opposition that the reforms advocated by Jefferson and Jackson met with in their day; that he is meeting with the same opposition that the square-deal program advocated by Theodore Roosevelt met, that the new-freedom movement advocated by Woodrow Wilson met, and that that opposition, Torylike, as it was called in the reactionary days of early history, is ready and willing to step in in strong opposition. We see their opposition to the stock-market control, and yet they forget the Insulls and the Kruegers. We find their opposition to the Securities Act, to the Wagner Dispute Act, and we find partisan debate even in the matter of the air-mail cancelations. Much of this, in my judgment, is an organized effort to defeat the progressive reform advocated by the new deal and sponsored by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. SIROVICH. My distinguished friend has asked a very pointed question, but the question is age old in its conflict.

If the gentleman is conversant with the Bible, he will note the same battle being waged between the Sadducees and the Pharisees in Biblical times. You will find the same controversy between the "hoi aristoi" and the "hoi polloi" in Greece. You will observe the same discord, dissension, and disagreement between the Roman patricians and plebians. In medieval times the same conflict was waged between the barons, lords and dukes, and the serfs. In those days the serfs had economic security, but they had no liberty or freedom. Today the modern workingmen have liberty and freedom but have no economic security. To digress further, please observe that in the parliamentary constitutional form of Great Britain's Government the struggle between the Whigs and Tories and between the Conservatives and Liberals has always persisted. In this the Seventy-third Congress of the United States you can see the same line of demarcation between the reactionary element which is found on both sides of the aisle amongst Republicans and Democrats and the liberals and progressives found in both the Republican and Democratic ranks.

I am a great admirer of the President of the United States and was one of his early and first supporters as a Presidential possibility, yet I have never voted for a gag rule and I have never voted for a measure because the President wanted it. I voted for every measure of Franklin D. Roosevelt when I believed it was a liberal and a progressive measure designed to bring about the reforms that we have been speaking about. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman explain why there should be any opposition to a great American institution and the first means of raising revenue that this country knew before a system of taxation was put into vogue? Will the gentleman explain to us why this body that objects to so many things should really object to a national lottery conducted by the Government for public benefit, such a lottery as is conducted by more than 30 countries of the world?

Mr. SIROVICH. For the benefit of my distinguished friend from New Jersey, I desire to say that we have to observe a moral code in this Republic. Every honorable man and woman in this country is against gambling. It is unmoral and unethical. However, we have legitimized gambling on Wall Street. We have gambling on race tracks in various States of the Union. We gamble in the future of wheat, cotton, and other commodities necessary for life. We should have a uniform law that is equitable and just to every American citizen. If we allow one form of gambling, we should allow another, and lotteries belong to this category. My theory therefore is, let us eliminate all forms of gambling and let men and women earn their living in conformity with the dictates of humanity, in which social and economic justice reign supreme.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Does the gentleman think a lottery improves the moral code?

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman think gambling in Wall Street improves the moral code?

Mr. DOUGLASS. No; but does lottery improve the moral code?

Mr. SIROVICH. Not at all; but, as I said, if you allow one form of gambling, you should allow all others. There should be no privileges for one that are denied for others.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. SIROVICH. I agree with the gentleman that two wrongs never made a right, so we are battling in this House to bring about a fundamental doctrine of democracy which is the greatest good for the greatest number. [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1935

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 31, 32, 33, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 35, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "That the present incumbent as attending physician be advanced one grade as an extra number, provided that this shall not be considered as affecting the opportunity for advancement of any other person"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, and 30.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report as to each of such amendments, namely:

SENATE

On no. 14: Eliminates one skilled labor at $1,680, as proposed by the Senate.

On nos. 18 and 19: Appropriates $9,000 and makes $5,000 of that sum immediately available, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000, as proposed by the House, for the Vice President's automobile, and makes the appropriation available, as proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of a new car.

On no. 20: Appropriates $57,323, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $55,312, as proposed by the House, for reporting debates and proceedings of the Senate.

On nos. 21 and 22: Appropriates $268,955 and makes $150,000 of that amount immediately available, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $144,455, as proposed by the House, for expenses of inquiries and investigations; and eliminates from the paragraph provision heretofore carried for the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

On no. 23: Appropriates $25,500, as proposed by the Senate in a separate paragraph for expenses of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation instead of making provision for such committee in the item for expenses of inquiries and investigations.

On no. 24: Appropriates $35,000, as proposed by the Senate, for Senate kitchens and restaurants for the fiscal year 1934.

On no. 25: Amends the limitation in the House bill "that no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the operation of any restaurant" by exempting, as proposed by the Senate, appropriations made in the bill for Senate kitchens and restaurants for the fiscal year 1934 and appropriations available for heated and lighted space and janitor service for restaurants and kitchens.

On no. 26: Appropriates $187,345 and makes $90,000 of that sum available for the fiscal year 1934 for miscellaneous items, instead of $97,345, as proposed by the House, and $201,650.35, of which $90,000 should be available for the fiscal year 1934 and $14,305.35 for the fiscal year 1933, as proposed by the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

On no. 27: Amends the limitation in the House bill "that no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the operation of any restaurant" by exempting, as proposed by the Senate, appropriations made in the bill for Senate kitchens and restaurants for the fiscal year 1934 and appropriations available for heated and lighted space and janitor service for restaurants and kitchens.

On no. 28: Provides that the attending physician be advanced one grade permanently instead of being advanced two grades permanently, as proposed by the House, and one grade temporarily, as proposed by the Senate.

OFFICE OF ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

On no. 29: Appropriates $300,780 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $217,680 as proposed by the House, for maintenance and repair of the Senate Office Building.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

On no. 31: Appropriates $774,341, as proposed by the House, instead of $786,510, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of the Library proper.

On no. 32: Appropriates $18,100, as proposed by the House, instead of $21,700, as proposed by the Senate, for development and maintenance of the Union Catalogues.

On no. 33: Appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $130,000, as proposed by the Senate, for increase of the Library.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

On no. 34: Strikes out the provision inserted by the Senate authorizing payment for leaves of absence to be at the rate paid for the position at the time leave is granted.

On no. 35: Appropriates $500,000 of the unexpended balance in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1933 and makes the same available for the fiscal year 1934 for printing and binding for Congress and for payment for leaves of absence as authorized by law.

On no. 36: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for carrying into effect the act of March 21, 1934, to provide a commission to establish the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

On no. 37: Appropriates $7,438,000, as proposed by the Senate, for carrying into effect the provisions of the act of March 26, 1934, authorizing appropriations to meet losses sustained by officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries due to appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar.

On no. 38: Corrects a section number.

DISAGREEMENTS

The following amendments, all relating to the Senate, are reported in disagreement:

On nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 15, increasing the compensation of certain employees.

On nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 16, providing additional employees for the Senate.

On no. 17: Making permanent law of the changes in pay and numbers of employees proposed by the Senate amendments.

LOUIS LUDLOW,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, this conference report was printed in the RECORD quite a while ago, and I think everybody is familiar with it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is this a complete agreement on the part of the conferees?

Mr. LUDLOW. There are a number of amendments in disagreement, which will be read a little later.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, there is a group of amendments here that are all in the same category, and in order to save time I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc. These are amendments nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 15. These amendments all deal with increases in salaries of Senate personnel, and the attitude of the conferees of the House is one of opposition to such increases, and for this reason I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 1: On page 2, line 15, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000."

Amendment no. 2: On the same page, line 18, strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000."

Amendment no. 3: On page 2, line 20, after the word "clerk" insert "$4,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Amendment no. 4: On page 2, line 22, strike out the words "and printing clerk, at $3,540 each" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; printing clerk, $3,540."

Amendment no. 5: Page 3, line 10, strike out "$104,130" and insert in lieu thereof "$108,108."

Amendment no. 6: Page 4, line 2, strike out "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800."

Amendment no. 15: Page 8, line 18, strike out "$1,740" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,920."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the amendments may be considered en bloc. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate amendments nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13, providing additional employees for the Senate, may be considered en bloc.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's intention to consider amendments 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13 en bloc and then have amendments numbered 12 and 16 considered separately?

Mr. LUDLOW. They are separate amendments and require a different motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendments in disagreement as follows:

Amendment no. 7: Page 5, line 12, after the figures "$3,900" insert "assistant clerk, $3,600."

Amendment no. 8: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "additional clerk, $1,800" and insert in lieu thereof "two additional clerks, at $1,800 each."

Amendment no. 9: Page 5, line 19, strike out "assistant clerk, $2,400" and insert in lieu thereof "two assistant clerks, at $2,400 each."

Amendment no. 10: Page 6, line 2, strike out "additional clerk, $1,800" and insert in lieu thereof "two additional clerks, at $1,800 each."

Amendment no. 11: Page 7, line 3, after the figures "$2,220" insert "assistant clerk, $2,000."

Amendment no. 13: Page 7, line 23, after the amount "$2,640", insert "one at $1,800 from April 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935, both dates inclusive, $2,250."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 12: Page 7, line 4, strike out "$433,170" and insert "$443,880."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out insert "$443,610."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on receding and concurring with the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 16: Page 8, line 22, strike out the figures "$212,259" and insert "$212,934."

Mr. LUDLOW. I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out insert "$212,934."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 17: Page 9, line 9, insert "The provisions of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 are hereby amended so as to correspond with the changes made by this act in the designations and rates of salary of certain positions under the Senate."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. That makes permanent law of the new employees that we have just voted for the Senate, at the same legislative rate of the Legislative Act of 1929.

Mr. LUDLOW. The act of 1929 did not contain those. It makes it permanent statutory law.

Mr. GOSS. I want to say that I read some of the Senate debate on this question, and it was pointed out that all these positions might not be necessary—in fact, they tried to compromise by limiting it to September. If we pass this, we will authorize all of them with these increased prices.

Mr. LUDLOW. There has been an age-old comity between the two Houses, whereby one takes the good faith of the other as a matter of course, and when they represent that they need additional appropriations for help, I think one branch yields to the other; all of this, of course, within reasonable limitations. This is a very ancient tradition, and, so far as I know, it never has been abused.

Mr. GOSS. I want to say that Members of this House right here are just as much pressed and in need of help—in fact more than the Senators—for additional clerk hire. There has been nothing in the bill for an increase to anybody here.

Mr. LUDLOW. We, perhaps, impinged on the comity existing between the two Houses to a slight degree when we of the House conference committee refused to accept the increases in salaries which the Senate voted to some of its employees. I think we were perfectly justified in doing so, since we had declined to grant any increases to employees of our own legislative body. We stood firm, and will continue to stand firm, against these proposed Senate salary increases. They understand that we will not yield on that, but they insisted that these few additional clerks and assistants are absolutely necessary in the discharge of the work of the committees. As they know their own work better than we do, we were not inclined to dispute that point.

Mr. GOSS. The debate in the Senate further indicated that all of the Senators did not think they needed these clerks permanently, but some of them only through the emergency period. We have not a single bit of additional aid here in the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes; I yield to my friend and chairman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me say for the information of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] that the Senators have no personal secretaries. Each Member of the House has two secretaries, whether the Member is a chairman of a committee or not. The Senators who are chairmen of committees in the Senate do not have those secretaries. They are dependent upon the clerks of the committees of which they are chairmen not only to do the work of the committee but to attend to all of the correspondence of the Senator from his State.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me finish. There are four committees here where we have made increases. I am speaking about them now. Those committees have only four clerks, and those clerks have to attend to all of the duties of those committees and all of the correspondence of the Senators from an entire State. Take, for instance, the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House. With the messenger or janitor, or whatever he may be called, that committee has 4 clerks and the chairman of that committee has 2 secretaries, making 6 in all. Therefore the chairman of the committee in the House has 6 to help out, and a Senator, with an entire State to attend to, has only 4. I think it is nothing but right that they be given these extra employees.

Mr. GOSS. Let us look at it is in a different way. I understand that each Member of the House is allowed $5,000 for his secretarial staff, split up as he sees fit, less the cut.

Mr. BUCHANAN. He is allowed to have two clerks under that.

Mr. GOSS. Or he could have three if he wanted it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. GOSS. Under the $5,000?

Mr. LUDLOW. Just two.

Mr. GOSS. And he has $5,000 less the cut. What does the Senator have?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He has nothing if he is the chairman of a committee.

Mr. GOSS. How much is a Senator allowed in his office?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He is allowed nothing for clerks if he is a chairman.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, yes, he is.

Mr. LUDLOW. Then we must remember that a Senator acts for an entire State, composing many congressional districts.

Mr. GOSS. I grant that, but we have Representatives at large.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A Senator who is a chairman has nothing but the clerks of his committee. He does not have any in his office.

Mr. GOSS. I say that in the House we are allocated $5,000 to each Representative for his personal clerk hire. I am asking the chairman of the committee now how much is each office of the Senate allowed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. None, if he is the chairman of a committee.

Mr. GOSS. None?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Senators who are not chairmen of committees are allowed four clerks.

Mr. GOSS. How much money?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The usual salary, about $10,000.

Mr. GOSS. How much money? Ten thousand dollars?

Mr. LUDLOW. I think it is $9,000.

Mr. GOSS. It is $9,000 or $10,000. There are many men on the floor of the House who are representing States at large who have just as much correspondence as a Senator does on the other side; and yet that Senator, if he does not happen to be the chairman of a committee, has 4 clerks, while the Members on this side have only 2. That does not seem fair to me. Some of us—and I am not in that class, as I represent only one district—have just as much mail as a Senator.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the gentleman's argument about the Senator having four clerks aggregating $10,000, and that is what it is, does not apply to this amendment.

Mr. GOSS. I understand that it does not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And those Senators are not chairmen of committees.

Mr. GOSS. That is all right; but when the bill was under consideration here we did not see fit to put in any new clerk hire, regardless of the fact that our mail has increased, but the bill comes back from the other side with not only new clerks but many of them with increases in salary. I am glad that the gentleman did not grant that on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Cannot the gentleman understand? The Senators who are not chairmen of committees have four clerks, aggregating an amount of $10,000.

Mr. GOSS. That is correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is not in this amendment.

Mr. GOSS. I know it is not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Senators who have committees have only four clerks, with that committee work extra on their hands.

Mr. GOSS. That is true, with an increase in salary to those two extra clerks.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill gives them 1 more clerk to attend to the committee and 4 to attend to their correspondence, but no increases in salary.

Mr. GOSS. I am bringing up this point now, because every year the bill comes back with this idea of the Senate wanting this and that and the other thing, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are Members in the House representing States at large, and I know the mail in most of our offices is about as heavy as the mail that goes to the Senate, if not heavier, and I hope in another year the committee will give that due cognizance, so far as the Members here are concerned.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think if the gentleman will look into this he will realize that these few increases of Senate personnel covered by this conference agreement are warranted.

Mr. GOSS. I hope they are warranted, and at least that it will be so with those Members on this side of the Capitol who are representing States at large, and that they, the same as the Senator, might have additional clerk hire another year.

I do not happen to be in that class, so I am not seeking anything for myself.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Members of this House are entitled to one more clerk. Why Senators should have 4 to 6 clerks while we struggle along with 2 is beyond me. We are all overloaded with unanswered mail in this great emergency. If we want to help the unemployed office worker, here is an opportunity right in the Capitol. Perhaps we cannot bring this about in the Seventy-third Congress. I hope we can. I am willing to vote for one more clerk to be employed at a fair salary. Our constituents ask prompt service. This will help us render better service. I hope the able gentleman will present a resolution along these lines.

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman that undoubtedly that could be taken up with the Committee on Accounts. I understand there is a resolution pending at the present time before the Committee on Accounts with that purpose in view.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is there any prospect of its being brought up?

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot tell the gentleman the status of the resolution.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I hope the gentleman will press it; we need another clerk, and unemployed clerks need work.

Mr. LUDLOW. The matter has been started, I may say, and is on its way. I think all will agree that the proper way to legislate on this subject is through a legislative committee and not on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I shall be glad to support it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 30: Page 29, line 18, "Provided, That the quarters, heat, light, fuel, and telephone service heretofore furnished for the director's use in the Botanic Garden shall not be regarded as a part of his salary or compensation, and such allowances may continue to be so furnished without deduction from his salary or compensation notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 5, 1928 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, sec. 75a), or any other law.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 30 and concur in the same.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman explain to the House why the conferees have agreed to this amendment, and for what reason he now seeks to have the House vote to give to this official certain emoluments and privileges not given to anyone else?

Mr. LUDLOW. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that, as the gentleman recalls, the matter was discussed very thoroughly when the bill was before the House and the gentleman made a point of order on which the item was stricken from the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. I made the point of order against the item because there is no law to sustain it.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is true. Let me say to the gentleman that this matter was considered and adjusted many years ago on the basis of what at that time was thought to be a just and righteous compensation for this official. I grant that it is an unusual arrangement, but I do not believe it is unjust. I think it is just to the Treasury of the United States, because when we consider that even with the advantages and emoluments this official gets his compensation is very moderate considering his responsibility. He has under him about 100 employees. The utilities that he is allowed come from the Capitol power plant. There is no additional charge for the electric current he uses.

I have taken some pains to investigate this matter. I suppose the additional allowances and emoluments he enjoys amount to about $900. This brings his total compensation up to about $6,100, which I do not believe is out of line with the compensation paid other officials who have similar responsibilities. I grant that it is a very unusual arrangement. I think, as a matter of fact, it is entirely an anomalous arrangement. I do not believe there is another like it in the country; but at the same time I do believe it is just.

I think there is no element of injustice to the Government involved in it and I do hope the item will be allowed to stand.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not the gentleman think it would be much more preferable if the officer is not receiving sufficient salary that it be increased directly rather than by the granting of certain privileges that Congress does not give to other officers?

Mr. LUDLOW. It seems to me the matter is just about as broad as it is long. If we increase his salary and cut out these items, he would have to pay for them out of his salary. I do not understand why there should be any particular opposition to the present arrangement.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I am opposed to this method of appropriation. I think the Appropriations Committee should cut it out. I do not believe any privilege should be extended to any official that is not given to them all. There is no law for this item. The gentleman stated when the point of order was made that this had been allowed by somebody else prior to his appointment to the committee.

Mr. LUDLOW. That is true; it has been running along for many years.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is responsible for this now, however; and I may say that while I shall not cause delay today by having this item voted upon, it is objectionable, and I object to it. I think it ought to be cut out; and unless this committee is inclined to cut it out, so far as I am concerned, I intend to do all I can to prevent legislation of this kind being passed.

Mr. LUDLOW. I have no way of prophesying whether I shall be a Member of the next Congress or not, but if I am, I shall be perfectly willing to take it up ab initio, to start at the beginning and discuss it.

Mr. DOWELL. One more question and I am through: Does the language as carried in the bill make this item permanent law?

Mr. LUDLOW. I am informed that it does not. It is the same language that has always been carried, and can be taken up with the Committee on Appropriations the next time the legislative appropriation bill is considered.

Mr. DOWELL. I fear this might be construed to be permanent law. If so, I do not want it in the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am informed that it never has been so construed.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the present item in exactly the same language that has always been carried?

Mr. LUDLOW. I understand it is in the identical language.

Mr. DOWELL. And I understand the gentleman to say that hereafter he is going to see that there will be some permanent law for this item or that the committee will raise the question?

Mr. LUDLOW. No; if the gentleman from Iowa understood me to say that, he did not hear me correctly. That is not what I said. I said I would be perfectly willing to take it up from the beginning and consider it and submit the matter to the committee if I happen to be a member of the committee.

Mr. DOWELL. I may say to the gentleman that the principle of this is dead wrong. I am not, however, going to take the time of the House at this time to vote upon the matter; but unless this is corrected, and should the committee bring in further legislation of this character, I shall do all I can to see that a test is made of it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LUDLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUGAR BEETS AND SUGAR CANE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANZETTA reserved all points on the bill and report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 47 and 48.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 11½, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 20, after the word "section", insert a comma and the following: "except quotas fixed by paragraph (B) of this subsection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9 of the House bill, line 15, after the word "Act-", insert "relating to sugar beets, sugar cane, or the products thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert: "and will fix minimum wages for workers or growers employed by the producers and/or processors of sugar beets and/or sugar cane who are parties to such agreements"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 59.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments nos. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 11, 15, 28, 29, 41, 44, 45, 46, 51, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58 are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendments nos. 9, 11½, 16, 21, 25, and 49 clarify the language used in the bill as it passed the House, but do not in any way change the substance of the provisions to which they relate. On these amendments the House recedes.

On amendment no. 3: The House bill defined the term "processing" in the case of sugar beets and sugar cane. The Senate amendment is a restatement, in clearer language, of the definition, using the term "first domestic processing." The processing tax attaches upon the production of "direct-consumption sugar" whether this product is produced as a result of successive processings or in one continuous process. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment strikes out the definition of "processor", contained in the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment does not change the substance of the definition of "sugar" in the House bill but states it in simpler and clearer language. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 10 and 12: These amendments to the definitions of "raw sugar" and "direct-consumption sugar" provide that further preparation for distribution or use shall be the distinguishing characteristic, in addition to further refining or improving in quality, as contained in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 13: This amendment clarifies the definition of "raw value", and fixes a definite measure to be used in determining quotas and the amount of tax. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 14: The House bill provided that the rate of the processing tax should not be in excess of the reduction of the rate of duty on a pound of sugar raw value, in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930—that is, "full-duty" sugar—as distinguished from sugar coming from Cuba, and provided that in the case of sugar beets and sugar cane the processing tax should be imposed upon the production of products and/or byproducts resulting from the processing thereof, and that the rate of the processing tax should be in accordance with the total sugar content. The Senate amendment provides that if the tax at the full rate on the processing of a commodity for a particular use or uses will cause an accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity or depression of the farm price thereof, upon investigation, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, the Secretary of Agriculture may reduce the rate of the processing tax upon the processing of the commodity for such use or uses, or as to any designated product of the commodity. The amendment also provides that in the case of sugar beets or sugar cane the rate of tax shall not be in excess of the reduction of the rate of duty on a pound of sugar raw value, in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as adjusted to the Treaty of Commercial Reciprocity between the United States and Cuba. The amendment also clarifies the language with respect to the rate of the processing tax in conformity with the action of the conferees on amendments nos. 3, 5, and 13. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 17: This amendment extends the provision of paragraph 8 a (1) (A) (i) to the processing of sugar in any area to which the provisions of the title with respect to sugar beets and sugar cane may be made applicable for consumption in continental United States. The provision of the House bill related only to importation of sugar into continental United States for consumption therein and to sugar transported to be received in, processed, or marketed in continental United States. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 18, 19, 23, and 24: These amendments strike out from the provisions of paragraph 8 (a) (1) (A) (i) (relating to foreign countries and other areas) the Territory of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 20: This amendment clarifies the language by specifically providing that the quotas referred to are the quotas fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 22: This amendment, in connection with amendment no. 27, makes it clear that in determining quotas for the several supply areas outside continental United States areas provided for in paragraph (ii) (relating to Hawaii and Puerto Rico) will be included. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 26: This amendment provides for the readjustment of any quota subject to the provisions of the section—that is, quotas not fixed by Congress—and provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may appoint an officer, including the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, for that area in his name to allot any quota. The House recedes with an amendment making certain that the Secretary of Agriculture may not readjust quotas fixed in the bill for continental United States.

On amendment no. 27: This amendment makes separate provision for the Territory of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. In the House bill, these areas were covered in the preceding paragraph by the provision relating to various areas, including foreign countries. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 30: The House bill provided generally that, for any area producing less than 250,000 long tons of sugar raw value, during the next preceding calendar year, the Secretary may determine the quota. The Senate amendment does not change the substance of this provision but provides that the quota for the States of Louisiana and Florida, if fixed under this provision, shall not be less than the quota specifically fixed in paragraph (B). The House recedes.

On amendment no. 31: The House bill authorized the establishing of a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or for sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to the quotas established pursuant to the bill. The Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may establish a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to, and/or for edible molasses, sirups, and sugar mixtures produced in any other area or areas to which the title relates, as part of or in addition to, the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of the subsection. These provisions apply to the products referred to for use as such and not for the extraction of sugar. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 32: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill with respect to the proration of consumption requirements in excess of those determined for the year immediately preceding. In addition, it provides that continental United States shall have allotted not less than 30 percent of consumption requirements in excess of 6,452,000 short tons of sugar, raw value. The House bill left to the Secretary of Agriculture the determination of the base upon which the 30-percent participation applied. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 33: The effect of this amendment is to strike out the provision in the House bill with respect to the proration of consumption requirements found to be less than those determined for the year next preceding. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 34: This amendment provides that authorized agreements may contain provisions which will limit or regulate child labor. The House bill provided that agreements might contain provisions which would eliminate child labor. The House recedes with a clarifying amendment making certain that the agreements referred to are agreements relating only to sugar beets, sugar cane, or the products thereof.

On amendment no. 35: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill that all authorized agreements may contain provisions which will fix minimum wages for workers or growers employed by, or under the control of, the producers and/or processors who are parties to such agreements. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the substance of the language in the House bill but inserting a provision conforming to the limitation to sugar beets and sugar cane in amendment no. 34, and omitting the authority as to workers or growers "under the control of" producers or processors.

On amendment no. 36: This amendment reduces the fine for violating the Secretary's regulations from not more than $1,000, as in the House bill, to not more than $100. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 37: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill for imprisonment for violating any order or regulation of the Secretary. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 38: The House bill provided for forfeitures for exceeding quotas and allotments fixed under new section 8 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Senate amendment extends these provisions to the whole title. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 39: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill authorizing the appropriation, for the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, of amounts recovered as forfeitures. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 40: This amendment provides specifically that the district courts of the United States shall have the power to order specific performance of any order, regulation, agreement, or license. The House bill provided specifically that the several district courts should have power to prevent and restrain any person from violating any order, regulation, agreement, or license. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 42: This amendment provides that the enforcement powers may be exercised in any proceeding now pending or hereafter brought in the district courts. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 43: The House bill provided for the institution of procedings to enforce the remedies and to collect the forfeitures provided for in the title. The Senate amendment extends these provisions to remedies and forfeitures provided for "pursuant to" the title. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 47 and 48: These amendments provide that in the case of sugar beets or sugar cane, the compensating tax shall apply only upon direct-consumption sugar. The House bill contained no such provision. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 50: This amendment specifically provides that for the year 1934 the marketing year shall begin January 1, 1934. The House bill provided, generally, that the calendar year shall be considered to be the marketing year. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 52: This amendment provides that the refund may be paid to the consignor named in the bill of lading under which the product is exported. The amendment also provides that section 17 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, relating to exportations shall be applicable to exports of products of sugar beets and sugar cane to the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Canal Zone, and/or the island of Guam, only if the act with respect to sugar beets and sugar cane is not made applicable thereto. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 53: This amendment strikes out the provision in the House bill that there shall be a tax upon the reimportation of any article with respect to which any tax under the act has been, or is to be, refunded. The House recedes.

DISAGREEMENT

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 59.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the conference report with two or three exceptions involves merely clerical changes, or changes in language. There are two or three of the amendments which change the substance somewhat. These are explained in the statement accompanying the report and largely explain themselves. Amendment no. 59 has been reported back for a separate vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLANCHARD. As I understand it, the gentleman proposes to introduce an amendment to a Senate amendment which will deal with the subject of exemption of imported sugar from the floor tax.

Mr. JONES. That will come, of course, after the report is adopted. It has been worked out by some of the conferees, both of the House and Senate, in connection with representatives of the Department. I believe most of those who are interested are agreeable. That will be acted on separately.

Mr. BLANCHARD. So I understand.

Mr. JONES. It will exempt the sugar that pays the rate of duty prevailing on January 1, 1934. It will exempt that sugar from a further tax, because it will have paid the equivalent. The gentleman understands that they are simply putting that sugar on the same basis as sugar subsequently imported because the processing tax in no event can be larger than a reduction in the tariff; so it would simply put it on the basis of the other sugar. There is only a small amount of it, and practically all of the representatives of the beet-sugar States have agreed to the amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman state how much domestic sugar is involved?

Mr. JONES. It is not known exactly, but the Department estimates something like 100,000 to 200,000 tons is all that could possibly be involved, and that some of that sugar, being in bond, will not pay the full duty. A good deal of it cannot be identified, so we are informed, and they estimate that there will be only about half that number of tons involved. That, of course, is an estimate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it the gentleman's contention that the sugar that will come in and be exempt from the floor tax will be in the same position with reference to competition with domestic sugar as the result of this exemption?

Mr. JONES. It will be in exactly the position that sugar is in that comes in after the levying of the tax. That is, it will be in no better position, because the processing fee in no event can exceed the reduction; so it will be in at least as bad a position and maybe worse. It will practically have paid the tax in paying the higher duty.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is the gentleman's theory, of course, that domestic sugar which will be subject to the floor tax will not be placed at a greater disadvantage than if the exemption were not made for the imported sugar?

Mr. JONES. No; it will not in the new arrangement, because in the new arrangement other sugar could come in at the lower duty—that is, assuming the tariff rates are reduced. Of course, if they are not reduced, there will be no tax of any kind. Besides, you understand, the funds will be used for the purchase and distribution of the surplus sugar and this should help the domestic situation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that Senate amendment no. 59, subdivision (d), is an appropriation and not legislation.

Mr. JONES. There is no disagreement on that proposition, and it will come up after the conference report is adopted. We are going to submit that to a separate vote. It would be subject to a point of order but for the fact that the House conferees are going to call that up for a vote under clause 2 of rule XX.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask uanimous consent that the gentleman from Hawaii may have 3 minutes to address the House. I promised the gentleman this time and I overlooked the matter. I now ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious piece of legislation. I think it is one of the most serious pieces of legislation that has come before Congress this session. You are helping to partially destroy an industry that is now underproducing in the United States. This is the first time in years that Hawaii has sent a Democrat to Congress. I would like to come back here to Congress as a Democrat from Hawaii, but legislation of this character will make it even more difficult than it has been in the past to elect a Democrat in Hawaii. I want the Members of Congress to realize that the western sugar areas will bring into this coming election campaign the question of Congress reducing crops of a product that is now underproduced in the United States, in order to benefit Cuba. You gentlemen from the West will have to answer to your people for this at the next election.

I hear you gentlemen talk every day. I hear your best speakers on the floor talking against Wall Street.

Do you realize there is about $400,000,000 of the capital of Wall Street invested in Cuba, and you are trying now to curtail home products for the benefit of Wall Street and Cuba, a foreign country? You are doing this at the expense of Hawaii and the mainland sugar areas. Is it possible that you are going to vote for a bill of this kind?

Hawaii has suffered or will suffer from this bill. Hawaii is a part of the United States, just as much so as Colorado. Colorado, when a territory, was not in any different position in its relation to the United States from what Hawaii is today. Yet this bill deprives the Territory of Hawaii of a specific sugar quota, and treats us with even less consideration than it does a foreign country. Can you call this democratic or American?

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCANDLESS. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Perhaps you have not the same kind of folks interested in your sugar that some of those in Cuba have.

Mr. McCANDLESS. I take it you mean that Hawaii has no Wall Street moneyed interests to fight for our sugar industry, as they fight for Cuba.

Mr. TABER. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCANDLESS. We in Hawaii are taking care of Hawaii ourselves, but we have no vote here, and must depend on your sense of justice for fair treatment. This is your obligation, and you gentlemen seem to have forgotten this duty.

I want the western Congressmen to realize what they are standing for and what they have got to answer for to their people when they go back home this fall. I want to show them that Hawaii's prosperity means a great deal to them. We buy about $80,000,000 worth of goods per year from the Pacific coast, and yet not one of the gentlemen from those States has lifted his voice to protect Hawaii, one of their best customers.

I have here a copy of the Marine Digest of Saturday, April 14, 1934, which shows some of the products we are buying from the Northwest alone. The article is as follows:

JONES-COSTIGAN SUGAR BILL AN INSULT TO AMERICANISM

(An editorial)

In its present form, the Jones-Costigan bill for the Federal regulation of the sugar industry is vicious, destructive, and un-American.

It is un-American because—as concerns the sugar industry—it expels Hawaii from the United States and treats her as foreign territory. If the Hawaiian industry can be treated as a foreign enterprise, the same deal can be handed Alaska canned salmon, or northwest apples, or northwest berries and eggs. They, also, can be forced from under the Stars and Stripes.

In his sugar message of February 8, President Roosevelt recommended fixed quotas for all the sugar-producing districts of the United States, including Hawaii.

But as it passed the House, the bill provides fixed quotas for only our continental districts. It decrees that the quotas for foreign nations and Hawaii shall be subject to the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture. In brief the great Hawaiian industry is to be treated as an alien, as a foreigner, as an outsider; its whole welfare is to be made subject to the arbitrary action of a single official in Washington, D.C. It is to be plunged into an era of doubt that will spell unemployment and impoverishment.

Why one deal for the continental districts and another deal for Hawaii? Why are our continental districts to be allowed to know clearly and definitely where they stand as regards production, and why is Hawaii to be left in a twilight zone of repressive uncertainty?

And when was Hawaii thrown out of the American Union?

Hawaii has been an integral part of the United States for more than a generation. She is subject to our coastwise shipping laws on precisely the same basis as any other part of the United States. The N.R.A. is in full force in her territory. The American flag flies over her.

Yet under the Jones-Costigan bill she is shunted out of the Union; she is shunted into the company of Cuba and other foreign nations. Cuba is not under our N.R.A., nor is she under our coastwise shipping laws, nor does the American flag fly over her capital.

The bill tramples roughshod on one of the greatest principles of Americanism, viz, that all parts of America, with all their inhabitants, shall stand on an equal footing under the Constitution.

The issue of Americanism is paramount. And on this issue the bill, as it now stands, is evil, destructive, vicious, immoral.

The issue of Americanism is paramount, but there is another issue that is vital—the economic issue. The Hawaiian sugar industry is the chief backbone of prosperity and progress in the islands. The bill aims a deadly blow at the industry. That blow will recoil with tragic effect on Washington, Oregon, and California. For Hawaii each year pours tens of millions of dollars into the Coast States for the purchase of our products. In 1933, one of the worst years of the depression, she poured $10,000,000 into the Northwest alone for the purchase of apples, dairy products, eggs, potatoes, feeds, wheat, flour, canned milk, canned salmon, paper, groceries, and other local products. Elsewhere in this issue will be found details on this phase of the problem.

Hawaii is one of the pillars of Northwest prosperity. Any impoverishment of her great sugar industry will recoil heavily on our own well-being.

Neither on the paramount issue of Americanism nor on the vital issue of economic welfare can the Pacific Coast States now afford to stand idly by and let Hawaii be hamstrung constitutionally and industrially.

The Senate on many an occasion has risen to the great heights of Americanism. The opportunity again presents itself. The remedy for this evil situation is simple—a mere amendment to the bill, an amendment providing that Hawaii, like the rest of the United States, shall have a fixed quota on her sugar.

On that proposition, the duty of the Northwest congressional delegations is clear.

HAWAII BUYS EGGS, FRUITS, FLOUR, OTHER NORTHWEST PRODUCTS

The following list comprehends but a few of the commodities, with a total value of purchases as indicated, that were bought and shipped in American vessels from Pacific Northwest ports to Hawaii in 1933:

Apples	$54,780
Butter and cheese	205,291
Confectionery	45,342
Corn	45,655
Caustic soda	55,480
Drugs and chemicals	48,599
Eggs	142,049
Explosives	47,920
Feed	563,448
Fish	94,461
Flour	777,017
Furniture and fixtures	478,748
Groceries	144,597
Hardware	133,589
Lard compounds	31,727
Lumber, piles, poles, etc	750,752
Meats	497,969
Milk (canned, etc.)	258,227
Paper	338,881
Potatoes	99,926
Salmon (canned)	112,249
Sashes, doors, and moldings	123,935
Wheat	30,969

(NOTE.—The valuations here shown are nowhere near normal because of prevailing low prices in all of these commodities.)

50,000 PERSONS GIVEN EMPLOYMENT BY THE HAWAIIAN SUGAR INDUSTRY

Statistics show that Hawaii produced approximately 1,000,000 tons of sugar in the crop season of 1932–33. There is nothing to prevent the Secretary, under this bill, from cutting their production down from 1,000,000 tons to approximately 800,000 tons if he so chooses, and thus do an irreparable injury to the industry and jeopardize a $75,000,000 annual bill of goods purchased largely from the Pacific coast, principally to supply the sugar industry. The sugar industry of Hawaii has an annual pay roll of $24,000,000 and gives employment to 50,000 persons.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 32, noes 70.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment No. 59: Page 25, after line 19, insert:

"SEC. 17. Section 16 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"'(c) The provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply in the case of sugar beets or sugar cane or the products thereof.

"'(d) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase, out of such proceeds of taxes as are available therefor, during the period this act is in effect with respect to sugar beets and sugar cane, not in excess of 300,000 tons of sugar raw value from the surplus stocks of direct-consumption sugar produced in the United States beet-sugar area, at a price not in excess of the market price for direct-consumption sugar on the date of purchase, and to dispose of such sugar by sale or otherwise, including distribution to any organization for the relief of the unemployed, under such conditions and at such times as will tend to effectuate the declared policy of section 8a of this act. The sugar so purchased shall not be included in the quota for the United States beet-sugar area. All proceeds received by the Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of the powers granted hereby, are appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes described in subsections (a) and (b) of section 12 of this act.'"

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that Senate amendment no. 59, subdivision (d), is an appropriation and not legislation. Under subdivision 4 of rule XXI it is stated that—

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, under clause 2 of rule XX such an amendment is required to be brought in for a separate vote, and that is the procedure we are following here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands the rule.

Mr. LANZETTA. May I say a word with respect to clause 2 of rule XX? It is my understanding that specific instruction or authority may be given to the conferees if the bill is sent back to the proper committee first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the rule to which the gentleman has referred places a restriction upon conferees to the extent that they are forbidden to agree to a Senate amendment providing an appropriation on a legislative bill. The rule, however, does not provide for a point of order against a Senate amendment when it is brought back to the House still in disagreement. The Chair holds that the conferees on this bill have conformed to the rule, and therefore overrules the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES moves to accede and concur in Senate amendment no. 59 with the following amendment:

"In the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, after the letter '(c)', insert the following: 'Any sugar, imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane, with respect to which it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) that there was paid at the time of importation a duty at the rate in effect on January 1, 1934, shall be exempt from taxation under this title.'"

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the vote.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's request comes too late. The matter has already been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. A motion to reconsider the vote has been laid on the table, and the Chair therefore thinks that the demand for a division comes too late.

CITIZENSHIP BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up a privileged report from that committee, House Resolution 329.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 329

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 3673, a bill to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

THE TAX ON COCONUT OIL

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, opposition has been expressed by the President to the provision of the revenue bill levying an excise tax upon the first domestic processing of coconut and other oils. It is said that because this tax will apply to copra and coconut oil produced in the Philippines it is violative of the provisions of the recently enacted Philippine Independence Act. This act provides, among other things, that after the inauguration of the Philippine government trade relations between the United States and the islands shall be as now provided by law, with certain exceptions, one of which impliedly guarantees the entry into the United States tax free of 200,000 long tons of Philippine coconut oil annually. No limitation is placed upon the duty-free importation of copra.

Those who insist that the proposed tax is an infringement of the provisions of the independence act overlook the fact that no tax or tariff is laid upon the importation of coconut oil or copra. In view of this fact, there is no violation of that act. The proposed tax is levied upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, and this is defined as the "first use in the United States, in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale" of coconut and other oils. Thus the tax is no different in effect from the several processing taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act upon basic farm commodities. The tax is not laid at the customhouse but upon the first domestic processor.

Behind the technical objection to the proposed tax there lies a more important and fundamental question. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed to bring agricultural prices up to their pre-war purchasing power. Coconut oil competes with a number of domestic farm products, including cottonseed oil, butter, lard, tallow, and so forth. Because of its low price, the prices of competing domestic fats and oils are depressed. Essentially, therefore, the tax on coconut oil might be said to be an integral part of the farm program. The only question involved is whether Congress and the administration are going to sacrifice the American producer of oils and fats for the benefit of oriental workers and producers. At the present time the President seems to stand in opposition to the domestic farmer.

THE FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune today to have the privilege of meeting with Ohio farmers who are in Washington in the interests of the Frazier-Lemke bill. Each and every one of these men is an actual farmer, who lives on his farm, who has spent his lifetime farming, who heretofore has been able to realize a sufficient profit on his farming operations to build up his farm, erect buildings, buy equipment, furnish his house, and send his children to school and college.

Each and every one of these farmers is a delegate from the local unit of the National Farmers' Union, an organization founded by actual farmers, financed by actual farmers, and an organization which in all its history has never been accused of lobbying for special-privilege interests.

I think it is well at this juncture to inform my colleagues in the House of Representatives just how the National Farmers' Union is organized and maintained today. The membership organize themselves into local units, and when the required number of farmers have become members within a State, a State union is set up. Over and above that is the national organization, which was created by the members in the several States. The dues in the Farmers' Union vary from $1 to $2.50 or $3 per member a year, depending upon whether there is a State organization or not. In my own State of Ohio, the entire membership of the Farmers' Union have organized themselves, formed their own locals, and maintained their own officials and do their own work in conjunction with the national organization.

This organization has no high-salaried executives. It has no high-salaried farm doctors or quacks. It has no high-power lobbyists to pay. It is made up of farmers and farmers only, and the highest salary paid to any official today is $250 a month, and that includes only two officials.

The expenses of the delegates from the local unions who are here in Washington now were paid by voluntary subscriptions that were taken up among their own membership and other farmers and business men in their local communities, to finance their trip to Washington in the interests of the Frazier-Lemke bill.

It has been said by opponents of this bill that there has been no great demand for its passage except during this session of Congress. A number of Members contend today that they are unable to ascertain any concerted sentiment existing for it in their districts now. There is some degree of truth in some of these statements. First, it is an undeniable fact that when Franklin D. Roosevelt announced his candidacy for President of the United States and unfolded his program for agriculture, the farmers, by and large, Republicans, Democrats, and Farm-Laborites, firmly believed that the Moses whom they had long been seeking for deliverance had arrived. Naturally, because of this sentiment existing in their minds, they patiently went along month after month in the firm belief that their highest expectations would be fulfilled.

Personally, it was my privilege to encourage farmers in every section of Ohio in this line of reasoning and to inspire courage in them that the man who was to deliver them from the bondage and serfdom of the money lenders would be Franklin D. Roosevelt, the next president of the United States.

No one can charge that the President has not made a heroic effort to fulfill his pledges and the confidence the farmers reposed in him. He is essentially a humanitarian, but like all humans must do as all Presidents have done—delegate power and authority to his appointees. I refer to his Cabinet officials and to the heads of departments or of new bureaus of government created under this administration.

In the beginning of the session of the Seventy-third Congress there were many of us who declared at that time that the Frazier-Lemke bill was the only solution of the farmer's debt problem. We asserted on the floor of this House that the huge debt which hung over the farmer's head like the sword of Damocles was incurred during a period of the wildest inflation ever known in the history of this country. Those debts had been incurred while wheat was selling for $1.50 a bushel, while hogs were selling at 12 cents a pound, while fat steers were bringing 15 cents a pound, and all other farm commodities in proportion.

In other words, a bushel of wheat in those days would buy a dollar and a half. In the final analysis money is a commodity, instead of strictly a medium of exchange. Twelve and one third pounds of pork would buy a dollar, and, likewise, it takes the same number of pounds of pork or other products to pay a dollar of debt.

But following the great crash of 1929, at one period it required nearly 3 bushels of wheat to pay off that high-priced debt dollar contracted in an inflation period. Today it requires 1⅓ bushels of wheat to buy that same amount of money, which was formerly purchased by less than 1 bushel. And with all the glamorous predictions made for the corn and hog processing tax, we now find that it takes 33 pounds of pork to pay off that debt dollar which was contracted for with 12⅓ pounds of pork in the boom period.

During the May 1932 primary campaign in Ohio, I advocated a refinancing corporation for farm mortgages with a capital structure of $2,000,000,000. Remember, I said capital, and not bonds; instead of the Frazier bill with a currency set-up, we passed the Farm Loan Act with a bond set-up. While the Farm Loan Act of 1933 was debated on the House floor, opponents of the bill direly predicted that the bonds would not be negotiable or salable until the principal, as well as the interest, was guaranteed by the Government.

Their prophecies proved to be correct, with the result that loans negotiated up until a short time ago were made upon funds lent the Farm Credit Administration by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. So, naturally, Congress was compelled to guarantee the principal of the bonds.

The acid test of the efficiency of the Farm Credit Administration is found in their own statement that after more than 1 year's operation, approximately $600,000,000 of the $2,000,000,000 made available by Congress has been alotted, the loans that are actually consummated being far less than this amount. At this rate of speed, and we have no reason to believe that there will be any increase in speed or efficiency, it would take 4 years for distressed farmers to be refinanced under the present system. During this time thousands and tens of thousand will have lost their farms.

Again, under the present set-up, when a loan is accepted, the farmer pays more than 10 percent the first year in interest, stock in the bank, and commission fees. Here is the proof. He pays 4½-percent interest. There is 5 percent of the amount of his loan deducted for stock in the land bank, and 1-percent commission, making a total of 10½ percent that the farmer must pay the first year under the present system.

In other words, if he applies for a loan of $10,000, and his application is approved, instead of receiving the $10,000 he actually receives only $8,950.

Under the present act the physical limitations of the bill will permit only a small number of farmers who are in actual distress and who are in immediate danger of losing their homes through foreclosure to be refinanced. The present law only permits a loan up to 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the buildings in a first-mortgage loan, and this is entirely inadequate to meet the present mortgage situation.

Under the Frazier-Lemke bill the existing mortgage debt of the farmer would be refinanced up to the present fair value of the land. The contention is made that this is not sound business, but the real fact is that the test of whether a loan is good or whether a loan is not good is determined by the ability of the borrower to pay the interest and the principal of the debt.

Under the Frazier-Lemke bill a farmer with a $10,000 mortgage would have an annual carrying charge of both principal and amortization payments of $300 a year, while under the present law a farmer with a $5,000 debt would have a carrying charge of nearly $300 per annum during the lifetime of the loan. Therefore, the Frazier-Lemke bill is entirely sound in lending up to 100 percent of the value of the land, providing the existing mortgage amounted to that much.

The funds for refinancing the existing mortgage debt under the Frazier-Lemke bill, are provided not by an issuance of bonds but by issuing Federal Reserve bank notes. The Government of the United States now prints Federal Reserve bank notes and turns them over to the Federal Reserve banks at a cost of about 0.7 of a cent per bill, whether the bill is small or large or whether the bank keeps such bill for 1 or 20 years, and that is the total cost to the Federal Reserve bank in securing money to lend to member banks and even to the Government itself as well as other borrowers.

The Frazier-Lemke bill provides that the mortgage bonds would be used as collateral for these Federal Reserve bank notes and the 1½-percent interest that the farmer pays would go directly to the United States Treasury and be a profit to the Government. At the preesnt time the amount of Federal Reserve bank notes that could be issued under this bill would be slightly in excess of $3,000,000,000. The question has been raised that the approximate $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve bank notes that can be issued under the Frazier-Lemke bill is insufficient to refinance the total farm mortgage indebtedness of around $8,500,000,000.

The Frazier-Lemke bill provides that the available surplus and net profit of the Federal Reserve banks shall be invested in the 1½-percent mortgage bonds and also the franchise tax that is now paid to the Government. In addition to this the amortization payments of 1½ percent could be accumulated, with which to purchase additional mortgage bonds. This would provide sufficient funds to refinance the existing mortgage debt as fast as it is humanly possible to refinance and apprize and complete the loans; and thus it is possible under the provisions of the Frazier-Lemke bill to refinance existing farm mortgage indebtedness in the United States.

It has been contended on the floor of this House that the liberal provisions of this bill would enable the owner of marginal land to sell it to the Government by the mortgage route. This, of course, is not true, because of the fact that the bill does not provide for the making of new loans, and such farms, or, in fact, any farm, could not be mortgaged unless it already had a mortgage upon it. It has also been contended by Members that if this bill is enacted into law the farmers who wish to take advantage of its provisions will be forced into involuntary bankruptcy before their mortgages can be refinanced. This is utterly untrue and without basis of fact to support it. The truth is that in certain cases where large loans have been acquired during prosperous years and where the landowner has been unable to meet his interest payments during the depression years, and interest has been compounded by every conceivable and dastardly means known only to the money lenders, bankruptcy proceedings will be resorted to.

I mean this: Where the total amount of the principal and interest charges today is more than the apprized value of the farm, then, under the provisions of the Frazier-Lemke bill, the principal and interest, which is in excess of such value, would be scaled down under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereto.

I have before me here a typical case where the mortgage on a 338-acre farm 3 years ago was $18,800. This farm is located in one of the best farming counties in my State. The farmer became delinquent on interest and principal in February 1931. The accumulations of interest and compound interest and costs are as follows:

Loan no. 98734–2, Clifford K. Showers

Principal	$18,800.00
Balance interest due Feb. 20, 1931	734.87
Accrued interest to Apr. 1, 1934	124.00

Loan no. 98734–2, Clifford K. Showers—Continued

Interest due Feb. 20, 1932	$1,034.00
Accrued interest to Apr. 1, 1934	118.00
Interest due Feb. 20, 1933	1,034.00
Accrued interest to Apr. 1, 1934	62.00
Interest due Feb. 20, 1934	1,034.00
Accrued interest to Apr. 1, 1934	6.00
Interest on loan from Feb. 20, 1934 to Apr. 1, 1934	114.90
Old foreclosure costs	5.25
Continuation of abstract	8.00
Insurance advancement	173.10
Interest to Apr. 1, 1934	10.98
Court costs and sheriff's deed	50.81
Revenue stamps	23.00
Attorney's fees	275.00
Recording and transfer of deed	1.20
Abstract	15.00
1930, 1931, and 1932 taxes	905.92
Interest on same to Apr. 1, 1934	20.00
First half 1933 taxes	118.38
Fertilizer	37.72
Repairs	19.05
Seed wheat	35.82
Insurance	137.13
Total	24,891.13

Under the Frazier-Lemke bill the total amount that can be lent is $18,800, the principal of the mortgage. If the mortgagee refuses to scale down the amount that is now due through interest charges, foreclosure costs, abstract fees, court costs, attorney's fees, and fertilizer, repairs, and seed wheat, then the mortgagor must of necessity avail himself of voluntary-bankruptcy proceedings to refinance his mortgage and to save himself and his family from the poorhouse or Government doles.

This farm has been foreclosed within the last few months. The owner had applied for a loan from the Federal land bank at Louisville. He received a commitment of $22,500, and by the time the expense of making the loan was deducted and the 5 percent of capital stock in the land bank was also deducted, the net amount he had with which to pay off the $24,891.13 was more than $3,500 short. The insurance company refused to scale in order that this loan could be completed and proposed to evict this farmer and his family, and it is only because of the activity of a large number of his neighbors and friends that this farmer remains on the farm and has a home over his head, as a tenant of the insurance company, hoping that this Congress will pass the Frazier-Lemke bill, so that he may have an opportunity to repossess his farm and his home and save what he and his family have spent a lifetime to acquire. It is circumstances similar to these that the provisions relating to scaling down, under the provisions of the bankruptcy laws, are intended to cover in the Frazier-Lemke bill.

The Frazier-Lemke bill is the most necessary piece of legislation before this Congress, first, because it provides for the saving to the farmer of his home and his farm and permits him to continue as an independent home-owning farmer, who is not only the backbone of this Nation but the backbone of every civilization; second, because it is necessary to reduce the rate of interest on the farm-mortgage debt; and, third, because it is necessary to provide for a reasonable and necessary expansion of the currency.

Since March 1933, according to the Treasury reports, we have had a decrease of the total money in circulation of more than $8 per capita; and since this session of Congress convened, the decrease in total money in circulation is about $3.65 per capita. It is absolutely necessary that this Congress take definite steps to increase the total money in circulation in order to raise the price level of farm commodities above the level of fixed charges of taxes and interest.

To do these things—and these things are necessary—the Members of this House who have not signed the discharge petition on the Speaker's desk should sign the petition and bring the Frazier-Lemke bill out on the floor of the House for vote and passage.

This is exactly what the delegation of farmers from my State are asking. Under present ruinous prices for their commodities, high rates of interest, and the unsympathetic attitude of officials and legislation designed to save them, they say that they are headed straight for an economic hell and that the only measure that will head that off is the enactment of the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Of sympathy they have had much. Of the biennial-campaign concern of legislators who seek reelection they have had too much. They are fed up with sympathetic mouthings and utterances, and demand that the so-called "sympathy and ballyhoo" be replaced with action.

The action they demand now is the additional signature required to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from further consideration of the bill the farmers want, the bill sponsored by farmers.

Nothing less will satisfy them. Nothing will deceive them. The man who is facing foreclosure is the man who is facing the zero hour. He says what he means and means what he says.

Let this Congress, which has given industry the legislation it wanted, which has given labor the legislation it wanted, now give to agriculture, to the farmer, the legislation that he wants and demands. [Applause.]

THE CITIZENSHIP BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am confronted with rather an unusual situation this afternoon. There is a psychology that seems to be running around the Chamber with reference to an entertainment at some place other than the House of Representatives.

My only function in appearing here in support of this resolution is to get consideration of the bill on its way by the House.

I have no disposition to take any time in disposing of the rule. It is an open rule; it provides for quite generous debate on the merits of the bill, and if we can get the rule agreed to I think we can go over until tomorrow, as I understand that the bill will have the right-of-way in the morning.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the rule is adopted and we adjourn, that will not take me off the calendar and allow other business to intervene?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the majority leader will confirm what I say, that the bill will have the right-of-way tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNS. If the rule is adopted the bill will have the right-of-way tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I simply want to say that the report was a unanimous report. I know of no opposition to the rule, and I know of little or no opposition to the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With the understanding that this bill will have the right-of-way for consideration tomorrow after disposition of papers on the Speaker's table, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. LLOYD), Mr. KNUTE HILL was given leave of absence until April 30, on account of sickness and death in family.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, Congress appropriated a large amount of money to recondition the old frigate Constitution, and very properly so. The ship has been on the Atlantic coast, up Chesapeake Bay, and on the Pacific coast. It is now coming back by way of the Canal to the Atlantic coast, and eventually will reach Boston.

I am particularly addressing the Members from the Mississippi Valley States. We want the Constitution brought up the Mississippi River, and I am sure it is possible to do it.

We hope the Members from the Mississippi Valley will urge the Secretary of the Navy to order "Old Ironsides" up the Mississippi River so that the people in the center of the country will have a chance to see it. [Applause.] Can you conceive of anything that would provide more of an attraction and be more inspiring to the children of the Mississippi Valley than this historical ship?

I recall many, many years ago when the gunboat Nashville was brought to St. Louis. Hundreds of thousands came to have a look at the vessel at anchor in the middle of the river off St. Louis. With our present method of transportation, millions would come to the banks of the Mississippi from miles inland to see this famous vessel. It could be stopped along the line.

Write the Secretary of the Navy now and give your constituents a real treat. [Applause.]

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 2845. An act to extend the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act to other stolen property; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3235. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 8471. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 25, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

421. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, House of Representatives, fiscal year 1934, in the sum of $10,000 (H.Doc. No. 314), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WERNER: Committee on Indian Affairs. H.R. 5592. A bill to amend an act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555), entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims"; with amendment (Rept. No. 1308). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. PLUMLEY: Committee on Military Affairs. H.R. 2469. A bill to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison; without amendment (Rept. No. 1309). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H.R. 9252) granting a pension to Louisa J. Humphrey; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H.R. 9253) granting a pension to Ida A. Evans; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KNIFFIN: A bill (H.R. 9312) to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PARKER: A bill (H.R. 9313) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River, at or near Burtons Ferry near Sylvania, Ga.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DEROUEN: A bill (H.R. 9314) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for the designated school section lands in place, granted to the several States for the support of public schools, and for lands granted to States for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H.R. 9315) to create an Indian claims court for the immediate settlement of Indian tribal and band claims, defining the powers and functions thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHASE: Resolution (H.Res. 352) requesting the President of the United States to exercise the powers conferred upon him by the National Industrial Recovery Act to eliminate abuses of the steel code; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: Resolution (H.Res. 353) for the consideration of S. 2660, a bill to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162); to the Committee on Rules.

Also, resolution (H.Res. 354) to provide for the consideration of H.R. 9015, a bill for the relief of persons engaged in the fishing industry; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 330) authorizing certain retired officers or employees of the United States to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered by them by foreign governments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GAVAGAN: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 331) requesting the President of the United States to make known to the Government of Germany, the feelings of the people and the Congress of the United States concerning the treatment of German minorities; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TOBEY: A bill (H.R. 9316) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Gray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H.R. 9317) for the relief of Elsie Werger; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9318) for the relief of Carolyn E. Howe; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4180. By Mr. DONDERO: Resolution of the commission of the city of Royal Oak, Mich., urging the passage of legislation looking toward the payment in full of deposits in closed banks which were members of the Federal Reserve System within 1 year prior to the closing of the banks after January 1, 1930; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

4181. By Mr. LUCE: Resolution of the city council, Cambridge, Mass., approving the Costigan-Wagner, antilynching bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4182. Also, resolution of the City Council, Cambridge, Mass., endorsing McLeod bill for the relief of depositors in closed banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

4183. By Mr. PLUMLEY: Petition of the Woodsville-Wells River Board of Trade, favoring the adoption and passage of Senate bill 3231; to the Committee on Labor.

4184. Also, petition of some 50 residents and business men of Burlington, Vt., protesting the passage of the National Securities Act of 1934; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4185. Also, petition of Knights of Columbus, Michaud Council, 2025, White River Junction, Vt., and others, urging support of the amendment to section 301 of Senate bill 2910; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

4186. By Mr. RICH: Resolution from Enterprise Council, No. 136, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Muncy, Pa., favoring restricted immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

4187. SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1934

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, by whose mercy we are brought to this another day, whose dawning hath revealed anew the blessedness of home and family ties, with all their tender fellowships made holy by the love enshrined in human hearts: Give us a higher, nobler vision of our country, that by our faith and insight we may strive to mold the destiny of America into one great family, wherein each shall share the burden of a common purpose to recover the lost sense of eternal values and to live not for himself but for his brother man.

Intensify in us Thy miracle of love, that we may emerge from the shadow of darkness into the clear dawning of a new day, hallowed by the sense of blest communion and fellowship with all the nations of the earth. We ask it for the sake of Him of whom the whole family in heaven and in earth is named, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar days Monday, April 23, and Tuesday, April 24, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

HOARDERS OF SILVER (S.DOC. 173, PT. 2)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 211 (submitted by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, and agreed to Mar. 20, 1934), a list of names, commencing with I through Z, of hoarders of silver, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and the letter was read, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 25, 1934.

Col. EDWIN A. HALSEY,
Secretary United States Senate.

MY DEAR COLONEL HALSEY: I am transmitting herewith the remainder of the list of the indicated holders of spot silver and silver futures as of January 31, 1934, as to which information appears to be complete.

In the course of the inquiry, the names of certain other persons and firms have appeared as owners of spot silver and silver futures as of January 31, 1934, but in these cases the information is not complete. Since further investigation would be required to complete the information in many of these cases, I shall transmit these names to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has cooperated in making the inquiry. If further information in this matter should come to me, I shall be glad to turn it over to the same committee.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

JANUARY REPORT OF FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator covering the period from January 1 to January 31, 1934, inclusive, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table.

JUDGMENTS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims reporting that in certain cases, which were referred to the court on March 3, 1923, by resolution of the Senate, under the act of March 3, 1911 (known as the Judicial Code), the court filed orders entering judgments in the amounts and dates set forth: Congressional, No. 17627, Alton Boyd, trading as Washington Oil Co., March 5, 1934, judgment for $20,793.76; Congressional, No. 17626, Crescent Cotton Oil Co., April 2, 1934, judgment for $49,099.24, less $2,722.93 unpaid income tax due with interest at 1 percent per month from March 9, 1928, until date of payment; Congressional, No. 17346, New South Oil Mill, April 2, 1934, judgment for $4,138.10; Congressional, No. 17354, Warren Cotton Oil & Manufacturing Co., April 2, 1934, judgment for $12,248.75; Congressional, No. 17396, Marion Harper Cotton Oil Co., April 2, 1934, judgment for $34,358.24; and Congressional, No. 17628, Atlanta Cotton Oil Co., April 2, 1934, judgment for $25,929.15, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Publicity Committee of Welfare Association of the Blind, of Youngstown, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H.R. 8751) to provide employment for the blind citizens in the United States and its possessions, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 3831, United Mine Workers of America, of Rock Springs, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", being the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Emmet Evans, of Stanberry, Mo., relative to existing business and employment conditions, enclosing a paper in the nature of a petition from the Ex-Service Men's Committee, Delta, Colo., praying for the passage of House bill 1, providing payment of adjusted-service certificates (bonus), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from William Platt, chairman of the Nebraska Legislative Committee, Order of Railway Conductors, Chadron, Nebr., praying amendment of the railway labor act so as to provide 6 hours' work with 8 hours' pay therefor, and also favoring other legislation in the interest of railway employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., favoring the passage of the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting held at the Palace Ground, Honolulu, Hawaii, under the auspices of the Hawaii Labor Federation and the Filipino Labor Union, favoring acceptance by the Philippine Legislature of the so-called "Philippine Independence Act", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Anna Jarvis, founder of Mother's Day, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., stating in part, "Mother's Day Senate Resolution 218 was put through Senate secretly from Mother's Day workers here. Resolution should not pass Senate until it is sent here for approval. Please respect our wishes", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of Salt Workers Union No. 19,346, American Federation of Labor, of Lyons, and sundry citizens of Topeka, in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", being the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from Local Union No. 918, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Manhattan; Local Unions No. 40 and No. 125, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, of Wichita; Local Union No. 1587, of Hutchinson, Local Union No. 1224, of Emporia, and Local Union No. 1445, of Topeka, all of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; Bricklayers and Masons' Union, No. 18, of Kansas City, and The Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of Humboldt, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

CLAIM OF STATE OF VERMONT, WAR OF 1812

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 224), as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to audit the claim of the State of Vermont with respect to advances and expenditures made by such State for military purposes during the War of 1812–15, with Great Britain, and after applying the rules of evidence and settlement to this class of claims, provided for in resolution of May 14, 1836 (5 Stat.L. 132), and in section 12 of the act approved March 3, 1857 (11 Stat.L. 229), to submit to the Senate a report containing the results of an audit of such claim, in conformity with said rules.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over, under the rule.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR-MAIL AND OCEAN-MAIL CONTRACTS—PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 13) to authorize the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the special committee appointed to investigate air- and ocean-mail contracts, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after "contracts" down to and including "Senator", in line 8, so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on Air and Ocean Mail Contracts of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,500 additional copies of each and all parts of the testimony taken before said special committee during the Seventy-third Congress in connection with its investigation of air-mail and ocean-mail contracts.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF VEHICLES FROM EMERGENCY RECOVERY FUND

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will it be satisfactory to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to take up for consideration at this time Senate Resolution 217, concerning which I spoke to him yesterday?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, with respect to the request of the Senator from Iowa, I understood in conference with him yesterday that some modification of the resolution was to be made, including the striking out of the preamble.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think it necessary, in order to obviate an entire rewriting of the resolution, that the first paragraph of the preamble should remain. It gives merely the facts to be ascertained and identifies the correspondence. I inquire if it will be satisfactory to the Senator from Arkansas merely to strike out the second "whereas"?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is the portion of the resolution in the preamble to which I object. If that is stricken out I shall interpose no objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well. I shall ask that the second "whereas" be stricken from the resolution, and then I have an amendment to offer, in line 3, following the word "with", to insert "copies of", so it will read "copies of correspondence."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution, and then the amendment may be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 217), submitted by Mr. DICKINSON on the 4th instant, as follows:

Whereas under date of April 4, 1934, an Executive order was made overruling the decision of Comptroller General J. R. McCarl wherein the Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, was denied the right to purchase passenger-carrying vehicles out of emergency recovery funds under the National Recovery Act; and

Whereas it is of public interest to know whether the National Recovery Act supersedes other statutes controlling Federal expenditures: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and Comptroller General J. R. McCarl be requested to furnish the Senate with all correspondence, contracts, and memoranda in connection with such transaction, together with a copy of the Executive order made in connection therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DICKINSON. I now offer the amendment, in line 3, after the word "with", to insert "copies of", so as to read, "with copies of all correspondence", and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "with", it is proposed to insert "copies of", so as to read, "furnish the Senate with copies of all correspondence", and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to; and without objection, the resolution as amended is agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. I now ask unanimous consent to strike out the second "whereas" of the preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done. The question is on agreeing to the preamble as amended.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

BEEF AND BEEF PRODUCTS

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 182, submitted by me on February 12, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 182), as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Beef and beef products dutiable under the provisions of paragraphs 701 and 706 of such act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CAREY. I desire to offer some amendments. I move to amend in line 6, by striking out the words "beef and beef products" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "preserved beef."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask the Senator to let the resolution go over for the present.

Mr. CAREY. I merely want the resolution confined to canned beef rather than to general beef products.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let it go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 17, and 30, to the said bill, and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, and 16, and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 15 to the said bill.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 59 to said bill, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LENIN'S "BEST WAY"—ARTICLE BY FREDERICK H. ALLEN

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a communication to the New York Herald Tribune signed by Frederick H. Allen and entitled "Lenin's Best Way.'"

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Apr. 17, 1934]

LENIN'S "BEST WAY"

To the New York Herald Tribune:

When I was a member of the Peace Conference in Paris in 1919, some of us received information, based on reliable authority, that Lenin had declared that the best way to advance bolshevism and to destroy the capitalistic system was to debauch the currency. By the process of inflation, one step following the other, governments can confiscate a large part of the wealth of their citizens and continue this more or less quietly and without its being realized by them; and this confiscation, such as happened in Germany, impoverishes most people but at the same time enriches others.

Those who profit are the speculators, the get-rich-quick people, but the backbone of any country is the people who have saved, the owners of prime securities such as bonds, mortgages, etc.—these, the great middle classes, are wiped out if inflation goes far enough. Wealth-getting becomes a gamble. The relation of debtor and creditor, which is the foundation of capitalism, finally means nothing and, as happened in Germany, debts are wiped off with money of little or no value. Bonds of the great German companies which had been considered prime securities were paid off with worthless marks. The popular indignation aroused against the speculators in Germany will be remembered (the Scheibers).

What is happening in the United States today is very much like what happened in so many of the European countries during the war. Almost all the governments so expanded their currencies that these had greatly declined in value. One step leads to another. We have had a great expansion of credit. We have devalued the dollar to 60 percent of its former gold value. We now have the Dies silver bill, which looks to the nationalization of silver and the encouragement of the export of farm products by giving 25 percent discount under the value of silver to countries paying for these farm products in silver. Hence, a subsidy for the silver interests.

The bill is cleverly headed "A Bill to Encourage the Sale of American Agricultural Surplus Products Abroad." This is to secure the help of the farming interests for the passage of the bill; but what the farmer does not realize is that the prices of what he has to buy will probably go up much faster than the price he gets for his surplus crops. This bill has, furthermore, taken on a more inflationary aspect by the Thomas amendment in the Senate. It seeks further inflation by unlimited purchases of silver until a price of $1.29 an ounce is reached (the present price of silver is 48 to 49 cents). Purchases are directed at "the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces a month." These purchases are to continue "until the general domestic price level, as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, equals the price level of 1926, or until 371.25 grains of fine silver shall equal in purchasing power $1 in gold * * * whereupon in either instance the purchase of silver under this section shall be suspended."

Further inflationary measures now before Congress are the McLeod bill, to force the Government to pay the losses of all depositors in closed member banks of the Federal Reserve System, and the Frazier bill, providing for the Government to refinance farm-mortgage debts through an issue of $3,500,000,000 in Federal Reserve notes. Then there has been the threat to pay the adjusted-service certificates with greenbacks.

Thus we seem to be taking, or trying to take, one step after another toward debauching the currency; and Lenin's statement may prove prophetic. In Germany, inflation, by wiping out the middle classes, has resulted in Hitlerism and state capitalism, and in Italy we have state capitalism also. Labor is under the yoke in both countries and will suffer most from the proposed inflation, together with everyone else except the speculators and the silver-mine owners. The priest, Coughlin, seems to be leading the dance.

FREDERICK H. ALLEN.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND SUGAR CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COSTIGAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 47 and 48.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 11½, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 20, after the word "section", insert a comma and the following: "except quotas fixed by paragraph (B) of this subsection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 9 of the House bill, line 15, after the word "Act", insert "relating to sugar beets, sugar cane, or the products thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert "and will fix minimum wages for workers or growers employed by the producers and/or processors of sugar beets and/or sugar cane who are parties to such agreements"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 59.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] a question with reference to the conference report. If the Senator will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, in the House proceedings, at page 7470, he will see a certain amendment there set out. I should like to have his view as to the effect of the amendment which was attached to Senate amendment 59 in the conference report.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Idaho refers to the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 59?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and I want to know what is the effect of the House amendment to the Senate amendment. I have a view of it, but I do not know that I am correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The purpose of the amendment, which was urged by other Senators than myself, is apparently to prevent the addition of the processing tax to the cost of any imported sugar which has paid the effective duty of 2 cents a pound on Cuban sugar.

The Senator from Idaho will recall that the President, in his original message to Congress on the subject of sugar, stated in substance that it was not intended to increase the cost of sugar to consumers.

It is the contention of certain importers of sugar that if the processing tax is to be placed on the sugar which has already paid a duty of 2 cents a pound, the result will be to discriminate against that sugar and raise its aggregate tax cost to 2½ cents a pound, as against other imported sugar which, after the proposed tariff reduction of about one half a cent per pound, will pay a tariff duty of about 1½ cents a pound, plus a processing tax of one half cent a pound, a total of 2 cents a pound. This amendment was urged as calculated to relieve importers of sugar who had paid the tariff duty of 2 cents per pound from the further imposition of the processing tax.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the effect of this amendment is to favor certain large importers of sugar; and I think it ought to be understood before we adopt this report, first, whether that is its effect, and second, whether the conferees had power to adopt any such amendment. It was not a subject which was in conference, as I understand, at all.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has requested an opportunity to be present and ought to be present during the discussion of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This whole proceeding is by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that the conference report go over for the present, and that we proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BORAH. I have to go away for a little while. Will the Senator from Colorado defer calling up the conference report until I can return?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 506) conferring upon the President the power to reduce subsidies, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 583) relating to the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill was passed on February 28, and was reinstated on March 7.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, some Senator indicated a desire to discuss that bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] said he desired to be heard about it. I do not know of any objection to the bill. It has been pending for some time.

Mr. FESS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2500) to aid in relieving the existing national emergency through the free distribution to the needy of cotton and cotton products was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2018) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MAILING OF CERTAIN DRUGS AND MEDICINES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, with respect to the use of the mails for the shipment of certain drugs and medicines to cosmetologists and barbers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill was considered heretofore, and the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso in the first sentence of the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the transmission in the mails of poisonous drugs and medicines may be limited by the Postmaster General to shipments of such articles from the manufacturer thereof or dealer therein to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, cosmetologists, barbers, and veterinarians, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 5950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is an important bill. It is expected that it will be taken up in the early future. I do not think it can be disposed of under this order.

Mr. McNARY. At the request of several Senators, I shall ask that it go over for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING, QUEETS, WASH.

The bill (S. 236) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Queets, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Queets, Jefferson County, Wash., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 20, Jefferson County, Wash., for the construction, extension, and betterment of a public-school building at Queets, Wash.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the village of Queets and Jefferson County, Wash., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

INDIAN SCHOOL, FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1826) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont., in the construction or improvement of public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "to be", to strike out "expended from the appropriation for public work contained in the National Industrial Recovery Act" and to insert "appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $20,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 9, town of Poplar, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so authorized shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district, and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 2632) for the relief of Wilson G. Bingham was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] is interested in it, and I do not see him present this morning. I believe it would be better to let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2411) to amend the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 31) consenting that certain States may sue the United States and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own name, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2788) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (relating to State taxation of national banking associations), was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND AND ROBERT N. GOLDING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2864) for the relief of Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding the sum of $5,155.76 for legal services rendered to the Railroad Labor Board, under the direction and approval of the Department of Justice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill was passed on March 24, and was reconsidered and sent to the calendar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN FLYNN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "4,000", strike out "with interest at the rate of —— percent per annum", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Martin Flynn, deceased, of Des Moines, Iowa, the sum of $4,000, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for expenses incurred by the estate in restoring to their original condition the fifth and sixth floors of the Flynn Building, Des Moines, Iowa, which were vacated on September 30, 1929, by the United States Veterans' Bureau, at the expiration of its lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has an amendment pending, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,025."

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that was in accordance with an understanding we had.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was in accordance with the report from the Veterans' Bureau. I now have a report from the Veterans' Bureau, of which I will read the last two paragraphs:

It now appears that the cost of installation of the lavatories by the owners of the building would be $785 rather than $975, the amount of the proposal for this work submitted by Robinson Bros.
